PREFACE.

We live not alone in the present but also in the past and future. The radius that circumscribes our lives must necessarily extend backward indefinitely and forward infinitely. We can never look out thoughtfully at our immediate surroundings but a course of reasoning will start up leading us to inquire the causes that produced the development around us, and at the same time we are led to conjecture the results to follow causes now in operation. We are thus linked indissolubly with the past and the future.

"Now for my life," says Sir Thomas Browne, "it is a miracle of thirty years, which to relate were not a history, but a piece of poetry, and would sound to common ears like a fable. * * Men that look upon my outside, perusing only my condition and fortune, do err in my altitude; for I am above Atlas his shoulders. I take my circle to be above three hundred and sixty. Though the number of the arc do measure my body, it comprehendeth not my mind."

If, then, the past is not simply a stepping-stone to the future, but a part of our very selves, we can not afford to ignore it, or separate it from ourselves, as a member might be lopped off from our bodies; for though the body thus maimed might perform many and perhaps most of its functions, still it could never again be called complete.

We, therefore, present this volume to our patrons in Hennepin county, not as something extrinsic, to which we would attract their notice and secure their favor, but as a part of themselves, and an important part, which it is the province of the historian to re-invigorate and restore to its rightful owner. Moreover, we can not but hope that we shall thus confer much pleasure. The recounting of events which have transpired in our own neighborhood is the most interesting of all history. There is a fascination in the study of the intermingled fact and fiction of the past which is heightened by a familiarity with the localities described. The writer remembers the glow of enthusiasm with which he once stood at the entrance of the old fort at Ticonderoga, and repeated the words of Ethan Allen: "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress, etc." "The river which flows through our native village acquires a new interest when, in imagination, we see the Indian canoe on its surface and the skin-covered tepee on its banks, as in days of yore. Log cabins, straw roofs, and the rude "betterments" of the hardy pioneer, are the next changes on the scene, followed soon by mushroom towns, some of which perish as quickly as they spring up, while others astonish us by their rapid growth; cities are built, and moss and ivy, the evidences of age, soon accumulate. The log cabin and all the incipient steps of first settlement are things of the past; "The place which knew them shall know them no more forever."

Our purpose is to present these pictures in their natural succession, arousing the enthusiasm of the reader, if possible, giving him a more vigorous enjoyment of the present by linking it with the past. The compass of the work is wide, extending over a long period of time, embracing the accounts of early explorers, also reaching back among the legends of the past, and approaching the events of to-day, almost undesignedly casting a prophetic glance forward at what must be the future after such a beginning.

St. Anthony Falls and the environs present an exceptionally rich field for a work of this character. By situation, it was the highway of travel for Indian and white man, explorer, missionary, voyageur and trader. This was the favorite hunting ground as well as the battle-field of our savage predecessors. Here, too, they calmed their barbarous hearts, and bowed in worship of the Manitou, whose abode was at the great water-fall.

Incidents connected with the early settlement derive interest from the military reservation, and are unique in character. While reviewing these events and enterprises inaugurated for the development of the county, we come to regret that we can not claim the prestige belonging to the aristocracy of early settlers.

To give in detail all the various sources from which the facts here given have been obtained, would be tedious if not impracticable. It may be sufficient to say that it fairly presents the history of our remarkable development and a faithful picture of our present condition. We must, however, express our obligations to a host of living witnesses, from whom a large portion of the facts have been obtained and doubtful points verified; they have our hearty thanks. Material has been drawn largely from the columns of newspapers, which have given, from time to time, a record of passing events. The contribution of Rev. Edward D. Neill will be of great permanent value in imperishable print, and will be greatly prized by histographers everywhere. We have also drawn upon the accumulation of facts in the possession of the Minnesota Historical Society, for a valuable paper by its secretary, Mr. J. Fletcher Williams. The value of a reservoir of historical data at the capital of the state, for such purposes, was fully appreciated, and the maintenance of such a centre of information can not be too strongly advocated.

In conclusion, we have an obligation to express to our patrons, and are pleased to acknowledge a liberal patronage and more than ordinary courtesy toward our employees; for all of which we tender our hearty thanks. Hoping that those who have subscribed for and are about to receive this volume, will favor it with a kind reception, and take as much interest in reading as we have in compiling the history of Hennepin county, we are, very respectfully,

Yours,

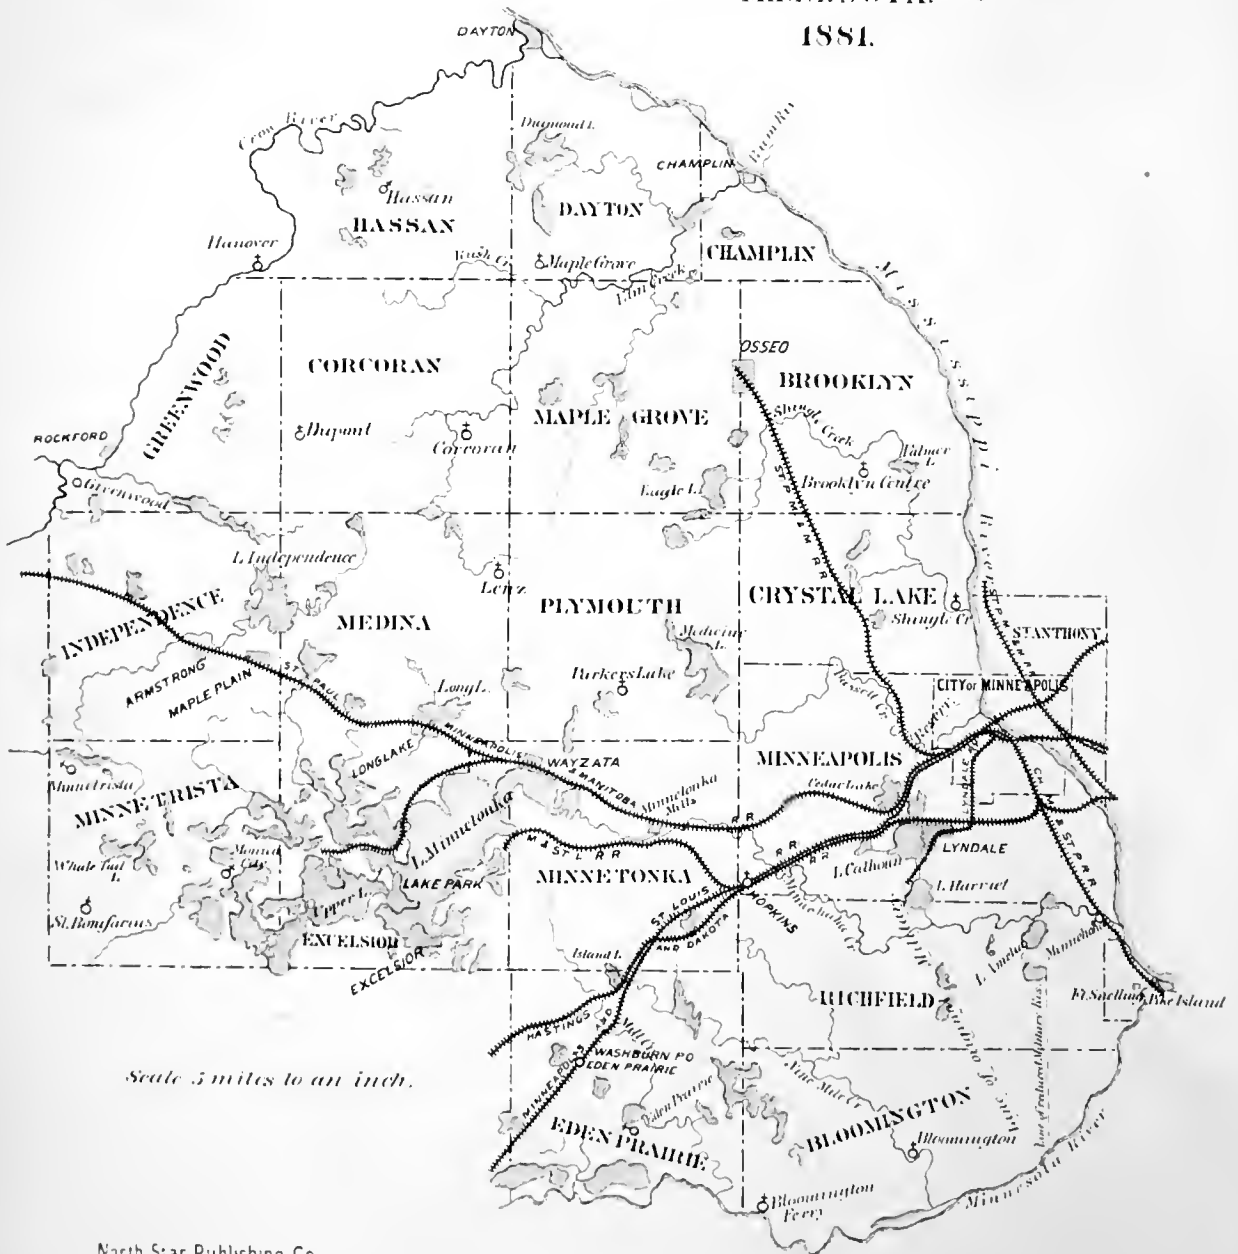

GEO. E. WARNER,
CLAS. M. FOOTE.

CHAPTER I.

FOOTPRINTS OF CIVILIZATION TOWARD THE EXTREMITY OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

Minnesota's Central Position.—D'Avagour's Prediction.—Nicolet's Visit to Green Bay.—First White Men in Minnesota.—Notices of Groselliers and Radisson.—Hurons Flee to Minnesota.—Visited by Frenchmen.—Father Menard Disappears.—Groselliers Visits Hudson's Bay.—Father Allouez Describes the Sioux Mission at La Pointe.—Father Marquette.—Sioux at Sault St. Marie.—Jesuit Missions Fail.—Groselliers Visits England.—Captain Gillam, of Boston, at Hudson's Bay.—Letter of Mother Superior of Ursulines, at Quebec.—Death of Groselliers.

The Dakotahs, called by the Ojibways, Nado-waysioux, or Sioux (Soos), as abbreviated by the French, used to claim superiority over other people, because, their sacred men asserted that the mouth of the Minnesota River was immediately over the centre of the earth, and below the centre of the heavens.

While this teaching is very different from that of the modern astronomer, it is certainly true, that the region west of Lake Superior, extending through the valley of the Minnesota, to the Missouri River, is one of the most healthful and fertile regions beneath the skies, and may prove to be the centre of the republic of the United States of America. Baron D'Avagour, a brave officer, who was killed in fighting the Turks, while he was Governor of Canada, in a dispatch to the French Government, dated August 14th, 1663, after referring to Lake Huron, wrote, that beyond "is met another, called Lake Superior, the waters of which, it is believed, flow into New Spain, and this, according to general opinion, ought to be the centre of the country."

As early as 1635, one of Champlain's interpreters, Jean Nicolet (Nicolay), who came to Canada in 1618, reached the western shores of Lake Michigan. In the summer of 1634 he ascended the St. Lawrence, with a party of Hurons, and probably during the next winter was trading at Green Bay, in Wisconsin. On the ninth of December, 1635, he had returned to Canada, and on the 7th of October, 1637, was married at Quebec, and the next month, went to Three Rivers, where he lived until 1642, when he died. Of him it is said, in a letter written in 1640, that he had penetrated farthest into those distant countries, and that if he had proceeded "three days more on a great river which flows from that lake [Green Bay] he would have found the sea."

The first white men in Minnesota, of whom we have any record, were, according to Garneau, two persons of Huguenot affinities, Medard Chouart, known as Sieur Groselliers, and Pierre d'Esprit, called Sieur Radisson.

Groselliers (pronounced Gro-zay-yay) was born near Ferte-sous-Jouarre, eleven miles east of Meaux, in France, and when about sixteen years of age, in the year 1641, came to Canada. The fur trade was the great avenue to prosperity, and in 1646, he was among the Huron Indians, who then dwelt upon the eastern shore of Lake Huron, bartering for peltries. On the second of September, 1647, at Quebec, he was married to Helen, the widow of Claude Etienne, who was the daughter of a pilot, Abraham Martin, whose baptismal name is still attached to the suburbs of that city, the "Plains of Abraham," made famous by the death there, of General Wolfe, of the English army, in 1759, and of General Montgomery, of the Continental army, in December, 1775, at the commencement of the "War for Independence." His son, Medard, was born in 1657, and the next year his mother died. The second wife of Groselliers was Marguerite Hayet (Hayay) Radisson, the sister of his associate, in the exploration of the region west of Lake Superior.

Radisson was born at St. Malo, and, while a boy, went to Paris, and from thence to Canada, and in 1656, at Three Rivers, married Elizabeth, the daughter of Madeleine Hainault, and, after her death, the daughter of Sir David Kirk or Kerk, a zealous Huguenot, became his wife.

The Iroquois of New York, about the year 1650, drove the Hurons from their villages, and forced them to take refuge with their friends the Timonates, called by the French, Petuns, because they cultivated tobacco. In time the Hurons and their allies, the Ottawas (Ottaw-waws), were again driven by the Iroquois, and after successive wanderings, were found on the west side of Lake Michigan. In time they reached the Mississippi, and ascending above the Wisconsin, they found the Iowa River, on the west side, which they followed, and dwelt for a time with the Ayees (Ioways) who were very friendly: but being accustomed to a country of lakes and forests, they were not satisfied with the vast prairies. Returning to the Mississippi, they ascended this river, in search of a better land, and were met by some of the Sioux or Dakotahs, and conducted to their villages, where they were well received. The Sioux, delighted with the axes, knives and awls of European manufacture, which had been presented to them, allowed the refugees to settle upon an island in the Mississippi, below the mouth of the St. Croix River, called Bald Island from the absence of trees, about nine miles from the site of the present city of Hastings. Possessed of firearms, the Hurons and Ottawas asserted their superiority, and determined to conquer the country for themselves, and having incurred the hostility of the Sioux, were obliged to flee from the isle in the Mississippi. Descending below Lake Pepin, they reached the Black River, and ascending it, found an unoccupied country around its sources and that of the Chippeway. In this region the Hurons established themselves, while their allies, the Ottawas, moved eastward, till they found the shores of Lake Superior, and settled at Chagouamikon (Sha-gah-wah-mik-ong) near what is now Bayfield. In the year 1659, Groselliers and Radisson arrived at Chagouamikon, and determined to visit the Hurons and Petuns, with whom the former had traded when they resided east of Lake Huron. After a six days' journey, in a southwesterly direction, they reached their retreat toward the sources of the Black, Chippewa, and Wisconsin Rivers. From this point they journeyed north, and passed the winter of 1659-60 among the "Nadouechionez," or Sioux villages in the Mille Laes (Mil Lak) region. From the Hurons they learned of a beautiful river, wide, large, deep, and comparable with the Saint Lawrence, the great Mississippi, which flows through the city of Minneapolis, and whose sources are in northern Minnesota.

Northeast of Mille Laes, toward the extremity of Lake Superior, they met the "Poualak," or Assiniboines of the prairie, a separated band of the Sioux, who, as wood was scarce and small, made fire with coal (charbon de terre) and dwelt in tents of skins: although some of the more industrious built cabins of clay (terre grasse), like the swallows build their nests.

The spring and summer of 1660, Groselliers and Radisson passed in trading around Lake Superior. On the 19th of August they returned to Montreal, with three hundred Indians and sixty canoes loaded with "a wealth of skins."

"Furs of bison and of beaver.

Furs of sable and of ermine."

The citizens were deeply stirred by the travelers' tales of the vastness and richness of the region they had visited, and their many romantic adventures. In a few days, they began their return to the far West, accompanied by six Frenchmen and two priests, one of whom was the Jesuit, Rene Menard. His hair whitened by age, and his mind ripened by long experience, he seemed the man for the mission. Two hours after midnight, of the day before departure, the venerable missionary penned at "Three Rivers," the following letter to a friend:

"REVEREND FATHER:

"The peace of Christ be with you: I write to you probably the last, which I hope will be the seal of our friendship until eternity. Love whom the Lord Jesus did not disdain to love, though the greatest of sinners; for he loves whom he loads with his cross. Let your friendship, my good Father, be useful to me by the desirable fruits of your daily sacrifice.

"In three or four months you may remember me at the memento for the dead, on account of my old age, my weak constitution and the hardships I lay under amongst these tribes. Nevertheless, I am in peace, for I have not been led to this mission by any temporal motive, but I think it was by the voice of God. I was to resist the grace of God by not coming. Eternal remorse would have tormented me, had I not come when I had the opportunity.

"We have been a little surprized, not being able to provide ourselves with vestments and other things, but he who feeds the little birds, and clothes the lilies of the fields, will take care of his servants; and though it should happen we should die of want, we would esteem ourselves happy. I am burdened with business. What I can do is to recommend our journey to your daily sacrifice, and to embrace you with the same sentiments of heart as I hope to do in eternity.

"My Reverend Father,

Your most humble and affectionate servant in Jesus Christ.

R. MENARD.

"From the Three Rivers, this 26th August, 2 o'clock after midnight, 1660."

On the 15th of October, the party with which he journeyed reached a bay on Lake Superior, where he found some of the Ottawas, who had fled from the Iroquois of New York. For more than eight months, surrounded by a few French voyageurs, he lived, to use his words, "in a kind of small hermitage, a cabin built of fir branches piled one on another, not so much to shield us from the rigor of the season as to correct my imagination, and persuade me I was sheltered."

During the summer of 1661, he resolved to visit the Hurons, who had fled eastward from the Sioux of Minnesota, and encamped amid the marshes of Northern Wisconsin. Some Frenchmen, who had been among the Hurons, in vain attempted to dissuade him from the journey. To their entreaties he replied, "I must go, if it cost me my life. I can not suffer souls to perish on the ground of saving the bodily life of a miserable old man like myself. What! Are we to serve God only when there is nothing to suffer, and no risk of life?"

Upon De l'Isle's map of Louisiana, published nearly two centuries ago, there appears the Lake of the Ottawas, and the Lake of the Old or Deserted Settlement, west of Green Bay, and south of Lake Superior. The Lake of the Old Plantation is supposed to have been the spot occupied by the Hurons at the time when Menard attempted to visit them. One way of access to this secluded spot was from Lake Superior to the headwaters of the Ontonagon River, and then by a portage, to the lake. It could also be reached from the headwaters of the Wisconsin, Black and Chippewa Rivers, and some have said that Menard descended the Wisconsin and ascended the Black River.

Perrot, who lived at the same time, writes: "Father Menard, who was sent as missionary among the Outaouas [Utau-waws] accompanied by certain Frenchmen who were going to trade with that people, was left by all who were with him, except one, who rendered to him until death, all of the services and help that he could have hoped. The Father followed the Outaouas [Utau-waws] to the Lake of the Illinoets [Illino-ay, now Michigan] and in their flight to the Louisianne, [Mississippi] to above the Black River. There this missionary had but one Frenchman for a companion. This Frenchman carefully followed the route, and made a portage at the same place as the Outaouas. He found himself in a rapid, one day, that was carrying him away in his canoe. The Father, to assist, debarked from his own, but did not find a good path to come to him. He entered one that had been made by beasts, and desiring to return, became confused in a labyrinth of trees, and was lost. The Frenchman, after having ascended the rapids with great labor, awaited the good Father, and, as he did not come, resolved to search for him. With all his might, for several days, he called his name in the woods, hoping to find him, but it was useless. He met, however, a Sakis [Sauk] who was carrying the camp-kettle of the missionary, and who gave him some intelligence. He assured him that he had found his foot-prints at some distance, but that he had not seen the Father. He told him, also, that he had found the tracks of several, who were going towards the Scioux. He declared that he supposed that the Scioux might have killed or captured him. Indeed, several years afterwards, there were found among this tribe, his breviary and cassock, which they exposed at their festivals, making offerings to them of food."

In a journal of the Jesuits, Menard, about the seventh or eighth of August, 1661, is said to have been lost.

Groselliers (Gro-zay-yay), while Menard was endeavoring to reach the retreat of the Hurons, which he had made known to the authorities of Canada, was pushing through the country of the Assineboines, on the northwest shore of Lake Superior, and at length, probably by Lake Alemnigon, or Nepigon, reached Hudson's Bay, and early in May, 1662, returned to Montreal, and surprised its citizens with his tale of new discoveries toward the Sea of the North.

The Hurons did not remain long toward the sources of the Black River, after Menard's disappearance, and deserting their plantations, joined their allies, the Ottawas, at La Pointe, now Bayfield, on Lake Superior. While here, they determined to send a war party of one hundred against the Sioux of Mille Laes (Mil Lak) region. At length they met their foes, who drove them into one of the thousand marshes of the water-shed between Lake Superior and the Mississippi, where they hid themselves among the tall grasses. The Sioux, suspecting that they might attempt to escape in the night, cut up beaver skins into strips, and hung thereon little bells, which they had obtained from the French traders. The Hurons, emerging from their watery hiding place, stumbled over the unseen cords, ringing the bells, and the Sioux instantly attacked, killing all but one.

About the year 1665, four Frenchmen visited the Sioux of Minnesota, from the west end of Lake Superior, accompanied by an Ottawa chief, and in the summer of the same year, a flotilla of canoes laden with peltries, came down to Montreal. Upon their return, on the eighth of August, the Jesuit Father, Allouez, accompanied the traders, and, by the first of October, reached Chegoimegon Bay, on or near the site of the modern town of Bayfield, on Lake Superior, where he found the refugee Hurons and Ottawas. While on an excursion to Lake Alemnigon, now Nepigon, this missionary saw, near the mouth of Saint Louis River, in Minnesota, some of the Sioux. He writes: "There is a tribe to the west of this, toward the great river called Messipi.

They are forty or fifty leagues from here, in a country of prairies, abounding in all kinds of game. They have fields, in which they do not sow Indian corn, but only tobacco. Providence has provided them with a species of marsh rice, which, toward the end of summer, they go to collect in certain small lakes, that are covered with it. They presented me with some when I was at the extremity of Lake Tracy [Superior], where I saw them. They do not use the gun, but only the bow and arrow with great dexterity. Their cabins are not covered with bark, but with deer-skins well dried, and stitched together so that the cold does not enter. These people are above all other savage and warlike. In our presence they seem abashed, and were motionless as statues. They speak a language entirely unknown to us, and the savages about here do not understand them."

The mission at La Pointe was not encouraging, and Allouez, "weary of their obstinate unbelief," departed, but Marquette succeeded him for a brief period.

The "Relations" of the Jesuits for 1670-71, allude to the Sioux or Dakotas, and their attack upon the refugees at La Pointe:

"There are certain people called Nadoussi, dreaded by their neighbors, and although they only use the bow and arrow, they use it with so much skill and dexterity, that in a moment they fill the air. After the Parthian method, they turn their heads in flight, and discharge their arrows so rapidly that they are to be feared no less in their retreat than in their attack.

"They dwell on the shores and around the great river Messipi, of which we shall speak. They number no less than fifteen populous towns, and yet they know not how to cultivate the earth by seeding it, contenting themselves with a sort of marsh rye, which we call wild oats.

"For sixty leagues from the extremity of the upper lakes, towards sunset, and, as it were, in the centre of the western nations, they have all united their force by a general league, which has been made against them, as against a common enemy.

"They speak a peculiar language, entirely distinct from that of the Algonquins and Hurons, whom they generally surpass in generosity, since they often content themselves with the glory of having obtained the victory, and release the prisoners they have taken in battle.

"Our Outouacs of the Point of the Holy Ghost [La Pointe, now Bayfield] had to the present time kept up a kind of peace with them, but affairs having become embroiled during last winter, and some murders having been committed on both sides, our savages had reason to apprehend that the storm would soon burst upon them, and judged that it was safer for them to leave the place, which in fact they did in the spring."

Marquette, on the 13th of September, 1669, writes: "The Nadouessi are the Iroquois of this country. * * * they lie northwest of the Mission of the Holy Ghost [La Pointe, the modern Bayfield] and we have not yet visited them, having confined ourselves to the conversion of the Ottawas."

Soon after this, hostilities began between the Sioux and the Hurons and Ottawas of La Pointe, and the former compelled their foes to seek another resting place, toward the eastern extremity of Lake Superior, and at length they pitched their tents at Mackinaw.

In 1674, some Sioux warriors came down to Sault Saint Marie, to make a treaty of peace with adjacent tribes. A friend of the Abbe de Gallinee wrote that a council was had at the fort to which "the Nadouessioux sent twelve deputies, and the others forty. During the conference, one of the latter, knife in hand, drew near the breast of one of the Nadouessioux, who showed surprise at the movement; when the Indian with the knife reproached him for cowardice. The Nadouessioux said he was not afraid, when the other planted the knife in his heart, and killed him. All the savages then engaged in conflict, and the Nadouessioux bravely defended themselves, but, overwhelmed by numbers, nine of them were killed. The two who survived rushed into the chapel, and closed the door. Here they found munitions of war, and fired guns at their enemies, who became anxious to burn down the chapel, but the Jesuits would not permit it, because they had their skins stored between its roof and ceiling. In this extremity, a Jesuit, Louis Le Boeme, advised that a cannon should be pointed at the door, which was discharged, and the two brave Sioux were killed."

Governor Frontenac of Canada, was indignant at the occurrence, and in a letter to Colbert, one of the Ministers of Louis the Fourteenth, speaks in condemnation of this discharge of a cannon by a Brother attached to the Jesuit Mission.

From this period, the missions of the Church of Rome, near Lake Superior, began to wane. Shea, a devout historian of that church, writes: "In 1680, Father Enjalran was apparently alone at Green Bay, and Pierson at Mackinaw; the latter mission still comprising the two villages, Huron and Kiskakon. Of the other missions, neither Le Clerq nor Hennepin, the Recollect, writers of the West at this time, makes any mention, or in any way alludes to their existence, and La Fontaine mentions the Jesuit missions only to ridicule them."

The Pigeon River, a part of the northern boundary of Minnesota, was called on the French maps Grosellier's River, after the first explorer of Minnesota, whose career, with his associate Radisson, became quite prominent in connection with the Hudson Bay region.

A disagreement occurring between Groselliers and his partners in Quebec, he proceeded to Paris, and from thence to London, where he was introduced to the nephew of Charles I., who led the cavalry charge against Fairfax and Cromwell at Naseby, afterwards commander of the English fleet. The Prince listened with pleasure to the narrative of travel, and endorsed the plans for prosecuting the fur trade and seeking a northwest passage to Asia. The scientific men of England were also full of the enterprise, in the hope that it would increase a knowledge of nature. The Secretary of the Royal Society wrote to Robert Boyle, the distinguished philosopher, a too sanguine letter. His words were: "Surely I need not tell you from hence what is said here, with great joy, of the discovery of a northwest passage; and by two Englishmen and one Frenchman represented to his Majesty at Oxford, and answered by the grant of a vessel to sail into Hudson's Bay and channel into the South Sea."

The ship Nonsuch was fitted out, in charge of Captain Zachary Gillam, a son of one of the early settlers of Boston; and in this vessel Groselliers and Radisson left the Thames, in June, 1668, and in September reached a tributary of Hudson's Bay. The next year, by way of Boston, they returned to England, and in 1670, a trading company was chartered, still known among venerable English corporations as "The Hudson's Bay Company."

The Reverend Mother of the Incarnation, Superior of the Ursulines of Quebec, in a letter of the 27th of August, 1670, writes thus :

"It was about this time that a Frenchman of our Touraine, named des Groselliers, married in this country, and as he had not been successful in making a fortune, was seized with a fancy to go to New England to better his condition. He excited a hope among the English that he had found a passage to the Sea of the North. With this expectation, he was sent as an envoy to England, where there was given to him, a vessel, with crew and every thing necessary for the voyage. With these advantages, he put to sea, and in place of the usual route, which others had taken in vain, he sailed in another direction, and searched so wide, that he found the grand Bay of the North. He found large population, and filled his ship or ships with peltries of great value. * * *

He has taken possession of this great region for the King of England, and for his personal benefit. A publication for the benefit of this French adventurer, has been made in England. He was a youth when he arrived here, and his wife and children are yet here."

Talon, Intendent of Justice in Canada, in a dispatch to Colbert, Minister of the Colonial Department of France, wrote on the 10th of November, 1670, that he has received intelligence that two English vessels are approaching Hudson's Bay, and adds : "After reflecting on all the nations that might have penetrated as far north as that, I can alight on only the English, who, under the guidance of a man named Des Grozellers, formerly an inhabitant of Canada, might possibly have attempted that navigation."

After years of service on the shores of Hudson's Bay, either with English or French trading companies, the old explorer died in Canada, and it has been said that his son went to England, where he was living in 1696, in receipt of a pension.

CHAPTER II.

EARLY MENTION OF LAKE SUPERIOR COPPER.

Sagard, A. D. 1636, on Copper Mines.—Boucher, A. D. 1640, Describes Lake Superior Copper.—Jesuit Relations, A. D. 1666-67.—Copper on Isle Royale.—Half-Breed Voyageur Goes to France with Talon.—Jolliet and Perrot Search for Copper.—St. Luson Plants the French Arms at Sault St. Marie.—Copper at Ontonagon and Head of Lake Superior.

Before white men had explored the shores of Lake Superior, Indians had brought to the trading posts of the St. Lawrence River, specimens of copper from that region. Sagard, in his History of Canada, published in 1636, at Paris, writes: "There are mines of copper which might be made profitable, if there were inhabitants and workmen who would labor faithfully. That would be done if colonies were established. About eighty or one hundred leagues from the Hurons, there is a mine of copper, from which Truchemont Brusle showed me an ingot, on his return from a voyage which he made to the neighboring nation."

Pierre Boucher, grandfather of Sieur de la Verendrye, the explorer of the lakes of the northern boundary of Minnesota, in a volume published A. D. 1640, also at Paris, writes: "In Lake Superior there is a great island, fifty or one hundred leagues in circumference, in which there is a very beautiful mine of copper. There are other places in those quarters, where there are similar mines; so I learned from four or five Frenchmen, who lately returned. They were gone three years, without finding an opportunity to return; they told me that they had seen an ingot of copper all refined which was on the coast, and weighed more than eight hundred pounds, according to their estimate. They said that the savages, on passing it, made a fire on it, after which they cut off pieces with their axes."

In the Jesuit Relations of 1666-67, there is this description of Isle Royale: "Advancing to a place called the Grand Anse, we meet with an island, three leagues from land, which is celebrated for the metal which is found there, and for the thunder which takes place there; for they say it always thunders there.

"But farther towards the west on the same north shore, is the island most famous for copper, Minong (Isle Royale). This island is twenty-five leagues in length; it is seven from the mainland, and sixty from the head of the lake. Nearly all around the island, on the water's edge, pieces of copper are found mixed with pebbles, but especially on the side which is opposite the south, and principally in a certain bay, which is near the northeast exposure to the great lake. * * *

"Advancing to the head of the lake (Fon du Lac) and returning one day's journey by the south coast, there is seen on the edge of the water, a rock of copper weighing seven or eight hundred pounds, and is so hard that steel can hardly cut it, but when it is heated it cuts as easily as lead. Near Point Chagouamigong [Sha-gah-wah-mikong, near Bayfield] where a mission was established rocks of copper and plates of the same metal were found. * * * Returning still toward the mouth of the lake, following the coast on the south as twenty leagues from the place last mentioned, we enter the river called Nantaouagan [Ontonagon] on which is a hill where stones and copper fall into the water or upon the earth. They are readily found.

"Three years since we received a piece which was brought from this place, which weighed a hundred pounds, and we sent it to Quebec to Mr. Talon. It is not certain exactly where this was broken from. We think it was from the forks of the river; others, that it was from near the lake, and dug up."

Talon, Intendant of Justice in Canada, visited France, taking a half-breed voyageur with him, and while in Paris, wrote on the 26th of February, 1669, to Colbert, the Minister of the Marine Department, "that this voyageur had penetrated among the western nations farther than any other Frenchman, and had seen the copper mine on Lake Huron. [Superior?] The man offers to go to that mine, and explore, either by sea, or by lake and river, the communication supposed to exist between Canada and the South Sea, or to the regions of Hudson's Bay."

As soon as Talon returned to Canada he commissioned Jolliet and Pere [Perrot] to search for the mines of copper on the upper Lakes. Jolliet received an outfit of four hundred livres, and four canoes, and Perrot one thousand livres. Minister Colbert wrote from Paris to Talon, in February, 1671, approving of the search for copper, in these words: "The resolution you have taken to send Sieur de La Salle toward the south, and Sieur de St. Lussou to the north, to discover the South Sea passage, is very good, but the principal thing you ought to apply yourself in discoveries of this nature, is to look for the copper mine.

"Were this mine discovered, and its utility evident, it would be an assured means to attract several Frenchmen from old, to New France."

On the 11th of June, 1671, Saint Lussou at Sault St. Marie, planted the arms of France, in the presence of Nicholas Perrot, who acted as interpreter on the occasion; the Sieur Jolliet; Pierre Moreau or Sieur de la Taupine; a soldier of the garrison of Quebec, and several other Frenchmen.

Talon, in announcing Saint Lussou's explorations to Colbert, on the 2d of November, 1671, wrote from Quebec: "The copper which I send from Lake Superior and the river Nantaouagan [Ontonagon] proves that there is a mine on the border of some stream, which produces this material as pure as one could wish. More than twenty Frenchmen have seen one lump at the lake, which they estimate weighs more than eight hundred pounds. The Jesuit Fathers among the Outaouas [On-taw-waws] use an anvil of this material, which weighs about one hundred pounds. There will be no rest until the source from whence these detached lumps come is discovered.

"The river Nantaouagan [Ontonagon] appears between two high hills, the plain above which feeds the lakes, and receives a great deal of snow, which, in melting, forms torrents which wash the borders of this river, composed of solid gravel, which is rolled down by it.

"The gravel at the bottom of this, hardens itself, and assumes different shapes, such as those pebbles which I send to Mr. Bellinzany. My opinion is that these pebbles, rounded and carried off by the rapid waters, then have a tendency to become copper, by the influence of the sun's rays which they absorb, and to form other nuggets of metal similar to those which I send to Sieur de Bellinzany, found by the Sieur de Saint Lussou, about four hundred leagues, at some distance from the mouth of the river.

"He hoped by the frequent journeys of the savages, and French who are beginning to travel by these routes, to discern the source of production."

Governor Denonville, of Canada, sixteen years after the above circumstances, wrote: "The copper, a sample of which I sent M. Arnou, is found at the head of Lake Superior. The body of the mine has not yet been discovered. I have seen one of our voyageurs who assures me that, some fifteen months ago he saw a lump of two hundred weight, as yellow as gold, in a river which falls into Lake Superior. When heated, it could be cut with an axe; but the superstitious Indians, regarding this boulder as a good spirit, would never permit him to take any of it away. His opinion is that the frost undermined this piece, and that the mine is in that river. He has promised to search for it on his way back."

In the year 1730, there was some correspondence with the authorities in France relative to the discovery of copper at La Pointe, but, practically, little was done by the French, in developing the mineral wealth of Lake Superior.

In the year 1678, several prominent merchants of Quebec and Montreal, with the support of Governor Frontenac of Canada, formed a company to open trade with the Sioux of Minnesota, and a nephew of Patron, one of these merchants, a brother-in-law of Sieur de Lusigny, an officer of the Governor's Guards, named Daniel Greyson Du Luth [Doo-loo], a native of St. Germain en Laye, a few miles from Paris, although Lahontan speaks of him as from Lyons, was made the leader of the expedition. At the battle of Seneffe against the Prince of Orange, he was a gendarme, and one of the King's guards.

Du Luth was also a cousin of Henry Tonty, who had been in the revolution at Naples, to throw off the Spanish dependence. Du Luth's name is variously spelled in the documents of his day. Hennepin writes, "Du Luth;" others, "Dulhut," "Du Lhu," "Du Lut," "De Luth," "Du Lud."

The temptation to procure valuable furs from the Lake Superior region, contrary to the letter of the Canadian law, was very great; and more than one Governor winked at the contraband trade. Randin, who visited the extremity of Lake Superior, distributed presents to the Sioux and Ottawas in the name of Governor Frontenac, to secure the trade, and after his death, Du Luth was sent to complete what he had begun. With a party of twenty, seventeen Frenchmen and three Indians, he left Quebec on the first of September, 1678, and on the fifth of April, 1679, Du Luth writes to Governor Frontenac, that he is in the woods, about nine miles from Sault St. Marie, at the entrance of Lake Superior, and adds that: he "will not stir from the Nadoussiou, until further orders, and, peace being concluded, he will set up the King's Arms: lest the English and other Europeans settled towards California, take possession of the country."

On the second of July, 1679, he caused his Majesty's Arms to be planted in the great village of the Nadoussiou, called Kathio, where no Frenchman had ever been, and at Songaskicons and Houetbatons, one hundred and twenty leagues distant from the former, where he also set up the King's Arms. In a letter to Seignalay, published for the first time by Harris, he writes that it was in the village of Izatys [Issati]. Upon Franquelin's map, the Mississippi branches into the Tintonia [Teeton Sioux] country, and not far from here, he alleges, was seen a tree upon which was this legend: "Arms of the King cut on this tree in the year 1679."

He established a post at Kamanistigoya, which was distant fifteen leagues from the Grand Portage at the western extremity of Lake Superior; and here, on the fifteenth of September, he held a council with the Assenipoulaks [Assineboines] and other tribes, and urged them to be at peace with the Sioux. During this summer, he dispatched Pierre Moreau, a celebrated voyageur, nicknamed La Taupine, with letters to Governor Frontenac, and valuable furs to the merchants. His arrival at Quebec, created some excitement. It was charged that the Governor corresponded with Du Luth, and that he passed the beaver, sent by him, in the name of merchants in his interest. The Intendant of Justice, Du Chesneau, wrote to the Minister of the Colonial Department of France, that "the man named La Taupine, a famous coureur des bois, who set out in the month of September of last year, 1678, to go to the Outawaes, with goods, and who has always been interested with the Governor, having returned this year, and I, being advised that he had traded in two days, one hundred and fifty beaver robes in one village of this tribe, amounting to nearly nine hundred beavers, which is a matter of public notoriety; and that he left with Du Luth two men whom he had with him, considered myself bound to have him arrested, and to interrogate him: but having presented me with a license from the Governor, permitting him and his comrades, named Lamonde and Dupuy, to repair to the Outawae, to execute his secret orders, I had him set at liberty: and immediately on his going out, Sieur Prevost, Town Mayor of Quebec, came at the head of some soldiers to force the prison, in case he was still there, pursuant to his orders from the Governor, in these terms: "Sieur Prevost, Mayor of Quebec, is ordered, in case the Intendant arrest Pierre Moreau alias La Tampine, whom we have sent to Quebec as bearer of our dispatches, upon pretext of his having been in the bush, to set him forthwith at liberty, and to employ every means for this purpose, at his peril. Done at Montreal, the 5th September, 1679."

La Tampine, in due time returned to Lake Superior with another consignment of merchandise. The interpreter of Du Luth, and trader with the Sioux, was Fallart, who had been a soldier under La Salle at Fort Frontenac, and had deserted.

La Salle was commissioned in 1678, by the King of France, to explore the West, and trade in cibola, or buffalo skins, and on condition that he did not traffic with the Ottawaws, who carried their beaver to Montreal.

On the 27th of August, 1679, he arrived at Mackinaw, in the "Griffin," the first sailing vessel on the great Lakes of the West, and from thence went to Green Bay, where, in the face of his commission, he traded for beaver. Loading his vessel with peltries, he sent it back to Niagara, while he, in canoes, proceeded with his expedition to the Illinois River. The ship was never heard of, and for a time supposed to be lost, but La Salle afterward learned from a Pawnee boy fourteen or fifteen years of age, who was brought prisoner to his fort on the Illinois by some Indians, that the pilot of the "Griffin" had been among the tribes of the Upper Missouri. He had ascended the Mississippi with four others in two birch canoes with goods and some hand grenades, taken from the ship, with the intention of joining Du Luth, who had for months been trading with the Sioux: and if their efforts were unsuccessful, they expected to push on to the English, at Hudson's Bay. While ascending the Mississippi they were attacked by Indians, and the pilot and one other only survived, and they were sold to the Indians on the Missouri.

In the month of June, 1680, Du Luth, accompanied by Fallart, an interpreter, with four Frenchmen, also a Chippeway and a Sioux, with two canoes, entered a river, the mouth of which is eight leagues from the head of Lake Superior on the South side, named Nemitsakomat. Reaching its head waters, by a short portage, of half a league, he reached a lake which was the source of the Saint Croix River, and by this, he and his companions were the first Europeans to journey in a canoe from Lake Superior to the Mississippi.

La Salle writes, that Du Luth, finding that the Sioux were on a hunt in the Mississippi valley, below the Saint Croix, and that Accault, Augelle and Hennepin, who had come up from the Illinois a few weeks before, were with them, descended until he found them. In the same letter he disregards the truth in order to disparage his rival, and writes:

"Thirty-eight or forty leagues above the Chippeway they found the river by which the Sieur Du Luth did descend to the Mississippi. He had been three years, contrary to orders, with a company of twenty "coureurs du bois" on Lake Superior; he had borne himself bravely, proclaiming everywhere that at the head of his brave fellows he did not fear the Grand Prevost, and that he would compel an amnesty.

"While he was at Lake Superior, the Nadonesioux, enticed by the presents that the late Sieur Randin had made on the part of Count Frontenac, and the Sauteurs [Ojibways], who are the savages who carry the peltries to Montreal, and who dwell on Lake Superior, wishing to obey the repeated orders of the Count, made a peace to unite the Sauteurs and French, and to trade with the Nadonesioux, situated about sixty leagues to the west of Lake Superior. Du Luth, to disguise his desertion, seized the opportunity to make some reputation for himself, sending two messengers to the Count to negotiate a truce, during which period their comrades negotiated still better for beaver.

Several conferences were held with the Nadonessieux, and as he needed an interpreter, he led off one of mine, named Faffart, formerly a soldier at Fort Frontenac. During this period there were frequent visits between the Sauteurs [Ojibways] and Nadouesieux, and supposing that it might increase the number of beaver skins, he sent Faffart by land, with the Nadouesieux and Sauteurs [Ojibways]. The young man on his return, having given an account of the quantity of beaver in that region, he wished to proceed thither himself, and, guided by a Sauteur and a Nadouesieux, and four Frenchmen, he ascended the river Nemitsakonat, where, by a short portage, he descended that stream, whereon he passed through forty leagues of rapids [Upper St. Croix River], and finding that the Nadouesieux were below with my men and the Father, who had come down again from the village of the Nadouesieux, he discovered them. They went up again to the village, and from thence they all together came down. They returned by the river Ouisconsin, and came back to Montreal, where Du Luth insults the commissaries, and the deputy of the 'procureur general,' named d'Anteuil. Count Frontenac had him arrested and imprisoned in the castle of Quebec, with the intention of returning him to France for the amnesty accorded to the coureurs des bois, did not release him."

At this very period, another party charges Frontenac as being Du Luth's particular friend.

Du Luth, during the fall of 1681, was engaged in the beaver trade at Montreal and Quebec. Du Chesneau, the Intendant of Justice for Canada, on the 13th of November, 1681, wrote to the Marquis de Siegnelay, in Paris: "Not content with the profits to be derived from the countries under the King's dominion, the desire of making money everywhere, has led the Governor [Frontenac], Boisseau, Du Lut and Patron, his uncle, to send canoes loaded with peltries, to the English. It is said sixty thousand livres' worth has been sent thither;" and he further stated that there was a very general report that within five or six days, Frontenac and his associates had divided the money received from the beavers sent to New England.

At a conference in Quebec of some of the distinguished men in that city, relative to difficulties with the Iroquois, held on the 10th of October, 1682, Du Luth was present. From thence he went to France, and, early in 1683, consulted with the Minister of Marine at Versailles relative to the interests of trade in the Hudson's Bay and Lake Superior region. Upon his return to Canada, he departed for Mackinaw. Governor De la Barre, on the 9th of November, 1683, wrote to the French Government that the Indians west and north of Lake Superior, "when they heard by expresses sent them by Du Lhut, of his arrival at Missilimakinak, that he was coming, sent him word to come quickly and they would unite with him to prevent others going thither. If I stop that pass as I hope, and as it is necessary to do, as the English of the Bay [Hudson's] excite against us the savages, whom Sieur Du Lhut alone can quiet."

While stationed at Mackinaw he was a participant in a tragic occurrence. During the summer of 1683 Jacques le Maire and Colin Berthot, while on their way to trade at Keweenaw, on Lake Superior, were surprised by three Indians, robbed, and murdered. Du Luth was prompt to arrest and punish the assassins. In a letter from Mackinaw, dated April 12, 1684, to the Governor of Canada, he writes: "Be pleased to know, Sir, that on the 24th of October last, I was told that Folle Avoine, accomplice in the murder and robbery of the two Frenchmen, had arrived at Sault Ste. Marie with fifteen families of the Sauteurs [Ojibways] who had fled from Chagoamigon [La Pointe] on account of an attack which they, together with the people of the land, made last Spring upon the Nadouesieux [Dakotahs.]

"He believed himself safe at the Sault, on account of the number of allies and relatives he had there. Rev. Father Albanel informed me that the French at the Sault, being only twelve in number, had not arrested him, believing themselves too weak to contend with such numbers, especially as the Sauteurs had declared that they would not allow the French to redden the land of their fathers with the blood of their brothers.

"On receiving this information, I immediately resolved to take with me six Frenchmen, and embark at the dawn of the next day for Sault Ste. Marie, and if possible obtain possession of the murderer. I made known my design to the Rev. Father Engalran, and, at my request, as he had some business to arrange with Rev. Father Albanel, he placed himself in my canoe.

"Having arrived within a league of the village of the Sault, the Rev. Father, the Chevalier de Fourcille, Cardonniere, and I disembarked. I caused the canoe, in which were Bariband, Le Mere, La Fortune, and Macons, to proceed, while we went across the wood to the house of the Rev. Father, fearing that the savages, seeing me, might suspect the object of my visit, and cause Folle Avoine to escape. Finally, to cut the matter short, I arrested him, and caused him to be guarded day and night by six Frenchmen.

"I then called a council, at which I requested all the savages of the place to be present, where I repeated what I had often said to the Hurons and Ottawas since the departure of M. Pere [Perrot], giving them the message you ordered me, Sir, that in case there should be among them any spirits so evil disposed as to follow the example of those who have murdered the French on Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, they must separate the guilty from the innocent, as I did not wish the whole nation to suffer, unless they protected the guilty. * * * The savages held several councils, to which I was invited, but their only object seemed to be to exculpate the prisoner, in order that I might release him.

"All united in accusing Achiganaga and his children, assuring themselves with the belief that M. Pere, [Perrot] with his detachment would not be able to arrest them, and wishing to persuade me that they apprehended that all the Frenchmen might be killed.

"I answered them, * * * As to the anticipated death of M. Pere [Perrot], as well as of the other Frenchmen, that would not embarrass me, since I believed neither the allies nor the nation of Achiganaga would wish to have a war with us to sustain an action so dark as that of which we were speaking. Having only to attack a few murderers, or, at most, those of their own family, I was certain that the French would have them dead or alive."

"This was the answer they had from me during the three days that the councils lasted; after which I embarked, at ten o'clock in the morning, sustained by only twelve Frenchmen, to show a few unruly persons who boasted of taking the prisoner away from me, that the French did not fear them.

"Daily I received accounts of the number of savages that Achiganaga drew from his nation to Kiaonan [Keweenaw] under pretext of going to war in the spring against the Nadouecioux, to avenge the death of one of his relatives, son of Ouenans, but really to protect himself against us, in case we should become convinced that his children had killed the Frenchmen. This precaution placed me between hope and fear respecting the expedition which M. Pere [Perrot] had undertaken.

"On the 24th of November, [1683], he came across the wood at ten o'clock at night, to tell me that he had arrested Achiganaga and four of his children. He said they were not all guilty of the murder, but had thought proper, in this affair, to follow the custom of the savages, which is to seize all the relatives. Folle Avoine, whom I had arrested, he considered the most guilty, being without doubt the originator of the mischief.

"I immediately gave orders that Folle Avoine should be more closely confined, and not allowed to speak to any one; for I had also learned that he had a brother, sister, and uncle in the village of the Kiskakous.

"M. Pere informed me that he had released the youngest son of Achiganaga, aged about thirteen or fourteen years, that he might make known to their nation and the Sauteurs [Ojibways], who are at Nocke and in the neighborhood, the reason why the French had arrested his father and brothers. M. Pere bade him assure the savages that if any one wished to complain of what he had done, he would wait for them with a firm step; for he considered himself in a condition to set them at defiance, having found at Kiaonan [Keweenaw] eighteen Frenchmen who had wintered there.

"On the 25th, at daybreak, M. Pere embarked at the Sault, with four good men whom I gave him, to go and meet the prisoners. He left them four leagues from there, under a guard of twelve Frenchmen; and at two o'clock in the afternoon, they arrived. I had prepared a room in my house for the prisoners, in which they were placed under a strong guard, and were not allowed to converse with any one.

"On the 26th, I commenced proceedings; and this, Sir, is the course I pursued. I gave notice to all the chiefs and others, to appear at the council which I had appointed, and gave to Folle Avoine the privilege of selecting two of his relatives to support his interests; and to the other prisoners I made the same offer.

"The council being assembled, I sent for Folle Avoine to be interrogated, and caused his answers to be written, and afterwards they were read to him, and inquiry made whether they were not, word for word, what he had said. He was then removed under a safe guard. I used the same form with the two eldest sons of Achiganaga, and, as Folle Avoine had indirectly charged the father with being accessory to the murder, I sent for him and also for Folle Avoine, and bringing them into the council, confronted the four.

"Folle Avoine and the two sons of Achiganaga accused each other of committing the murder, without denying that they were participators in the crime. Achiganaga alone strongly maintained that he knew nothing of the design of Folle Avoine, nor of his children, and called on them to say if he had advised them to kill the Frenchmen. They answered, 'No.'

"This confrontation, which the savages did not expect, surprised them; and, seeing the prisoners had convicted themselves of the murder, the Chiefs said: 'It is enough; you accuse yourselves; the French are masters of your bodies.'

"The next day I held another council, in which I said there could be no doubt that the Frenchmen had been murdered, that the murderers were known, and that they knew what was the practice among themselves upon such occasions. To all this they said nothing, which obliged us on the following day to hold another council in the cabin of Brochet, where, after having spoken, and seeing that they would make no decision, and that all my councils ended only in reducing tobacco to ashes, I told them that, since they did not wish to decide, I should take the responsibility, and that the next day I would let them know the determination of the French and myself.

"It is proper, Sir, you should know that I observed all these forms only to see if they would feel it their duty to render to us the same justice that they do to each other, having had divers examples in which when the tribes of those who had committed the murder did not wish to go to war with the tribe aggrieved, the nearest relations of the murderers killed them themselves; that is to say, man for man.

"On the 29th of November, I gathered together the French that were here, and, after the interrogations and answers of the accused had been read to them, the guilt of the three appeared so evident, from their own confessions, that the vote was unanimous that all should die. But as the French who remained at Kiaonan to pass the winter had written to Father Engalran and to myself, to beg us to treat the affair with all possible leniency, the savages declaring that if they made the prisoners die they would avenge themselves, I told the gentlemen who were with me in council that, this being a case without a precedent, I believed it was expedient for the safety of the French who would pass the winter in the Lake Superior country to put to death only two, as that of the third might bring about grievous consequences, while the putting to death, man for man, could give the savages no complaint, since this is their custom. M. de la Tour, chief of the Fathers, who had served much, sustained my opinions by strong reasoning, and all decided that two should be shot, namely, Folle Avoine and the older of the two brothers, while the younger should be released, and hold his life, Sir, as a gift from you.

"I then returned to the cabin of Brochet with Messrs. Boissuillot, Pere, De Repentigny, De Manthet, De la Ferte, and Macons, where were all the chiefs of the Outawas du Sable, Outawas Sinagos, Kiskakons, Santeurs, D'Achiliny, a part of the Hurons, and Oumamens, the chief of the Amikoyes. I informed them of our decision * * * that, the Frenchmen having been killed by the different nations, one of each must die, and that the same death they had caused the French to suffer they must also suffer. * * * This decision to put the murderers to death was a hard stroke to them all, for none had believed that I would dare to undertake it. * * * I then left the council and asked the Rev. Fathers if they wished to baptize the prisoners, which they did.

"An hour after, I put myself at the head of forty-two Frenchmen, and, in sight of more than four hundred savages, and within two hundred paces of their fort, I caused the two murderers to be shot. The impossibility of keeping them until spring made me hasten their death. * * * When M. Pere made the arrest, those who had committed the murder confessed it; and when he asked them what they had done with our goods, they answered that they were almost all concealed. He proceeded to the place of concealment, and was very much surprised, as were also the French with him, to find them, in fifteen or twenty different places. By the carelessness of the savages, the tobacco and powder were entirely destroyed, having been placed in the pinery, under the roots of trees, and being soaked in the water caused by ten or twelve days' continuous rain, which inundated all the lower country. The season for snow and ice having come, they had all the trouble in the world to get out the bales of cloth.

"They then went to see the bodies, but could not remove them, these miserable wretches having thrown them into a marsh, and thrust them down into holes which they had made. Not satisfied with this, they had also piled branches of trees upon the bodies, to prevent them from floating when the water should rise in the spring, hoping by this precaution the French would find no trace of those who were killed, but would think them drowned; as they reported that they had found in the lake on the other side of the Portage, a boat with the sides all broken in, which they believed to be a French boat.

"Those goods which the French were able to secure, they took to Kiaonan [Keweenaw], where were a number of Frenchmen who had gone there to pass the winter, who knew nothing of the death of Colin Berthot and Jacques le Maire, until M. Pere arrived.

"The ten who formed M. Pere's detachment having conferred together concerning the means they should take to prevent a total loss, decided to sell the goods to the highest bidder. The sale was made for 1100 livres, which was to be paid in beavers, to M. de la Chesnaye, to whom I send the names of the purchasers.

"The savages who were present when Achiganaga and his children were arrested wished to pass the cabinet to M. Pere, and give him captives to satisfy him for the murder committed on the two Frenchmen; but he knew their intention, and would not accept their offer. He told them neither a hundred captives nor a hundred packs of beaver would give back the blood of his brothers; that the murderers must be given up to me, and I would see what I would do.

"I caused M. Pere to repeat these things in the council, that in future the savages need not think by presents to save those who commit similar deeds. Besides, sir, M. Pere showed plainly by his conduct, that he is not strongly inclined to favor the savages, as was reported. Indeed, I do not know any one whom they fear more, yet who flatters them less or knows them better.

"The criminals being in two different places, M. Pere being obliged to keep four of them, sent Messrs. de Repentigny, Manthet, and six other Frenchmen, to arrest the two who were eight leagues in the woods. Among others, M. de Repentigny and M. de Manthet showed that they feared nothing when their honor called them.

"M. de la Chevrotiere has also served well in person, and by his advice, having pointed out where the prisoners were. Achiganaga, who had adopted him as a son, had told him where he should hunt during the winter. * * * * *

It still remained for me to give to Achiganaga and his three children the means to return to his family. Their home from which they were taken was nearly twenty-six leagues from here. Knowing their necessity, I told them you would not be satisfied in giving them life; you wished to preserve it, by giving them all that was necessary to prevent them from dying with hunger and cold by the way, and that your gift was made by my hands. I gave them blankets, tobacco, meat, hatchets, knives, twine to make nets for beavers, and two bags of corn, to supply them till they could kill game.

"They departed two days after, the most contented creatures in the world, but God was not; for when only two days' journey from here, the old Achiganaga fell sick of the quinsy, and died, and his children returned. When the news of his death arrived, the greater part of the savages of this place [Mackinaw] attributed it to the French, saying we had caused him to die. I let them talk, and laughed at them. It is only about two months since the children of Achiganaga returned to Kiaonan."

Some of those opposed to Du Luth and Frontenac, prejudiced the King of France relative to the transaction we have described, and in a letter to the Governor of Canada, the King writes: "It appears to me that one of the principal causes of the war arises from one Du Luth having caused two to be killed who had assassinated two Frenchmen on Lake Superior; and you sufficiently see now much this man's voyage, which can not produce any advantage to the colony, and which was permitted only in the interest of some private persons, has contributed to distract the peace of the colony."

Du Luth and his young brother appear to have traded at the western extremity of Lake Superior, and on the north shore, to Lake Nipigon.

In June, 1684, Governor De la Barre sent Guillet and Hebert from Montreal to request Du Luth and Durantaye to bring down voyageurs and Indians to assist in an expedition against the Iroquois of New York. Early in September, they reported on the St. Lawrence, with one hundred and fifty coureurs des bois and three hundred and fifty Indians; but as a treaty had just been made with the Senecas, they returned.

De la Barre's successor, Governor Denonville, in a dispatch to the French Government, dated November 12th, 1685, alludes to Du Luth being in the far West, in these words: "I likewise sent to M. De la Durantaye, who is at Lake Superior under orders from M. De la Barre, and to Sieur Du Luth, who is also at a great distance in another direction, and all so far beyond reach that neither the one nor the other can hear news from me this year: so that, not being able to see them at soonest, before next July, I considered it best not to think of undertaking any thing during the whole of next year, especially as a great number of our best men are among the Outaouacs, and can not return before the ensuing summer. * * * In regard to Sieur Du Luth, I sent him orders to repair here, so that I may learn the number of savages on whom I may depend. He is accredited among them, and rendered great services to M. De la Barre by a large number of savages he brought to Niagara, who would have attacked the Senecas, was it not for an express order from M. De la Barre to the contrary."

In 1686, while at Mackinaw, he was ordered to establish a post on the Detroit, near Lake Erie. A portion of the order reads as follows: "After having given all the orders that you may judge necessary for the safety of this post, and having well secured the obedience of the Indians, you will return to Michilimackinac, there to await Rev. Father Engelran, by whom I will communicate what I wish of you, there."

The design of this post was to block the passage of the English to the upper lakes. Before it was established, in the fall of 1686, Thomas Roseboom, a daring trader from Albany, on the Hudson, had found his way to the vicinity of Mackinaw, and by the proffer of brandy, weakened the allegiance of the tribes to the French.

A canoe coming to Mackinaw with dispatches for the French and their allies, to march to the Seneca country, in New York, perceived this New York trader and associates, and, giving the alarm, they were met by three hundred coureurs du bois and captured.

In the spring of 1687 Du Luth, Durantaye, and Tonty all left the vicinity of Detroit for Niagara, and as they were coasting along Lake Erie they met another English trader, a Scotchman by birth, and by name Major Patrick McGregor, a person of some influence, going with a number of traders to Mackinaw. Having taken him prisoner, he was sent with Roseboom to Montreal.

Du Luth, Tonty, and Durantaye arrived at Niagara on the 27th of June, 1687, with one hundred and seventy French voyageurs, besides Indians, and on the 10th of July joined the army of Denonville at the mouth of the Genesee River, and on the 13th Du Luth and his associates had a skirmish near a Seneca village, now the site of the town of Victor, twenty miles southeast of the city of Rochester, New York. Governor Denonville, in a report, writes: "On the 13th, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, having passed through two dangerous defiles, we arrived at the third, where we were vigorously attacked by eight hundred Senecas, two hundred of whom fired, wishing to attack our rear, while the rest would attack our front, but the resistance, made produced such a great consternation that they soon resolved to fly. * * * We witnessed the painful sight of the usual cruelties of the savages, who cut the dead into quarters, as is done in slaughter houses, in order to put them into the kettle. The greater number were opened while still warm, that the blood might be drunk. Our rascally Otaoas distinguished themselves particularly by these barbarities. * * * We had five or six men killed on the spot, French and Indians, and about twenty wounded, among the first of whom was the Rev. Father Angelran, superior of all the Otaoan Missions, by a very severe gun-shot. It is a great misfortune that this wound will prevent him going back again, for he is a man of capacity."

In the order to Du Luth assigning him to duty at the post on the site of the modern Fort Gratiot, above the city of Detroit, the Governor of Canada said: "If you can so arrange your affairs that your brother can be near you in the Spring, I shall be very glad. He is an intelligent lad, and might be a great assistance to you; he might also be very serviceable to us."

This lad, Greysolon de la Tourette, during the winter of 1686-7 was trading among the Assinaboines and other tribes at the west end of Lake Superior, but, upon receiving a dispatch, hastened to his brother, journeying in a canoe without any escort from Mackinaw. He did not arrive until after the battle with the Senecas. Governor Denonville, on the 25th of August, 1687, wrote:

"Du Luth's brother, who has recently arrived from the rivers above the Lake of the Allempignons [Nipigon], assures me that he saw more than fifteen hundred persons come to trade with him, and they were very sorry he had not goods sufficient to satisfy them. They are of the tribes accustomed to resort to the English at Port Nelson and River Bourbon, where, they say, they did not go this year, through Sieur Du Luth's influence."

After the battle in the vicinity of Rochester, New York, Du Luth, with his celebrated cousin, Henry Tonty, returned together as far as the post above the present city of Detroit, Michigan, but this point, after 1688, was not again occupied.

From this period Du Luth becomes less prominent. At the time when the Jesuits attempted to exclude brandy from the Indian country a bitter controversy arose between them and the traders. Cadillac, a Gascon by birth, commanding Fort Buade, at Mackinaw, on August 3, 1695, wrote to Count Frontenac: "Now, what reason can we assign that the savages should not drink brandy bought with their own money as well as we? Is it prohibited to prevent them from becoming intoxicated? Or is it because the use of brandy reduces them to extreme misery, placing it out of their power to make war by depriving them of clothing and arms? If such representations in regard to the Indians have been made to the Count, they are very false, as every one knows who is acquainted with the ways of the savages.

* * * It is bad faith to represent to the Count that the sale of brandy reduces the savage to a state of nudity, and by that means places it out of his power to make war, since he never goes to war in any other condition. * * * Perhaps it will be said that the sale of brandy makes the labors of the missionaries unfruitful. It is necessary to examine this proposition. If the missionaries care for only the extension of commerce, pursuing the course they have hitherto, I agree to it; but if it is the use of brandy that hinders the advancement of the cause of God, I deny it, for it is a fact which no one can deny that there are a great number of savages who never drink brandy, yet who are not, for that, better Christians.

"All the Sioux, the most numerous of all the tribes, who inhabit the region along the shore of Lake Superior, do not even like the smell of brandy. Are they more advanced in religion for that? They do not wish to have the subject mentioned, and when the missionaries address them they only laugh at the foolishness of preaching. Yet these priests boldly fling before the eyes of Europeans, whole volumes filled with glowing descriptions of the conversion of souls by thousands in this country, causing the poor missionaries from Europe, to run to martyrdom as flies to sugar and honey."

Du Luth, or Du Lhut, as he wrote his name, during this discussion, was found upon the side of order and good morals. His attestation is as follows: "I certify that at different periods I have lived about ten years among the Ottawa nation, from the time that I made an exploration to the Nadouecioux people until Fort Saint Joseph was established by order of the Monsieur Marquis Denonville, Governor General, at the head of the Detroit of Lake Erie, which is in the Iroquois country, and which I had the honor to command. During this period, I have seen that the trade in eau-de-vie (brandy) produced great disorder, the father killing the son, and the son throwing his mother into the fire; and I maintain that, morally speaking, it is impossible to export brandy to the woods and distant missions, without danger of its leading to misery."

Governor Frontenac, in an expedition against the Oneidas of New York, arrived at Fort Frontenac, on the 19th of July, 1695, and Captain Du Luth was left in command with forty soldiers, and masons and carpenters, with orders to erect new buildings. In about four weeks he erected a building one hundred and twenty feet in length, containing officers' quarters, store-rooms, a bakery and a chapel. Early in 1697 he was still in command of the post, and in a report it is mentioned that "everybody was then in good health, except Captain Dullhut the commander, who was unwell of the gout."

It was just before this period, that as a member of the Roman Catholic Church, he was firmly impressed that he had been helped by prayers which he addressed to a deceased Iroquois girl, who had died in the odor of sanctity, and, as a thank offering, signed the following certificate: "I, the subscriber, certify to all whom it may concern, that having been tormented by the gout, for the space of twenty-three years, and with such severe pains, that it gave me no rest for the space of three months at a time, I addressed myself to Catherine Tegahkouita, an Iroquois virgin deceased at the Sault Saint Louis, in the reputation of sanctity, and I promised her to visit her tomb, if God should give me health, through her intercession. I have been as perfectly cured at the end of one novena, which I made in her honor, that after five months, I have not perceived the slightest touch of my gout. Given at Fort Frontenac, this 18th day of August, 1696."

As soon as cold weather returned, his old malady again appeared. He died early in A. D. 1710. Marquis de Vaudreuil, Governor of Canada, under date of first of May of that year, wrote to Count Pontchartrain, Colonial Minister at Paris, "Captain Du Lud died this winter. He was a very honest man."

In the summer of 1680, Michael Accault (Ako), Hennepin, the Franciscan missionary, Angelle, Du Luth, and Fallart all visited the Falls of Saint Anthony.

The first description of the valley of the upper Mississippi was written by La Salle, at Fort Frontenac, on Lake Ontario, on the 22d of August, 1682, a month before Hennepin, in Paris, obtained a license to print, and some time before the Franciscan's first work, was issued from the press.

La Salle's knowledge must have been received from Michael Accault, the leader of the expedition, Angelle, his comrade, or the clerical attache, the Franciscan, Hennepin.

It differs from Hennepin's narrative in its freedom from bombast, and if its statements are to be credited, the Franciscan must be looked on as one given to exaggeration. The careful student, however, soon learns to be cautious in receiving the statement of any of the early explorers and ecclesiastics of the Northwest. The Franciscan depreciated the Jesuit missionary, and La Salle did not hesitate to misrepresent Du Luth and others for his own exaltation. La Salle makes statements which we deem to be wide of the truth when his prejudices are aroused.

At the very time that the Intendant of Justice in Canada is complaining that Governor Frontenac is a friend and correspondent of Du Luth, La Salle writes to his friends in Paris, that Du Luth is looked upon as an outlaw by the governor.

While official documents prove that Du Luth was in Minnesota a year before Accault and associates, yet La Salle writes: "Moreover, the Nadouesieux is not a region which he has discovered. It is known that it was discovered a long time before, and that the Rev. Father Hennepin and Michael Accault were there before him."

La Salle in this communication describes Accault as one well acquainted with the language and names of the Indians of the Illinois region, and also "cool, brave, and prudent," and the head of the party of exploration.

We now proceed with the first description of the country above the Wisconsin, to which is given, for the first and only time, by any writer, the Sioux name, Meschetz Odeba, perhaps intended for Meshdeke Wakpa, River of the Foxes.

He describes the Upper Mississippi in these words: "Following the windings of the Mississippi, they found the river Ouisconsin, Wisconsin, or Meschetz Odeba, which flows between Bay of Puans and the Grand river. * * * About twenty-three or twenty-four leagues to the north or northwest of the mouth of the Ouisconsin. * * * they found the Black river, called by the Nadouesieux, Chabadeba [Chapa Wakpa, Beaver river] not very large, the mouth of which is bordered on the two shores by ablers.

"Ascending about thirty leagues, almost at the same point of the compass, is the Buffalo river [Chippewa], as large at its mouth as that of the Illinois. They follow it ten or twelve leagues, where it is deep, small and without rapids, bordered by hills which widen out from time to time to form prairies."

About three o'clock in the afternoon of the 11th of April, 1680, the travelers were met by a war party of one hundred Sioux in thirty-three birch bark canoes. "Michael Accault, who was the leader," says La Salle, "presented the Calumet." The Indians were presented by Accault with twenty knives and a fathom and a half of tobacco and some goods. Proceeding with the Indians ten days, on the 22d of April the isles in the Mississippi were reached, where the Sioux had killed some Maskoutens, and they halted to weep over the death of two of their own number; and to assuage their grief, Accault gave them in trade a box of goods and twenty-four hatchets.

When they were eight leagues below the Falls of Saint Anthony, they resolved to go by land to their village, sixty leagues distant. They were well received; the only strife among the villages was that which resulted from the desire to have a Frenchman in their midst. La Salle also states that it was not correct to give the impression that Du Luth had rescued his men from captivity, for they could not be properly called prisoners.

He continues: "In going up the Mississippi again, twenty leagues above that river [Saint Croix] is found the falls, which those I sent, and who passing there first, named Saint Anthony. It is thirty or forty feet high, and the river is narrower here than elsewhere. There is a small island in the midst of the chute, and the two banks of the river are not bordered by high hills, which gradually diminish at this point, but the country on each side is covered with thin woods, such as oaks and other hard woods, scattered wide apart.

"The canoes were carried three or four hundred steps, and eight leagues above was found the west [east?] bank of the river of the Nadouessioux, ending in a lake named Issati, which expands into a great marsh, where the wild rice grows toward the mouth."

In the latter part of his letter La Salle uses the following language relative to his old chaplain:

"I believed that it was appropriate to make for you the narrative of the adventures of this canoe, because I doubt not that they will speak of it, and if you wish to confer with the Father Louis Hennepin, Recollect, who has returned to France, you must know him a little, because he will not fail to exaggerate all things; it is his character, and to me he has written as if he were about to be burned when he was not even in danger, but he believes that it is honorable to act in this manner, and he speaks more conformably to that which he wishes than to that which he knows."

Hennepin was born in Ath, an inland town of the Netherlands. From boyhood he longed to visit foreign lands, and it is not to be wondered at that he assumed the priest's garb, for next to the soldier's life, it suited one of wandering propensities.

At one time he is on a begging expedition to some of the towns on the sea coast. In a few months he occupies the post of chaplain at an hospital, where he shrives the dying and administers extreme unction. From the quiet of the hospital he proceeds to the camp, and is present at the battle of Seneffe, which occurred in the year 1674.

His whole mind, from the time that he became a priest, appears to have been on "things seen and temporal," rather than on those that are "unseen and eternal." While on duty at some of the ports of the Straits of Dover, he exhibited the characteristic of an ancient Athenian more than that of a professed successor of the Apostles. He sought out the society of strangers "who spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing." With perfect nonchalance he confesses that notwithstanding the nauseating fumes of tobacco, he used to slip behind the doors of sailors' taverns, and spend days, without regard to the loss of his meals, listening to the adventures and hair-breadth escapes of the mariners in lands beyond the sea.

In the year 1676, he received a welcome order from his Superior, requiring him to embark for Canada. Unaccustomed to the world, and arbitrary in his disposition, he rendered the cabin of the ship in which he sailed any thing but heavenly. As in modern days, the passengers in a vessel to the new world were composed of heterogeneous materials. There were young women going out in search for brothers or husbands, ecclesiastics, and those engaged in the then new, but profitable, commerce in furs. One of his fellow passengers was the talented and enterprising, though unfortunate, La Salle, with whom he was afterwards associated. If he is to be credited, his intercourse with La Salle was not very pleasant on ship-board. The young women, tired of being cooped up in the narrow accommodations of the ship, when the evening was fair sought the deck, and engaged in the rude dances of the French peasantry of that age. Hennepin, feeling that it was improper, began to assume the air of the priest, and forbade the sport. La Salle, feeling that his interference was uncalled for, called him a pedant, and took the side of the girls, and during the voyage there were stormy discussions.

Good humor appears to have been restored when they left the ship, for Hennepin would otherwise have not been the companion of La Salle in his great western journey.

Sojourning for a short period at Quebec, the adventure-loving Franciscan is permitted to go to a mission station on or near the site of the present town of Kingston, Canada West.

Here there was much to gratify his love of novelty, and he passed considerable time in rambling among the Iroquois of New York. In 1678 he returned to Quebec, and was ordered to join the expedition of Robert La Salle.

On the 6th of December Father Hennepin and a portion of the exploring party had entered the Niagara river. In the vicinity of the Falls, the winter was passed, and while the artisans were preparing a ship above the Falls, to navigate the great lakes, the Recollect whiled away the hours, in studying the manners and customs of the Seneca Indians, and in admiring the sublimest handiwork of God on the globe.

On the 7th of August, 1679, the ship being completely rigged, unfurled its sails to the breezes of Lake Erie. The vessel was named the "Griffin," in honor of the arms of Frontenac, Governor of Canada, the first ship of European construction that had ever ploughed the waters of the great inland seas of North America.

After encountering a violent and dangerous storm on one of the lakes, during which they had given up all hope of escaping shipwreck, on the 27th of the month, they were safely moored in the harbor of "Missilimackinack." From thence the party proceeded to Green Bay, where they left the ship, procured canoes, and continued along the coast of Lake Michigan. By the middle of January, 1680, La Salle had conducted his expedition to the Illinois River, and, on an eminence near Lake Peoria, he commenced, with much heaviness of heart, the erection of a fort, which he called Crevecoeur, on account of the many disappointments he had experienced.

On the last of February, Accault, Augelle, and Hennepin left to ascend the Mississippi.

The first work bearing the name of the Reverend Father Louis Hennepin, Franciscan Missionary of the Recollect order, was entitled, "Description de la Louisiane," and in 1683 published in Paris.

As soon as the book appeared it was criticised. Abbe Bernou, on the 29th of February, 1684, writes from Rome about the "paltry book" (meschant livre) of Father Hennepin. About a year before the pious Tronson, under date of March 13, 1683, wrote to a friend: "I have interviewed the P. Recollect, who pretends to have descended the Mississippi river to the Gulf of Mexico. I do not know that one will believe what he speaks any more than that which is in the printed relation of P. Louis, which I send you that you may make your own reflections."

On the map accompanying his first book, he boldly marks a Recollect Mission many miles north of the point he had visited. In the Utrecht edition of 1697 this deliberate fraud is erased.

Throughout the work he assumes, that he was the leader of the expedition, and magnifies trifles into tragedies. For instance, Mr. La Salle writes that Michael Accault, also written Ako, who was the leader, presented the Sioux with the calumet; but Hennepin makes the occurrence more formidable.

He writes: "Our prayers were heard, when on the 11th of April, 1680, about two o'clock in the afternoon, we suddenly perceived thirty-three bark canoes manned by a hundred and twenty Indians coming down with very great speed, on a war party, against the Miamis, Illinois and Marons. These Indians surrounded us, and while at a distance, discharged some arrows at us, but as they approached our canoe, the old men seeing us with the calumet of peace in our hands, prevented the young men from killing us. These savages leaping from their canoes, some on land, others into the water, with frightful cries and yells approached us, and as we made no resistance, being only three against so great a number, one of them wrenched our calumet from our hands, while our canoe and theirs were tied to the shore. We first presented to them a piece of French tobacco, better for smoking than theirs and the eldest among them uttered the words? "Miamiha, Miamiha."

"As we did not understand their language, we took a little stick, and by signs which we made on the sand, showed them that their enemies, the Miamis, whom they sought, had fled across the river Colbert [Mississippi] to join the Illinois; when they saw themselves discovered and unable to surprise their enemies, three or four old men laying their hands on my head, wept in a mournful tone.

"With a spare handkerchief I had left I wiped away their tears, but they would not smoke our Calumet. They made us cross the river with great cries, while all shouted with tears in their eyes; they made us row before them, and we heard yells capable of striking the most resolute with terror. After landing our canoe and goods, part of which had already been taken, we made a fire to boil our kettle, and we gave them two large wild turkeys which we had killed. These Indians having called an assembly to deliberate what they were to do with us, the two-head chiefs of the party approaching, showed us by signs that the warriors wished to tomahawk us. This compelled me to go to the war chiefs with one young man, leaving the other by our property, and throw into their midst six axes, fifteen knives and six fathom of our black tobacco; and then bringing down my head, I showed them with an axe that they might kill me, if they thought proper. This present appeased many individual members, who gave us some beaver to eat, putting the three first morsels into our mouths, according to the custom of the country, and blowing on the meat, which was too hot, before putting the bark dish before us to let us eat as we liked. We spent the night in anxiety, because, before retiring at night, they had returned us our peace calumet.

"Our two boatmen were resolved to sell their lives dearly, and to resist if attacked; their arms and swords were ready. As for my own part, I determined to allow myself to be killed without any resistance; as I was going to announce to them a God who had been foully accused, unjustly condemned, and cruelly crucified, without showing the least aversion to those who put him to death. We watched in turn, in our anxiety, so as not to be surprised asleep. The next morning, a chief named Narrhetoba asked for the peace calumet, filled it with willow bark, and all smoked. It was then signified that the white men were to return with them to their villages."

In his narrative the Franciscan remarks, "I found it difficult to say my office before these Indians. Many seeing me move my lips, said in a fierce tone, 'Ouakanche.' Michael, all out of countenance, told me, that if I continued to say my breviary, we should all three be killed, and the Picard begged me at least to pray apart, so as not to provoke them. I followed the latter's advice, but the more I concealed myself the more I had the Indians at my heels; for when I entered the wood, they thought I was going to hide some goods under ground, so that I knew not on what side to turn to pray, for they never let me out of sight. This obliged me to beg pardon of my canoe-men, assuring them I could not dispense with saying my office. By the word, 'Ouakanche,' the Indians meant that the book I was reading was a spirit, but by their gesture they nevertheless showed a kind of aversion, so that to accustom them to it, I chanted the litany of the Blessed Virgin in the canoe, with my book opened. They thought that the breviary was a spirit which taught me to sing for their diversion; for these people are naturally fond of singing."

This is the first mention of a Dahkotch word in a European book. The savages were annoyed rather than enraged, at seeing the white man reading a book, and exclaimed, "Wakan-de!" this is wonderful or supernatural. The war party was composed of several bands of the M'dewakantonwan Dahkotch, and there was a diversity of opinion in relation to the disposition that should be made of the white men. The relatives of those who had been killed by the Miamis, were in favor of taking their scalps, but others were anxious to retain the favor of the French, and open a trading intercourse.

Perceiving one of the canoe-men shoot a wild turkey, they called the gun, "Manza Ouackange," iron that has understanding; more correctly, "Maza Wakande," this is the supernatural metal.

Aquipaguetin, one of the head men, resorted to the following device to obtain merchandise. Says the Father, "This wily savage had the bones of some distinguished relative, which he preserved with great care in some skins dressed and adorned with several rows of black and red porcupine quills. From time to time he assembled his men to give it a smoke, and made us come several days to cover the bones with goods, and by a present wipe away the tears he had shed for him, and for his own son killed by the Miamis. To appease this captious man, we threw on the bones several fathoms of tobacco, axes, knives, beads, and some black and white wampum bracelets. * * * We slept at the point of the Lake of Tears [Lake Pepin], which we so called from the tears which this chief shed all night long, or by one of his sons whom he caused to weep when he grew tired."

The next day, after four or five leagues' sail, a chief came, and telling them to leave their canoes, he pulled up three piles of grass for seats. Then taking a piece of cedar full of little holes, he placed a stick into one, which he revolved between the palms of his hands, until he kindled a fire, and informed the Frenchmen that they would be at Mille Lac in six days. On the nineteenth day after their captivity, they arrived in the vicinity of Saint Paul, not far, it is probable, from the marshy ground on which the Kaposia band once lived, and now called Pig's Eye.

The journal remarks, "Having arrived on the nineteenth day of our navigation, five leagues below St. Anthony's Falls, these Indians landed us in a bay, broke our canoe to pieces, and secreted their own in the reeds."

They then followed the trail to Mille Lac, sixty leagues distant. As they approached their villages, the various bands began to show their spoils. The tobacco was highly prized, and led to some contention. The chalice of the Father, which glistened in the sun, they were afraid to touch, supposing it was "wakan." After five days' walk they reached the Issati [Dakotah] settlements in the valley of the Rum or Knife river. The different bands each conducted a Frenchman to their village, the chief Aquipaguetin taking charge of Hennepin. After marching through the marshes towards the sources of Rum river, five wives of the chief, in three bark canoes, met them and took them a short league to an island where their cabins were.

An aged Indian kindly rubbed down the way-worn Franciscan; placing him on a bear-skin near the fire, he anointed his legs and the soles of his feet with wildcat oil.

The son of the chief took great pleasure in carrying upon his bare back the priest's robe with dead men's bones enveloped. It was called Pere Lonis Chinnen. In the Dakotah language Shinna or Shinnan signifies a buffalo robe.

Hennepin's description of his life on the island is in these words:

"The day after our arrival, Aquipaguetin, who was the head of a large family, covered me with a robe made of ten large dressed beaver skins, trimmed with porcupine quills. This Indian showed me five or six of his wives, telling them, as I afterwards learned, that they should in future regard me as one of their children.

"He set before me a bark dish full of fish, and seeing that I could not rise from the ground, he had a small sweating-cabin made, in which he made me enter with four Indians. This cabin he covered with buffalo skins, and inside he put stones red-hot. He made me a sign to do as the others before beginning to sweat, but I merely concealed my nakedness with a handkerchief. As soon as these Indians had several times breathed out quite violently, he began to sing vociferously, the others putting their hands on me and rubbing me while they wept bitterly. I began to faint, but I came out and could scarcely take my habit to put on. When he made me sweat thus three times a week, I felt as strong as ever."

The mariner's compass was a constant source of wonder and amazement. Aquipaguetin having assembled the braves, would ask Hennepin to show his compass. Perceiving that the needle turned, the chief harangued his men, and told them that the Europeans were spirits, capable of doing any thing.

In the Franciscan's possession was an iron pot with feet like lions', which the Indians would not touch unless their hands were wrapped in buffalo skins. The women looked upon it as "wakan," and would not enter the cabin where it was.

"The chiefs of these savages, seeing that I was desirous to learn, frequently made me write, naming all the parts of the human body; and as I would not put on paper certain indelicate words, at which they do not blush, they were heartily amused."

They often asked the Franciscan questions, to answer which it was necessary to refer to his lexicon. This appeared very strange, and, as they had no word for paper, they said, "That white thing must be a spirit which tells Pere Louis all we say."

Hennepin remarks: "These Indians often asked me how many wives and children I had, and how old I was, that is, how many winters; for so these natives always count. Never illumined by the light of faith, they were surprised at my answer. Pointing to our two Frenchmen, whom I was then visiting, at a point three leagues from our village, I told them that a man among us could only have one wife; that as for me, I had promised the Master of life to live as they saw me, and to come and live with them to teach them to be like the French.

"But that gross people, till then lawless and faithless, turned all I said into ridicule. 'How,' said they, 'would you have these two men with thee have wives? Ours would not live with them, for they have hair all over their face, and we have none there or elsewhere.' In fact, they were never better pleased with me than when I was shaved, and from a complaisance, certainly not criminal, I shaved every week.

"As often as I went to visit the cabins, I found a sick child, whose father's name was Mamenisi. Michael Ako would not accompany me; the Picard du Gay alone followed me to act as sponsor, or, rather, to witness the baptism.

"I christened the child Antoinette, in honor of St. Anthony of Padua, as well as for the Picard's name, which was Anthony Anguelle. He was a native of Amiens, and nephew of the Procurator-General of the Premonstratensians both now at Paris. Having poured natural water on the head and uttered these words: 'Creature of God, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' I took half an altar cloth which I had wrested from the hands of an Indian who had stolen it from me, and put it on the body of the baptized child; for as I could not say mass for want of wine and vestments, this piece of linen could not be put to better use than to enshroud the first Christian child among these tribes. I do not know whether the softness of the linen had refreshed her, but she was the next day smiling in her mother's arms, who believed that I had cured the child; but she died soon after, to my great consolation.

"During my stay among them, there arrived four savages, who said they were come alone five hundred leagues from the west, and had been four months upon the way. They assured us there was no such place as the Straits of Anian, and that they had traveled without resting, except to sleep, and had not seen or passed over any great lake, by which phrase they always mean the sea.

"They further informed us that the nation of the Assenipoulaes [Assiniboines] who lie northeast of Issati, was not above six or seven days' journey; that none of the nations, within their knowledge, who lie to the east or northwest, had any great lake about their countries, which were very large, but only rivers, which came from the north. They further assured us that there were very few forests in the countries through which they passed, inasmuch that now and then they were forced to make fires of buffaloes' dung to boil their food. All these circumstances make it appear that there is no such place as the Straits of Anian, as we usually see them set down on the maps. And whatever efforts have been made for many years past by the English and Dutch, to find out a passage to the Frozen Sea, they have not yet been able to effect it. But by the help of my discovery and the assistance of God, I doubt not but a passage may still be found, and that an easy one too.

"For example, we may be transported into the Pacific Sea by rivers which are large and capable of carrying great vessels, and from thence it is very easy to go to China and Japan, without crossing the equinoctial line; and, in all probability, Japan is on the same continent as America."

Hennepin in his first book, thus describes his first visit to the Falls of St. Anthony: "In the beginning of July, 1680, we descended the [Rum] River in a canoe southward, with the great chief Onasicoude [Wauzeekootay] that is to say Pierced Pine, with about eighty cabins composed of more than a hundred and thirty families and about two hundred and fifty warriors. Scarcely would the Indians give me a place in their little flotilla, for they had only old canoes. They went four leagues lower down, to get birch bark to make some more. Having made a hole in the ground, to hide our silver chalice and our papers, till our return from the hunt, and keeping only our breviary, so as not to be loaded, I stood on the bank of the lake formed by the river we had called St. Francis [now Rum] and stretched out my hand to the canoes as they rapidly passed in succession.

"Our Frenchmen also had one for themselves, which the Indians had given them. They would not take me in, Michael Ako saying that he had taken me long enough to satisfy him. I was hurt at this answer, seeing myself thus abandoned by Christians, to whom I had always done good, as they both often acknowledged; but God never having abandoned me on that painful voyage, inspired two Indians to take me in their little canoe, where I had no other employment than to bale out with a little bark tray, the water which entered by little holes. This I did not do without getting all wet. This boat might, indeed, be called a death box, for its lightness and fragility. These canoes do not generally weigh over fifty pounds, the least motion of the body upsets them, unless you are long accustomed to that kind of navigation.

"On disembarking in the evening, the Picard, as an excuse, told me that their canoe was half-rotten, and that had we been three in it, we should have run a great risk of remaining on the way. * * * Four days after our departure for the buffalo hunt, we halted eight leagues above St. Anthony of Padua's Falls, on an eminence opposite the mouth of the River St. Francis [Rum] * * * The Picard and myself went to look for haws, gooseberries, and little wild fruit, which often did us more harm than good. This obliged us to go alone, as Michael Ako refused, in a wretched canoe, to Onisconsin river, which was more than a hundred leagues off, to see whether the Sieur de la Salle had sent to that place a reinforcement of men, with powder, lead, and other munitions, as he had promised us.

"The Indians would not have suffered this voyage had not one of the three remained with them. They wished me to stay, but Michael Ako absolutely refused. As we were making the portage of our canoe at St. Anthony of Padua's Falls, we perceived five or six of our Indians who had taken the start; one of them was up in an oak opposite the great fall, weeping bitterly, with a rich dressed heaver robe, whitened inside, and trimmed with porcupine quills, which he was offering as a sacrifice to the falls; which is, in itself, admirable and frightful. I heard him while shedding copious tears, say as he spoke to the great cataract, 'Thou who art a spirit, grant that our nation may pass here quietly, without accident; may kill buffalo in abundance; conquer our enemies, and bring in slaves, some of whom we will put to death before thee. The Messenecqz (so they call the tribe named by the French Outagamis) have killed our kindred; grant that we may avenge them.' This robe offered in sacrifice, served one of our Frenchmen, who took it as we returned."

It is certainly wonderful, that Hennepin, who knew nothing of the Sioux language a few weeks before, should understand the prayer offered at the Falls without the aid of an interpreter.

The narrator continues: "A league beyond St. Anthony of Padua's Falls, the Picard was obliged to land and get his powder horn, which he had left at the Falls. * * * As we descended the river Colbert [Mississippi] we found some of our Indians on the islands loaded with buffalo meat, some of which they gave us. Two hours after landing, fifteen or sixteen warriors whom we had left above St. Anthony of Padua's Falls, entered, tomakawk in hand, upset the cabin of those who had invited us, took all the meat and bear oil they found, and greased themselves from head to foot."

This was done because the others had violated the rules for the buffalo hunt. With the Indians Hennepin went down the river sixty leagues, and then went up the river again, and met buffalo. He continues:

"While seeking the Onisconsin River, that savage father, Aquipaguetin, whom I had left, and who I believed more than two hundred leagues off, on the 11th of July, 1680, appeared with the warriors." After this, Hennepin and Picard continued to go up the river almost eighty leagues.

There is great confusion here, as the reader will see. When at the mouth of the Rum River, he speaks of the Wisconsin as more than a hundred leagues off. He floats down the river sixty leagues; then he ascended, but does not state the distance; then he ascends eighty leagues.

He continues: "The Indians whom he had left with Michael Ako at Buffalo [Chippeway] River, with the flotilla of canoes loaded with meat, came down. * * * All the Indian women had their stock of meat at the mouth of Buffalo River and on the islands, and again we went down the Colbert [Mississippi] about eighty leagues. * * * We had another alarm in our camp: the old men on duty on the top of the mountains announced that they saw two warriors in the distance; all the bowmen hastened there with speed, each trying to outstrip the others; but they brought back only two of their enemies, who came to tell them that a party of their people were hunting at the extremity of Lake Conde [Superior] and had found four Spirits (so they call the French) who, by means of a slave, had expressed a wish to come on, knowing us to be among them. * * * On the 25th of July, 1680, as we were ascending the river Colbert, after the buffalo hunt, to the Indian villages, we met Sieur du Luth, who came to the Nadouessious with five French soldiers. They joined us about two hundred and twenty leagues distant from the country of the Indians who had taken us. As we had some knowledge of the language, they begged us to accompany them to the villages of these tribes, to which I readily agreed, knowing that these two Frenchmen had not approached the sacrament for two years."

Here again the number of leagues is confusing, and it is impossible to believe that Du Luth and his interpreter Faffart, who had been trading with the *Siou*x for more than a year, needed the help of Hennepin, who had been about three months with these people.

We are not told by what route Hennepin and Du Luth reached Lake Issati or Mille Lacs, but Hennepin says they arrived there on the 11th of August, 1680, and he adds, "Toward the end of September, having no implements to begin an establishment, we resolved to tell these people, that for their benefit, we would have to return to the French settlements. The grand Chief of the Issati or Nadouessioux consented, and traced in pencil on paper I gave him, the route I should take for four hundred leagues. With this chart, we set out, eight Frenchmen, in two canoes, and descended the river St. Francis and Colbert [Rum and Mississippi]. Two of our men took two beaver robes at St. Anthony of Padua's Falls, which the Indians had hung in sacrifice on the trees."

The second work of Hennepin, an enlargement of the first, appeared at Utrecht in the year 1697, ten years after La Salle's death. During the interval between the publication of the first and second book, he had passed three years as Superintendent of the Recollets at Reny in the province of Artois, when Father Hyacinth Lefevre, a friend of La Salle, and Commissary Provincial of Recollets at Paris, wished him to return to Canada. He refused, and was ordered to go to Rome, and upon his coming back was sent to a convent at St. Omer, and there received a dispatch from the Minister of State in France to return to the countries of the King of Spain, of which he was a subject. This order, he asserts, he afterwards learned was forged.

In the preface to the English edition of the New Discovery, published in 1698, in London, he writes:

"The pretended reason of that violent order was because I refused to return into America, where I had been already eleven years; though the particular laws of our Order oblige none of us to go beyond sea against his will. I would have, however, returned very willingly had I not known the malice of M. La Salle, who would have exposed me to perish, as he did one of the men who accompanied me in my discovery. God knows that I am sorry for his unfortunate death; but the judgments of the Almighty are always just, for the gentleman was killed by one of his own men, who were at last sensible that he exposed them to visible dangers without any necessity and for his private designs."

After this he was for about five years at Gosselies, in Brabant, as Confessor in a convent, and from thence removed to his native place, Ath, in Belgium, where, according to his narrative in the preface to the "Nouveau Deconverté," he was again persecuted. Then Father Payez, Grand Commissary of Recollets at Louvain, being informed that the King of Spain and the Elector of Bavaria recommended the step, consented that he should enter the service of William the Third of Great Britain, who had been very kind to the Roman Catholics of Netherlands. By order of Payez he was sent to Antwerp to take the lay habit in the convent there, and subsequently went to Utrecht, where he finished his second book known as the New Discovery.

His first volume, printed in 1683, contains 312 pages, with an appendix of 107 pages, on the Customs of the Savages, while the Utrecht book of 1697 contains 509 pages without an appendix.

On page 249 of the New Discovery, he begins an account of a voyage alleged to have been made to the mouth of the Mississippi, and occupies over sixty pages in the narrative. The opening sentences give as a reason for concealing to this time his discovery, that La Salle would have reported him to his Superiors for presuming to go down instead of ascending the stream toward the north, as had been agreed: and that the two with him threatened that if he did not consent to descend the river, they would leave him on shore during the night, and pursue their own course.

He asserts that he left the Gulf of Mexico, to return, on the 1st of April, and on the 24th left the Arkansas; but a week after this, he declares he landed with the Sioux at the marsh about two miles below the city of Saint Paul.

The account has been and is still a puzzle to the historical student. In our review of his first book we have noticed that as early as 1683, he claimed to have descended the Mississippi. In the Utrecht publication he declares that while at Quebec, upon his return to France, he gave to Father Valentine Roux, Commissary of Recollects, his journal, upon the promise that it would be kept secret, and that this Father made a copy of his whole voyage, including the visit to the Gulf of Mexico; but in his Description of Louisiana, Hennepin wrote, "We had some design of going to the mouth of the river Colbert, which more probably empties into the Gulf of Mexico than into the Red Sea, but the tribes that seized us gave us no time to sail up and down the river."

The additions in his Utrecht book to magnify his importance and detract from others, are many. As Sparks and Parkman have pointed out the plagiarisms of this edition, a reference here is unnecessary.

Du Luth, who left Quebec in 1678, and had been in northern Minnesota, with an interpreter, for a year, after he met Ako and Hennepin, becomes of secondary importance, in the eyes of the Franciscan.

In the Description of Louisiana, on page 289, Hennepin speaks of passing the Falls of Saint Anthony, upon his return to Canada, in these few words: "Two of our men seized two beaver robes at the Falls of St. Anthony of Padua, which the Indians had in sacrifice, fastened to trees." But in the Utrecht edition, commencing on page 416, there is much added concerning Du Luth. After using the language of the edition of 1683, already quoted it adds: "Hereupon there arose a dispute between Sieur du Luth and myself. I commended what they had done, saying, 'The savages might judge by it that they disliked the superstition of these people.' The Sieur du Luth, on the contrary, said that they ought to have left the robes where the savages placed them, for they would not fail to avenge the insult we had put upon them by this action, and that it was feared that they would attack us on this journey. I confessed he had some foundation for what he said, and that he spoke according to the rules of prudence. But one of the two men flatly replied, the two robes suited them, and they cared nothing for the savages and their superstitions. The Sieur du Luth at these words was so greatly enraged that he nearly struck the one who uttered them, but I intervened and settled the dispute. The Picard and Michael Ako ranged themselves on the side of those who had taken the robes in question, which might have resulted badly.

"I argued with Sieur du Luth that the savages would not attack us, because I was persuaded that their great chief Ouasicoode would have our interests at heart, and he had great credit with his nation. The matter terminated pleasantly.

"When we arrived near the river Ouisconsin, we halted to smoke the meat of the buffalo we had killed on the journey. During our stay, three savages of the nation we had left, came by the side of our canoe to tell us that their great chief Ouasicoode, having learned that another chief of these people wished to pursue and kill us, and that he entered the cabin where he was consulting, and had struck him on the head with such violence as to scatter his brains upon his associates; thus preventing the executing of this injurious project.

"We regaled the three savages, having a great abundance of food at that time. The Sieur du Luth, after the savages had left, was as enraged as before, and feared that they would pursue and attack us on our voyage. He would have pushed the matter further, but seeing that one man would resist, and was not in the humor to be imposed upon, he moderated, and I appeased them in the end with the assurance that God would not abandon us in distress, and, provided we confided in Him, he would deliver us from our foes, because He is the protector of men and angels."

After describing a conference with the Sioux, he adds, "Thus the savages were very kind, without mentioning the beaver robes. The chief Onasicoude told me to offer a fathom of Martinnico tobacco to the chief Aquipaguetin, who had adopted me as a son. This had an admirable effect upon the barbarians, who went off shouting several times the word 'Louis,' [Ouis or We] which, as he said, means the sun. Without vanity, I must say that my name will be for a long time among these people.

"The savages having left us, to go to war against the Messorites, the Maroha, the Illinois, and other nations which live toward the lower part of the Mississippi, and are irreconcilable foes of the people of the North, the Sieur du Luth, who upon many occasions gave me marks of his friendship, could not forbear to tell our men that I had all the reason in the world to believe that the Viceroy of Canada would give me a favorable reception, should we arrive before winter, and that he wished with all his heart that he had been among as many natives as myself."

The style of Louis Hennepin is unmistakable in this extract, and it is amusing to read his patronage of one of the fearless explorers of the Northwest, a cousin of Tonty, favored by Frontenac, and who was in Minnesota a year before his arrival.

In 1691, six years before the Utrecht edition of Hennepin, another Recollect Franciscan had published a book at Paris, called "The First Establishment of the Faith in New France," in which is the following tribute to Du Luth, whom Hennepin strives to make a subordinate: "In the last years of M. de Frontenac's administration, Sieur Du Luth, a man of talent and experience, opened a way to the missionary and the Gospel in many different nations, turning toward the north of that lake [Superior] where he even built a fort, he advanced as far as the Lake of the Issati, called Lake Buade, from the family name of M.

In the second volume of his last book, which is called "A Continuance of the New Discovery of a vast Country in America," etc., Hennepin noticed some criticisms.

To the objection that his work was dedicated to William the Third of Great Britain, he replies: "My King, his most Catholic Majesty, his Electoral Highness of Bavaria, the consent in writing of the Superior of my order, the integrity of my faith, and the regular observance of my vows, which his Britannic Majesty allows me, are the best warrants of the uprightness of my intentions."

To the query, how he could travel so far upon the Mississippi in so little time, he answers with a bold face, "That we may, with a canoe and a pair of oars, go twenty, twenty-five, or thirty leagues every day, and more too, if there be occasion. And though we had gone but ten leagues a day, yet in thirty days we might easily have gone three hundred leagues. If during the time we spent from the river of the Illinois to the mouth of the Meschasipi, in the Gulf of Mexico, we had used a little more haste, we might have gone the same twice over."

To the objection, that he said, he had passed eleven years in America, when he had been there but about four, he evasively replies, that "reckoning from the year 1674, when I first set out, to the year 1688, when I printed the second edition of my 'Louisiana,' it appears that I have spent fifteen years either in travels or printing my Discoveries."

To those who objected to the statement in his first book, in the dedication to Louis the Fourteenth, that the Sioux always call the sun Louis, he writes: "I repeat what I have said before, that being among the Issati and Nadouessans, by whom I was made a slave in America, I never heard them call the sun any other than Louis. It is true these savages call also the moon Louis, but with this distinction, that they give the moon the name of Louis Bastache, which in their language signifies, the sun that shines in the night."

The Utrecht edition called forth much censure, and no one in France doubted that Hennepin was the author. D'Iberville, Governor of Louisiana, while in Paris, wrote on July 3d 1699, to the Minister of Marine and Colonies of France, in these words: "Very much vexed at the Recollect, whose false narratives had deceived every one, and caused our suffering and total failure of our enterprise, by the time consumed in the search of things which alone existed in his imagination."

The Rev. Father James Gravier, in a letter from a fort on the Gulf of Mexico, near the Mississippi, dated February 16th, 1701, expressed the sentiment of his times when he speaks of Hennepin "who presented to King William, the Relation of the Mississippi, where he never was, and after a thousand falsehoods and ridiculous boasts,

* * * he makes Mr. de la Salle appear in his Relation, wounded with two balls in the head, turn toward the Recollect Father Anastase, to ask him for absolution, having been killed instantly, without uttering a word and other like false stories."

Hennepin gradually faded out of sight. Brunet mentions a letter written by J. B. Dubos, from Rome, dated March 1st, 1701, which mentions that Hennepin was living on the Capitoline Hill, in the celebrated convent of Ara Cœli, and was a favorite of Cardinal Spada. The time and place of his death has not been ascertained.

CHAPTER V.

NICHOLAS PERROT, FOUNDER OF FIRST POST ON LAKE PEPIN.

Early Life.—Searches for Copper.—Interpreter at Sault St. Marie, Employed by La Salle.—Builds Stockade at Lake Pepin.—Hostile Indians Rebuked.—A Silver Ostensorium Given to a Jesuit Chapel.—Perrot in the Battle against Senecas, in New York.—Second Visit to Sioux Country.—Taking Possession by "Proces Verbal."—Discovery of Lead Mines.—Attends Council at Montreal.—Establishes a Post near Detroit, in Michigan.—Perrot's Death, and his Wife.

Nicholas Perrot, sometimes written Pere, was one of the most energetic of the class in Canada known as "coureurs des bois," or forest rangers. Born in 1644, at an early age he was identified with the fur trade of the great inland lakes. As early as 1665, he was among the Outagamies [Foxes], and in 1667 was at Green Bay. In 1669, he was appointed by Talon to go to the lake region in search of copper mines. At the formal taking possession of that country in the name of the King of France, at Sault St. Marie, on the 14th of May, 1671, he acted as interpreter. In 1677, he seems to have been employed at Fort Frontenac. La Salle was made very sick the next year, from eating a salad, and one Nicholas Perrot, called Joly Cœur (Jolly Soul) was suspected of having mingled poison with the food. After this he was associated with Du Luth in the execution of two Indians, as we have seen. In 1684, he was appointed by De la Barre, the Governor of Canada, as Commandant for the West, and left Montreal with twenty men. Arriving at Green Bay in Wisconsin, some Indians told him that they had visited countries toward the setting sun, where they obtained the blue and green stones suspended from their ears and noses, and that they saw horses and men like Frenchmen, probably the Spaniards of New Mexico; and others said that they had obtained hatchets from persons who lived in a house that walked on the water, near the mouth of the river of the Assiniboines, alluding to the English established at Hudson's Bay. Proceeding to the portage between the Fox and Wisconsin, thirteen Hurons were met, who were bitterly opposed to the establishment of a post near the Sioux. After the Mississippi was reached, a party of Winnebagoes was employed to notify the tribes of Northern Iowa that the French had ascended the river, and wished to meet them. It was further agreed that prairie fires would be kindled from time to time, so that the Indians could follow the French.

After entering Lake Pepin, near its mouth, on the east side, Perrot found a place suitable for a post, where there was wood. The stockade was built at the foot of a bluff beyond which was a large prairie. La Potherie makes this statement, which is repeated by Penicaut, who writes of Lake Pepin: "To the right and left of its shores there are also prairies. In that on the right on the bank of the lake, there is a fort, which was built by Nicholas Perrot, whose name it yet [1700] bears."

Soon after he was established, it was announced that a band of Aïouez [Ioways] was encamped above, and on the way to visit the post. The French ascended in canoes to meet them, but as they drew nigh, the Indian women ran up the bluffs, and hid in the woods; but twenty of the braves mustered courage to advance and greet Perrot, and bore him to the chief's lodge. The chief, bending over Perrot, began to weep, and allowed the moisture to fall upon his visitor. After he had exhausted himself, the principal men of the party repeated the slabbering process. Then buffalo tongues were boiled in an earthen pot, and after being cut into small pieces, the chief took a piece, and, as a mark of respect, placed it in Perrot's mouth.

During the winter of 1684-85, the French traded in Minnesota.

At the end of the beaver hunt, the Ayoës [Ioways] came to the post, but Perrot was absent visiting the Nadouaïssionx, and they sent a chief to notify him of their arrival. Four Illinois met him on the way, and were anxious for the return of four children held by the French. When the Sioux, who were at war with the Illinois, perceived them, they wished to seize their canoes, but the French voyageurs who were guarding them, pushed into the middle of the river, and the French at the post coming to their assistance, a reconciliation was effected, and four of the Sioux took the Illinois upon their shoulders, and bore them to the shore.

An order having been received from Denonville, Governor of Canada, to bring the Miamis, and other tribes, to the rendezvous at Niagara, to go on an expedition against the Senecas, Perrot entrusting the post at Lake Pepin to a few Frenchmen, visited the Miamis, who were dwelling below on the Mississippi, and with no guide but Indian camp fires, went sixty miles into the country beyond the river.

Upon his return, he perceived a great smoke, and at first thought that it was a war party proceeding to the Sioux country. Fortunately he met a Maskouten chief, who had been at the post to see him, and he gave the intelligence, that the Outagamies [Foxes], Kikapous [Kickapoos], and Mascoutechs [Maskoutens], and others, from the region of Green Bay, had determined to pillage the post, kill the French, and then go to war against the Sioux. Hurrying on, he reached the fort, and learned that on that very day three spies had been there and seen that there were only six Frenchmen in charge.

The next day two more spies appeared, but Perrot had taken the precaution to put loaded guns at the door of each hut, and caused his men frequently to change their clothes. To the query, "How many French were there?" the reply was given, "Forty, and that more were daily expected, who had been on a buffalo hunt, and that the guns were well loaded and knives well sharpened." They were then told to go back to their camp and bring a chief of each nation represented, and that if Indians, in large numbers, came near, they would be fired at. In accordance with this message six chiefs presented themselves. After their bows and arrows were taken away they were invited to Perrot's cabin, who gave something to eat and tobacco to smoke. Looking at Perrot's loaded guns they asked, "If he was afraid of his children?" He replied, he was not. They continued, "You are displeased." He answered, "I have good reason to be. The Spirit has warned me of your designs; you will take my things away and put me in the kettle, and proceed against the Nadouaissieux. The Spirit told me to be on my guard, and he would help me." At this they were astonished, and confessed that an attack was meditated. That night the chiefs slept in the stockade, and early the next morning a part of the hostile force was encamped in the vicinity, and wished to trade. Perrot had now only a force of fifteen men, and seizing the chiefs, he told them he would break their heads if they did not disperse the Indians. One of the chiefs then stood up on the gate of the fort and said to the warriors, "Do not advance, young men, or you are dead. The Spirit has warned Metaminiens [Perrot] of your designs." They followed the advice, and afterwards Perrot presented them with two guns, two kettles, and some tobacco, to close the door of war against the Nadouaissieux, and the chiefs were all permitted to make a brief visit to the post.

Returning to Green Bay in 1686, he passed much time in collecting allies for the expedition against the Iroquois in New York. During this year he gave to the Jesuit chapel at Depere, five miles above Green Bay, a church utensil of silver, fifteen inches high, still in existence. The standard, nine inches in height, supports a radiated circlet closed with glass on both sides and surmounted with a cross. This vessel, weighing about twenty ounces, was intended to show the consecrated wafer of the mass, and is called a soleil, monstrance, or ostensorium.

Around the oval base of the rim is the following inscription:

CE SOLEIL EST DONNE PAR MR NICHOLAS PERROT A LA MISSION
DE ST. FRANCOIS XAVIER EN LA BAYE DES PIANKE + 1686

In 1802 some workmen in digging at Green Bay, Wisconsin, on the old Langlade estate discovered this relic, which is now kept in the vault of the Roman Catholic bishop of that diocese.

During the spring of 1687 Perrot, with De Luth and Tonty, was with the Indian allies and the French in the expedition against the Senecas of the Genessee Valley in New York.

The next year Denonville, Governor of Canada, again sent Perrot with forty Frenchmen to the Sioux who, says Potherie, "were very distant, and who would not trade with us as easily as the other tribes, the Outagamis [Foxes] having boasted of having cut off the passage thereto."

When Perrot arrived at Mackinaw, the tribes of that region were much excited at the hostility of the Outagamis [Foxes] toward the Sauteurs [Chippeways]. As soon as Perrot and his party reached Green Bay a deputation of the Foxes sought an interview. He told them that he had nothing to do with this quarrel with the Chippeways. In justification, they said that a party of their young men, in going to war against the Nadouaissieux, had found a young man and three Chippeway girls.

Perrot was silent, and continued his journey towards the Nadouaissieux. Soon he was met by five chiefs of the Foxes in a canoe, who begged him to go to their village. Perrot consented, and when he went into a chief's lodge they placed before him broiled venison, and raw meat for the rest of the French. He refused to eat because, said he, "that meat did not give him any spirit, but he would take some when the Outagamis [Foxes] were more reasonable." He then eluded them for not having gone, as requested by the Governor of Canada, to the Detroit of Lake Erie, and during the absence of the French fighting with the Chippeways. Having ordered them to go on their beaver hunt and only fight against the Iroquois, he left a few Frenchmen to trade and proceeded on his journey to the Sioux country. Arriving at the portage between the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers they were impeded by ice, but with the aid of some Pottawatomies they transported their goods to the Wisconsin, which they found no longer frozen. The Chippeways were informed that their daughters had been taken from the Foxes, and a deputation came to take them back, but being attacked by the Foxes, who did not know their errand, they fled without securing the three girls. Perrot then ascended the Mississippi to the post which in 1684 he had erected, just above the mouth, and on the east side of Lake Pepin.

As soon as the rivers were navigable, the Nadouaissieux came down and escorted Perrot to one of their villages, where he was welcomed with much enthusiasm. He was carried upon a beaver robe, followed by a long line of warriors, each bearing a pipe, and singing. After taking him around the village, he was borne to the chief's lodge, when several came in to weep over his head, with the same tenderness that the Ayoes (Ioways) did, when Perrot several years before arrived at Lake Pepin. "These weepings," says an old chronicler "do not weaken their souls. They are very good warriors, and reported the bravest in that region. They are at war with all the tribes at present except the Sauteurs [Chippeways] and Ayoes [Ioways], and even with these they have quarrels. At the break of day the Nadouaissieux bathe, even to the youngest. They have very fine forms, but the women are not comely, and they look upon them as slaves. They are jealous and suspicious about them, and they are the cause of quarrels and blood-shedding.

"The Sioux are very dextrous with their canoes, and they fight unto death if surrounded. Their country is full of swamps, which shelter them in summer from being molested. One must be a Nadouaissieux, to find the way to their villages."

While Perrot was absent in New York, fighting the Senecas, a Sioux chief knowing that few Frenchmen were left at Lake Pepin, came with one hundred warriors, and endeavored to pillage it. Of this complaint was made, and the guilty leader was near being put to death by his associates. Amicable relations having been formed, preparations were made by Perrot to return to his post. As they were going away, one of the Frenchmen complained that a box of his goods had been stolen. Perrot ordered a voyageur to bring a cup of water, and into it he poured some brandy. He then addressed the Indians and told them he would dry up their marshes if the goods were not restored; and then he set on fire the brandy in the cup. The savages were astonished and terrified, and supposed that he possessed supernatural powers; and in a little while the goods were found and restored to the owner, and the French descended to their stockade.

The Foxes, while Perrot was in the Sioux country, changed their village, and settled on the Mississippi. Coming up to visit Perrot, they asked him to establish friendly relations between them and the Sioux. At the time some Sioux were at the post trading furs, and at first they supposed the French were plotting with the Foxes. Perrot, however, eased them by presenting the calumet and saying that the French considered the Outagamis [Foxes] as brothers, and then adding: "Smoke in my pipe; this is the manner with which Onontio [Governor of Canada] feeds his children." The Sioux replied that they wished the Foxes to smoke first. This was reluctantly done, and the Sioux smoked, but would not conclude a definite peace until they consulted their chiefs. This was not concluded, because Perrot, before the chiefs came down, received orders to return to Canada.

About this time, in the presence of Father Joseph James Marest, a Jesuit missionary, Boisguillot, a trader on the Wisconsin and Mississippi, Le Sueur, who afterward built a post below the Saint Croix River, about nine miles from Hastings, the following document was prepared:

"Nicholas Perrot, commanding for the King at the post of the Nadouessioux, commissioned by the Marquis Denonville, Governor and Lieutenant Governor of all New France, to manage the interests of commerce among all the Indian tribes and people of the Bay des Puants [Green Bay], Nadouessioux, Mascoutens, and other western nations of the Upper Mississippi, and to take possession in the King's name of all the places where he has heretofore been and whither he will go:

"We this day, the eighth of May, one thousand six hundred and eighty-nine, do, in the presence of the Reverend Father Marest, of the Society of Jesus, Missionary among the Nadouessioux, of Monsieur de Boisguillot, commanding the French in the neighborhood of the Oniskonche, on the Mississippi, Augustin Legardeur, Esquire, Sieur de Caumont, and of Messieurs Le Sueur, Hebert, Lemire and Blein.

"Declare to all whom it may concern, that, being come from the Bay des Puants, and to the Lake of the Oniskonches, we did transport ourselves to the country of the Nadouessioux, on the border of the river St. Croix, and at the mouth of the river St. Pierre, on the bank of which were the Mantantans, and further up to the interior, as far as the Menchokatonx [Med-ay-wah-kawn-taww], with whom dwell the majority of the Songeskitons [Se-see-taww] and other Nadouessioux who are to the northwest of the Mississippi, to take possession, for and in the name of the King, of the countries and rivers inhabited by the said tribes, and of which they are proprietors. The present act done in our presence, signed with our hand, and subscribed."

The three Chippeway girls of whom mention has been made were still with the Foxes, and Perrot took them with him to Mackinaw, upon his return to Canada.

While there, the Ottawas held some prisoners upon an island not far from the mainland. The Jesuit Fathers went over and tried to save the captives from harsh treatment, but were unsuccessful. The canoes appeared at length near each other, one man paddling in each, while the warriors were answering the shouts of the prisoners, who each held a white stick in his hand. As they neared the shore the chief of the party made a speech to the Indians who lived on the shore, and giving a history of the campaign, told them that they were masters of the prisoners. The warriors then came on land, and, according to custom, abandoned the spoils. An old man then ordered nine men to conduct the prisoners to a separate place. The women and the young men formed a line with big sticks. The young prisoners soon found their feet, but the old men were so badly used they spat blood, and they were condemned to be burned at the Mamillon.

The Jesuit Fathers and the French officers were much embarrassed, and feared that the Troquois would complain of the little care which had been used to prevent cruelty.

Perrot, in this emergency, walked to the place where the prisoners were singing the death dirge, in expectation of being burned, and told them to sit down and be silent. A few Ottawa-waws rudely told them to sing on, but Perrot forbade. He then went back to the Council, where the old men had rendered judgment, and ordered one prisoner to be burned at Mackinaw, one at Sault St. Marie and another at Green Bay. Undaunted he spoke as follows: "I come to cut the strings of the dogs. I will not suffer them to be eaten. I have pity on them, since my Father, Onontio, has commanded me. You Outaouaks [Ottawaws] are like tame bears, who will not recognize them who has brought them up. You have forgotten Onontio's protection. When he asks your obedience, you want to rule over him, and eat the flesh of those children he does not wish to give to you. Take care, that, if you swallow them, Onontio will tear them with violence from between your teeth. I speak as a brother, and I think I am showing pity to your children, by cutting the bonds of your prisoners."

His boldness had the desired effect. The prisoners were released, and two of them were sent with him to Montreal, to be returned to the Iroquois.

On the 22nd of May, 1690, with one hundred and forty-three voyageurs and six Indians, Perrot left Montreal as an escort of Sieur de Louvigny La Porte, a half-pay captain, appointed to succeed Durantaye at Mackinaw, by Frontenac, the new Governor of Canada, who in October of the previous year had arrived, to take the place of Denonville.

Perrot, as he approached Mackinaw, went in advance to notify the French of the coming of the commander of the post. As he came in sight of the settlement, he hoisted the white flag with the fleur de lis and the voyageurs shouted, "Long live the king!" Louvigny soon appeared and was received by one hundred "coureur des bois" under arms.

From Mackinaw, Perrot proceeded to Green Bay, and a party of Miamis there begged him to make a trading establishment on the Mississippi towards the Oniskonsing (Wisconsin.) The chief made him a present of a piece of lead from a mine which he had found in a small stream which flows into the Mississippi. Perrot promised to visit him within twenty days, and the chief then returned to his village below the d'Oniskonche (iWisconsin) River.

Having at length reached his post on Lake Pepin, he was informed that the Sioux were forming a large war party against the Outagamis (Foxes) and other allies of the French. He gave notice of his arrival to a party of about four hundred Sioux who were on the Mississippi.

They arrested the messengers and came to the post for the purpose of plunder. Perrot asked them why they acted in this manner, and said that the Foxes, Miamis, Kickapoos, Illinois, and Maskoutens had united in a war party against them, but that he had persuaded them to give it up, and now he wished them to return to their families and to their beaver. The Sioux declared that they had started on the war-path, and that they were ready to die. After they had traded their furs, they sent for Perrot to come to their camp, and begged that he would not hinder them from searching for their foes. Perrot tried to dissuade them, but they insisted that the Spirit had given them men to eat, at three days' journey from the post. Then more powerful influences were used. After giving them two kettles and some merchandise, Perrot spoke thus: "I love your life, and I am sure you will be defeated. Your Evil Spirit has deceived you. If you kill the Outagamis, or their allies, you must strike me first; if you kill them, you kill me just the same, for I hold them under one wing and you under the other." After this he extended the calumet, which they at first refused; but at length a chief said he was right, and, making invocations to the sun, wished Perrot to take him back to his arms. This was granted, on condition that he would give up his weapons of war. The chief then tied them to a pole in the centre of the fort, turning them toward the sun. He then persuaded the other chiefs to give up the expedition, and, sending for Perrot, he placed the calumet before him, one end in the earth and the other on a small forked twig to hold it firm. Then he took from his own sack a pair of his cleanest moccasins, and taking off Perrot's shoes, put on these. After he had made him eat, presenting the calumet, he said: "We listen to you now. Do for us as you do for our enemies, and prevent them from killing us, and we will separate for the beaver hunt. The sun is the witness of our obedience."

After this, Perrot descended the Mississippi and revealed to the Maskoutens, who had come to meet him, how he had pacified the Sioux. He, about this period, in accordance with his promise, visited the lead mines. He found the ore abundant "but the lead hard to work because it lay between rocks which required blowing up. It had very little dross and was easily melted."

Penicaut, who ascended the Mississippi in 1700, wrote that twenty leagues below the Wisconsin, on both sides of the Mississippi, were mines of lead called "Nicolas Perrot's." Early French maps indicate as the locality of lead mines the site of modern towns, Galena, in Illinois, and Dubuque, in Iowa.

In August, 1693, about two hundred Frenchmen from Mackinaw, with delegates from the tribes of the West, arrived at Montreal to attend a grand council called by Governor Frontenac, and among these was Perrot.

On the first Sunday in September the governor gave the Indians a great feast, after which they and the traders began to return to the wilderness. Perrot was ordered by Frontenac to establish a new post for the Miamis in Michigan, in the neighborhood of the Kalamazoo River.

Two years later he is present again, in August, at a council in Montreal, then returned to the West, and in 1699 is recalled from Green Bay. In 1701 he was at Montreal acting as interpreter, and appears to have died before 1718: his wife was Madeline Raclos, and his residence was in the Seigneurie of Beaucourt, not far from Three Rivers, on the St. Lawrence.

CHAPTER VI.

BARON LA HONTAN'S FABULOUS VOYAGE.

La Hontan, a Gascon by Birth.—Early Life.—Description of Fox and Wisconsin Rivers.—Indian Feast.—Alleged Ascent of Long River.—Bohe Exposes the Deception.—Route to the Pacific.

The "Travels" of Baron La Hontan appeared in A. D. 1703, both at London and at Hague, and were as saleable and readable as those of Hennepin, which were on the counters of booksellers at the same time.

La Hontan, a Gascon by birth, and in style of writing, when about seventeen years of age, arrived in Canada, in 1683, as a private soldier, and was with Gov. De la Barre in his expedition of 1684, toward Niagara, and was also in the battle near Rochester, New York, in 1687, at which Du Luth and Perrot, explorers of Minnesota, were present.

In 1688 he appears to have been sent to Fort St. Joseph, which was built by Du Luth, on the St. Clare River, near the site of Fort Gratiot, Michigan. It is possible that he may have accompanied Perrot to Lake Pepin, who came about this time to reoccupy his old post.

From the following extracts it will be seen that his style is graphic, and that he probably had been in 1688 in the valley of the Wisconsin. At Mackinaw, after his return from his pretended voyage of the Long River, he writes:

"I left here on the 24th September, with my men and five Outaouas, good hunters, whom I have before mentioned to you as having been of good service to me. All my brave men being provided with good canoes, filled with provisions and ammunition, together with goods for the Indian trade, I took advantage of a north wind, and in three days entered the Bay of the Poutouatamis, distant from here about forty leagues. The entrance to the bay is full of islands. It is ten leagues wide and twenty-five in length.

"On the 29th we entered a river, which is quite deep, whose waters are so affected by the lake that they often rise and fall three feet in twelve hours. This is an observation that I made during these three or four days that I passed here. The Sakis, the Poutouatamis, and a few of the Malominis have their villages on the border of this river, and the Jesuits have a house there. In the place there is carried on quite a commerce in furs and Indian corn, which the Indians traffic with the 'coureurs des bois' that go and come, for it is their nearest and most convenient passage to the Mississippi.

"The lands here are very fertile, and produce, almost without culture, the wheat of our Europe, peas, beans, and any quantity of fruit unknown in France.

"The moment I landed, the warriors of three nations came by turns to my cabin to entertain me with the pipe and chief dance; the first in proof of peace and friendship, the second to indicate their esteem and consideration for me. In return, I gave them several yards of tobacco, and beads, with which they trimmed their capots. The next morning, I was asked as a guest, to one of the feasts of this nation, and after having sent my dishes, which is the custom, I went towards noon. They began to compliment me of my arrival, and after hearing them, they all, one after the other, began to sing and dance, in a manner that I will detail to you when I have more leisure. These songs and dances lasted two hours, and were seasoned with whoops of joy, and quibbles that they have woven into their ridiculous musique. Then the captives waited upon us. The whole troop were seated in the Oriental custom. Each one had his portion before him, like our monks in their refectories. They commenced by placing four dishes before me. The first consisted of two white fish simply boiled in water. The second was chopped meats with the boiled tongue of a bear; the third a beaver's tail, all roasted. They made me drink also of a syrup, mixed with water, made out of the maple tree. The feast lasted two hours, after which, I requested a chief of the nation to sing for me; for it is the custom, when we have business with them, to employ an inferior for self in all the ceremonies they perform. I gave him several pieces of tobacco, to oblige him to keep the party till dark. The next day and the day following, I attended the feasts of the other nations, where I observed the same formalities."

He alleges that, on the 23d of October, he reached the Mississippi River, and, ascending, on the 3d of November he entered into a river, a tributary from the west, that was almost without a current, and at its mouth filled with rushes. He then describes a journey of five hundred miles up this stream. He declares he found upon its banks three great nations, the Eokoros, Essanapes, and Gnacsitaires, and because he ascended it for sixty days, he named it Long River.

For years his wondrous story was believed, and geographers hastened to trace it upon their maps. But in time the voyage up the Long River was discovered to be a fabrication. There is extant a letter of Bohe, a Priest of the Congregation of the Mission, dated Versailles, March 15, 1716, and addressed to De L'Isle, the geographer of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, which exposes the deception.

He writes: "It seems to me that you might give the name of Bourbonia to these vast countries which are between the Missouri, Mississippi, and the Western Ocean. Would it not be well to efface that great river which La Hontan says he discovered?"

"All the Canadians, and even the Governor General, have told me that this river is unknown. If it existed, the French, who are on the Illinois, and at Ouabache, would know of it. The last volume of the 'Lettres Edifiantes' of the Jesuits, in which there is a very fine relation of the Illinois Country, does not speak of it, any more than the letters which I received this year, which tell wonders of the beauty and goodness of the country. They send me some quite pretty work, made by the wife of one of the principal chiefs.

"They tell me, that among the Scioux, of the Mississippi, there are always Frenchmen trading; that the course of the Mississippi is from north to west, and from west to south; that it is known that toward the source of the Mississippi there is a river in the highlands that leads to the western ocean; that the Indians say that they have seen bearded men with caps, who gather gold-dust on the seashore, but that it is very far from this country, and that they pass through many nations unknown to the French.

"I have a memoir of La Motte Cadillac, formerly Governor of Missilimaackinack, who says that if St. Peters [Minnesota] River is ascended to its source they will, according to all appearance, find in the highland another river leading to the Western Ocean.

"For the last two years I have tormented exceedingly the Governor-General, M. Raudot, and M. Duché, to move them to discover this ocean. If I succeed, as I hope, we shall hear tidings before three years, and I shall have the pleasure and the consolation of having rendered a good service to Geography, to Religion and to the State."

Charlevoix, in his History of New France, alluding to La Hontan's voyage, writes: "The voyage up the Long River is as fabulous as the Island of Barrataria, of which Sancho Panza was governor. Nevertheless, in France and elsewhere, most people have received these memoirs as the fruits of the travels of a gentleman who wrote badly, although quite lightly, and who had no religion, but who described pretty sincerely what he had seen. The consequence is that the compilers of historical and geographical dictionaries have almost always followed and cited them in preference to more faithful records."

Even in modern times, Nicollet, employed by the United States to explore the Upper Mississippi, has the following in his report:

"Having procured a copy of La Hontan's book, in which there is a roughly made map of his Long River, I was struck with the resemblance of its course as laid down with that of Cannon River, which I had previously sketched in my own field-book. I soon convinced myself that the principal statements of the Baron in reference to the country and the few details he gives of the physical character of the river, coincide remarkably with what I had laid down as belonging to Cannon River. Then the lakes and swamps corresponded; traces of Indian villages mentioned by him might be found by a growth of wild grass that propagates itself around all old Indian settlements."

LE SUEUR, EXPLORER OF THE MINNESOTA RIVER.

Le Sueur was a native of Canada, and a relative of D'Iberville, the early Governor of Louisiana. He came to Lake Pepin in 1683, with Nicholas Perrot, and his name also appears attached to the document prepared in May, 1689, after Perrot had re-occupied his post just above the entrance of the lake, on the east side.

In 1692, he was sent by Governor Frontenac of Canada, to La Pointe, on Lake Superior, and in a dispatch of 1693, to the French Government, is the following: "Le Sueur, another voyageur, is to remain at Chagouamagon [La Pointe] to endeavor to maintain the peace lately concluded between the Saulteurs [Chippeways] and Sioux. This is of the greatest consequence, as it is now the sole pass by which access can be had to the latter nation, whose trade is very profitable; the country to the south being occupied by the Foxes and Maskoutens, who several times plundered the French, on the ground they were carrying ammunition to the Sioux, their ancient enemies."

Entering the Sioux country in 1694, he established a post upon a prairie island in the Mississippi, about nine miles below the present town of Hastings, according to Bellin and others. Penicaut, who accompanied him in the exploration of the Minnesota, writes, "At the extremity of the lake [Pepin] you come to the Isle Pelee, so called because there are no trees on it. It is on this island that the French from Canada established their fort and storehouse, and they also winter here, because game is very abundant. In the month of September they bring their store of meat, obtained by hunting, and after having skinned and cleaned it, hang it upon a crib of raised scaffolding, in order that the extreme cold, which lasts from September to March, may preserve it from spoiling. During the whole winter they do not go out except for water, when they have to break the ice every day, and the abin is generally built upon the bank, so as not to have far to go. When spring arrives, the savages come to the island, bringing their merchandize."

On the fifteenth of July, 1695, Le Sueur arrived at Montreal with a party of Ojibways, and the first Dakota brave that had ever visited Canada.

The Indians were much impressed with the power of France by the marching of a detachment of seven hundred picked men, under Chevalier Cresat, who were on their way to La Chine.

On the eighteenth, Frontenac, in the presence of Callieres and other persons of distinction, gave them an audience.

The first speaker was the chief of the Ojibway band at La Pointe, Shingowahbay, who said:

"That he was come to pay his respects to Onontio [the title given the Governor of Canada] in the name of the young warriors of Point Chagouamigon, and to thank him for having given them some Frenchmen to dwell with them; to testify their sorrow for one Jobin, a Frenchman, who was killed at a feast, accidentally, and not maliciously. We come to ask a favor of you, which is to let us act. We are allies of the Sciou. Some Outagamies, or Mascoutins, have been killed. The Sciou came to mourn with us. Let us act, Father; let us take revenge.

"Le Sueur alone, who is acquainted with the language of the one and the other, can serve us. We ask that he return with us."

Another speaker of the Ojibways was Le Brochet.

Teeoskahtay, the Dahkotch chief, before he spoke, spread out a beaver robe, and, laying another with a tobacco pouch and otter skin, began to weep bitterly. After drying his tears, he said:

"All of the nations had a father, who afforded them protection; all of them have iron. But he was a bastard in quest of a father; he was come to see him, and hopes that he will take pity on him."

He then placed upon the beaver robe twenty-two arrows, at each arrow naming a Dahkotch village that desired Frontenac's protection. Resuming his speech, he remarked:

"It is not on account of what I bring that I hope him who rules the earth will have pity on me. I learned from the Santeurs that he wanted nothing; that he was the Master of the Iron; that he had a big heart, into which he could receive all the nations. This has induced me to abandon my people and come to seek his protection, and to beseech him to receive me among the number of his children. Take courage, Great Captain, and reject me not; despise me not, though I appear poor in your eyes. All the nations here present know that I am rich, and the little they offer here is taken from my lands."

Count Frontenac in reply told the chief that he would receive the Dahkotch as his children, on condition that they would be obedient, and that he would send back Le Sueur with him.

Teeoskahtay, taking hold of the governor's knees, wept, and said: "Take pity on us; we are well aware that we are not able to speak, being children; but Le Sueur, who understands our language, and has seen all our villages, will next year inform you what will have been achieved by the Sioux nations represented by those arrows before you."

Having finished, a Dahkotch woman, the wife of a great chief whom Le Sueur had purchased from captivity at Mackinaw, approached those in authority, and, with downcast eyes, embraced their knees, weeping and saying:

"I thank thee, Father; it is by thy means I have been liberated, and am no longer captive."

Then Teeoskahtay resumed:

"I speak like a man penetrated with joy. The Great Captain; he who is the Master of Iron, assure me of his protection, and I promise him that if he condescends to restore my children, now prisoners among the Foxes, Ottawas and Hurons, I will return hither, and bring with me the twenty-two villages whom he has just restored to life by promising to send them Iron."

On the 14th of August, two weeks after the Ojibway chief left for his home on Lake Superior, Nicholas Perrot arrived with a deputation of Sauks, Foxes, Menomonees, Miamis of Maramek and Pottowatomies.

Two days after, they had a council with the governor, who thus spoke to a Fox brave:

"I see that you are a young man; your nation has quite turned away from my wishes; it has pillaged some of my young men, whom it has treated as slaves. I know that your father, who loved the French, had no hand in the indignity. You only imitate the example of your father, who had sense, when you do not co-operate with those of your tribe who are wishing to go over to my enemies, after they grossly insulted me and defeated the Sioux, whom I now consider my son. I pity the Sioux; I pity the dead whose loss I deplore. Perrot goes up there, and he will speak to your nation from me for the release of their prisoners; let them attend to him."

Teeoskahtay never returned to his native land. While in Montreal he was taken sick, and in thirty-three days he ceased to breathe; and, followed by white men, his body was interred in the white man's grave.

Le Sueur instead of going back to Minnesota that year, as was expected, went to France and received a license, in 1697, to open certain mines supposed to exist in Minnesota. The ship in which he was returning was captured by the English, and he was taken to England. After his release he went back to France, and, in 1698, obtained a new commission for mining.

While Le Sueur was in Europe, the Dahkotch waged war against the Foxes and Miamis. In retaliation, the latter raised a war party and entered the land of the Dahkotch. Finding their foes intrenched, and assisted by "coureurs des bois," they were indignant; and on their return they had a skirmish with some Frenchmen, who were carrying goods to the Dahkotch.

Shortly after, they met Perrot, and were about to burn him to death, when prevented by some friendly Foxes. The Miamis, after this, were disposed to be friendly to the Iroquois. In 1696, the year previous, the authorities at Quebec decided that it was expedient to abandon all the posts west of Mackinaw, and withdraw the French from Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The voyageurs were not disposed to leave the country, and the governor wrote to Pontchartrain for instructions, in October, 1698. In his dispatch he remarks:

"In this conjuncture, and under all these circumstances, we consider it our duty to postpone, until new instructions from the court, the execution of Sieur Le Sueur's enterprise for the mines, though the promise had already been given him to send two canoes in advance to Missilimaekinac, for the purpose of purchasing there some provisions and other necessities for his voyage, and that he would be permitted to go and join them early in the spring with the rest of his hands. What led us to adopt this resolution has been, that the French who remained to trade off with the Five Nations the remainder of their merchandise, might, on seeing entirely new comers arriving there, consider themselves entitled to dispense with coming down, and perhaps adopt the resolution to settle there; whilst, seeing no arrival there, with permission to do what is forbidden, the reflection they will be able to make during the winter, and the apprehension of being guilty of crime, may oblige them to return in the spring.

"This would be very desirable, in consequence of the great difficulty there will be in constraining them to it, should they be inclined to lift the mask altogether and become buccaneers; or should Sieur Le Sueur, as he easily could do, furnish them with goods for their beaver and smaller peltry, which he might send down by the return of other Frenchmen, whose sole desire is to obey, and who have remained only because of the impossibility of getting their effects down. This would rather induce those who would continue to lead a vagabond life to remain there, as the goods they would receive from Le Sueur's people would afford them the means of doing so."

In reply to this communication, Louis XIV. answered that—

"His majesty has approved that the late Sieur de Frontenac and De Champigny suspended the execution of the license granted to the man named Le Sueur to proceed, with fifty men, to explore some mines on the banks of the Mississippi. He has revoked said license, and desires that the said Le Sueur, or any other person, be prevented from leaving the colony on pretence of going in search of mines, without his majesty's express permission."

Le Sueur, undaunted by these drawbacks to the prosecution of a favorite project, again visited France.

Fortunately for Le Sueur, D'Iberville, who was a friend, and closely connected by marriage, was appointed governor of the new territory of Louisiana. In the month of December he arrived from France, with thirty workmen, to proceed to the supposed mines in Minnesota.

On the thirteenth of July, 1700, with a felucca, two canoes, and nineteen men, having ascended the Mississippi, he had reached the mouth of the Missouri, and six leagues above this he passed the Illinois. He there met three Canadians, who came to join him, with a letter from Father Marset, who had once attempted a mission among the Dahkotahs, dated July 13, Mission Immaculate Conception of the Holy Virgin, in Illinois.

"I have the honor to write, in order to inform you that the Saugiestas have been defeated by the Scioux and Ayavois [Iowas]. The people have formed an alliance with the Quincapous [Kickapoo], some of the Mecoutins, Renards [Foxes], and Metesigamias, and gone to revenge themselves, not on the Scioux, for they are too much afraid of them, but perhaps on the Ayavois, or very likely upon the Paoutees, or more probably upon the Osages, for these suspect nothing, and the others are on their guard.

"As you will probably meet these allied nations, you ought to take precaution against their plans, and not allow them to board your vessel, since they are traitors, and utterly faithless. I pray God to accompany you in all your designs."

Twenty-two leagues above the Illinois, he passed a small stream which he called the River of Oxen, and nine leagues beyond this he passed a small river on the west side, where he met four Canadians descending the Mississippi, on their way to the Illinois. On the 30th of July, nine leagues above the last-named river, he met seventeen Scioux, in seven canoes, who were going to revenge the death of three Scioux, one of whom had been burned, and the others killed, at Tamarois, a few days before his arrival in that village. As he had promised the chief of the Illinois to appease the Scioux who should go to war against his nation, he made a present to the chief of the party to engage him to turn back. He told them the King of France did not wish them to make this river more bloody, and that he was sent to tell them that, if they obeyed the king's word, they would receive in future all things necessary for them. The chief answered that he accepted the present, that is to say, that he would do as had been told him.

From the 30th of July to the 25th of August, Le Sueur advanced fifty-three and one-fourth leagues to a small river which he called the River of the Mine. At the mouth it runs from the north, but it turns to the northeast. On the right seven leagues, there is a lead mine in a prairie, one and a half leagues. The river is only navigable in high water, that is to say, from early spring till the month of June.

From the 25th to the 27th he made ten leagues, passed two small rivers, and made himself acquainted with a mine of lead, from which he took a supply. From the 27th to the 30th he made eleven and a half leagues, and met five Canadians, one of whom had been dangerously wounded in the head. They were naked, and had no ammunition except a miserable gun, with five or six loads of powder and balls. They said they were descending from the Scioux to go to Tamarois, and, when seventy leagues above, they perceived nine canoes in the Mississippi, in which were ninety savages, who robbed and cruelly beat them. This party were going to war against the Scioux, and were composed of four different nations, the Outagamis [Foxes], Pontowattamis [Pottowattamies], and Puans [Winnebagoes], who dwell in a country eighty leagues east of the Mississippi from where Le Sueur then was.

The Canadians determined to follow the detachment, which was composed of twenty-eight men. This day they made seven and a half leagues. On the 1st of September he passed the Wisconsin river. It runs into the Mississippi from the northeast. It is nearly one and a half miles wide. At about seventy-five leagues up this river, on the right, ascending, there is a portage of more than a league. The half of this portage is shaking ground, and at the end of it is a small river which descends into a bay called Winnebago Bay. It is inhabited by a great number of nations who carry their furs to Canada. Monsieur Le Sueur came by the Wisconsin river to the Mississippi, for the first time, in 1683, on his way to the Scioux country, where he had already passed seven years at different periods. The Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Wisconsin, is less than half a mile wide. From the 1st of September to the 5th, our voyageur advanced fourteen leagues. He passed the river "Aux Canots," which comes from the northeast, and then the Quineapous, named from a nation which once dwelt upon its banks.

From the 5th to the 9th he made ten and a half leagues, and passed the rivers Cachee and Aux Ailes. The same day he perceived canoes, filled with savages, descending the river, and the five Canadians recognized them as the party who had robbed them. They placed sentinels in the wood, for fear of being surprised by land, and when they had approached within hearing, they cried to them that if they approached farther they would fire. They then drew up by an island, at half the distance of a gun shot. Soon, four of the principal men of the band approached in a canoe, and asked if it was forgotten that they were our brethren, and with what design we had taken arms when we perceived them. Le Sueur replied that he had cause to distrust them, since they had robbed five of his party. Nevertheless, for the surety of his trade, being forced to be at peace with all the tribes, he demanded no redress for the robbery, but added merely that the king, their master and his, wished that his subjects should navigate that river without insult, and that they had better beware how they acted.

The Indian who had spoken was silent, but another said they had been attacked by the Scioux, and that if they did not have pity on them, and give them a little powder, they should not be able to reach their villages. The consideration of a missionary, who was to go up among the Scioux, and whom these savages might meet, induced them to give two pounds of powder.

M. Le Sueur made the same day three leagues; passed a stream on the west, and afterward another river on the east, which is navigable at all times, and which the Indians call Red River.

On the 10th, at daybreak, they heard an elk whistle, on the other side of the river. A Canadian crossed in a small Scioux canoe, which they had found, and shortly returned with the body of the animal, which was very easily killed, "quand il est en rut," that is, from the beginning of September until the end of October. The hunters at this time made a whistle of a piece of wood, or reed, and when they hear an elk whistle they answer it. The animal, believing it to be another elk, approaches, and is killed with ease.

From the 10th to the 14th, M. Le Sueur made seventeen and a half leagues, passing the rivers Raisin and Paquilenettes (perhaps the Wazi Ozu and Buffalo.) The same day he left, on the east side of the Mississippi, a beautiful and large river, which descends from the very far north, and called Bon Secours (Chippeway), on account of the great quantity of buffalo, elk, bears and deers which are found there. Three leagues up this river there is a mine of lead, and seven leagues above, on the same side, they found another long river, in the vicinity of which there is a copper mine, from which he had taken a lump of sixty pounds in a former voyage. In order to make these mines of any account, peace must be obtained between the Scioux and Ouatagamis (Foxes), because the latter, who dwell on the east side of the Mississippi, pass this road continually when going to war against the Sioux.

Penicaut, in his journal, gives a brief description of the Mississippi between the Wisconsin and Lake Pepin. He writes: "Above the Wisconsin, and ten leagues higher on the same side, begins a great prairie extending for sixty leagues along the bank; this prairie is called Aux Ailes. Opposite to Aux Ailes, on the left, there is another prairie facing it called Paquilanet which is not so long by a great deal. Twenty leagues above these prairies is found Lake Bon Secours" [Good Help, now Pepin.]

In this region, at one and a half leagues on the northwest side, commenced a lake, which is six leagues long and more than one broad, called Lake Pepin. It is bounded on the west by a chain of mountains; on the east is seen a prairie; and on the northwest of the lake there is another prairie two leagues long and one wide. In the neighborhood is a chain of mountains quite two hundred feet high, and more than one and a half miles long. In these are found several caves, to which the bears retire in winter. Most of the caverns are more than seventy feet in extent, and two hundred feet high. There are several of which the entrance is very narrow, and quite closed up with saltpetre. It would be dangerous to enter them in summer, for they are filled with rattlesnakes, the bite of which is very dangerous. Le Sueur saw some of these snakes which were six feet in length, but generally they are about four feet. They have teeth resembling those of the pike, and their gums are full of small vessels, in which their poison is placed. The Scioux say they take it every morning, and cast it away at night. They have at the tail a kind of scale which makes a noise, and this is called the rattle.

Le Sueur made on this day seven and a half leagues, and passed another river, called Hiam-bouxeate Ouataba, or the River of Flat Rock. [The Sioux call the Cannon river Inyanbosdata.]

On the 15th he crossed a small river, and saw in the neighborhood several canoes, filled with Indians, descending the Mississippi. He supposed they were Scioux, because he could not distinguish whether the canoes were large or small. The arms were placed in readiness, and soon they heard the cry of the savages, which they are accustomed to raise when they rush upon their enemies. He caused them to be answered in the same manner; and after having placed all the men behind the trees, he ordered them not to fire until they were commanded. He remained on shore to see what movement the savages would make, and perceiving that they placed two on shore, on the other side, where from an eminence they could ascertain the strength of his forces, he caused the men to pass and repass from the shore to the wood, in order to make them believe that they were numerous. This ruse succeeded, for as soon as the two descended from the eminence the chief of the party came, bearing the calumet, which is a signal of peace among the Indians. They said that having never seen the French navigate the river with boats like the felucca, they had supposed them to be English, and for that reason they had raised the war cry, and arranged themselves on the other side of the Mississippi; but having recognized their flag, they had come without fear to inform them, that one of their number, who was crazy, had accidentally killed a Frenchman, and that they would go and bring his comrade, who would tell how the mischief had happened.

The Frenchman they brought was Denis, a Canadian, and he reported that his companion was accidentally killed. His name was Laplace, a deserting soldier from Canada, who had taken refuge in this country.

Le Sueur replied, that Onontio (the name they give to all the governors of Canada), being their father and his, they ought not to seek justification elsewhere than before him; and he advised them to go and see him as soon as possible, and beg him to wipe off the blood of this Frenchman from their faces.

The party was composed of forty-seven men of different nations, who dwell far to the east, about the forty-fourth degree of latitude. Le Sueur, discovering who the chiefs were, said the king whom they had spoken of in Canada, had sent him to take possession of the north of the river; and that he wished the nations who dwell on it, as well as those under his protection, to live in peace.

He made this day three and three-fourths leagues; and on the 16th of September, he left a large river on the east side, named St. Croix, because a Frenchman of that name was shipwrecked at its mouth. It comes from the north-northwest. Four leagues higher, in going up, is found a small lake, at the mouth of which is a very large mass of copper. It is on the edge of the water, in a small ridge of sandy earth, on the west of this lake. [One of La Salle's men was named St. Croix.]

From the 16th to the 19th, he advanced thirteen and three-fourths leagues. After having made from Tamarois two hundred and nine and a half leagues, he left the navigation of the Mississippi, to enter the river St. Pierre, on the west side. By the 1st of October, he had made in this river forty-four and one-fourth leagues. After he entered Blue river, thus named on account of the mines of blue earth found at its mouth, he founded his post, situated in forty-four degrees, thirteen minutes north latitude. He met at this place nine Scioux, who told him that the river belonged to the Scioux of the west, the Ayavois (Iowas) and Otoctatas (Otoes), who lived a little farther off; that it was not their custom to hunt on ground belonging to others, unless invited to do so by the owners, and that when they would come to the fort to obtain provisions, they would be in danger of being killed in ascending or descending the rivers, which were narrow, and that if they would show their pity, he must establish himself on the Mississippi, near the mouth of the St. Pierre, where the Ayavois, the Otoctatas, and the other Scioux could go as well as they.

Having finished their speech, they leaned over the head of Le Sueur, according to their custom, crying out, "Ouaechisson ouaepanimanabo," that is to say, "Have pity upon us." Le Sueur had foreseen that the establishment of Blue Earth river would not please the Scioux of the East, who were, so to speak, masters of the other Scioux and of the nations which will be hereafter mentioned, because they were the first with whom trade was commenced, and in consequence of which they had already quite a number of guns.

As he had commenced his operations not only with a view to the trade of beaver but also to gain a knowledge of the mines which he had previously discovered, he told them that he was sorry that he had not known their intentions sooner, and that it was just, since he came expressly for them, that he should establish himself on their land, but that the season was too far advanced for him to return. He then made them a present of powder, balls and knives, and an armful of tobacco, to entice them to assemble, as soon as possible, near the fort he was about to construct, that when they should be all assembled he might tell them the intention of the king, their and his sovereign.

The Scioux of the West, according to the statement of the Eastern Scioux, have more than a thousand lodges. They do not use canoes, nor cultivate the earth, nor gather wild rice. They remain generally on the prairies which are between the Upper Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and live entirely by the chase. The Scioux generally say they have three souls, and that after death, that which has done well goes to the warm country, that which has done evil to the cold regions, and the other guards the body. Polygamy is common among them. They are very jealous, and sometimes fight in duel for their wives. They manage the bow admirably, and have been seen several times to kill ducks on the wing. They make their lodges of a number of buffalo skins interlaced and sewed, and carry them wherever they go. They are all great smokers, but their manner of smoking differs from that of other Indians. There are some Scioux who swallow all the smoke of the tobacco, and others who, after having kept it some time in their mouth, cause it to issue from the nose. In each lodge there are usually two or three men with their families.

On the third of October, they received at the fort several Scioux, among whom was Wahkan-tape, chief of the village. Soon two Canadians arrived who had been hunting, and who had been robbed by the Scioux of the East, who had raised their guns against the establishment which M. Le Sueur had made on Blue Earth river.

On the fourteenth the fort was finished and named Fort L'Huilier, and on the twenty-second two Canadians were sent out to invite the Ayavois and Otoctatas to come and establish a village near the fort, because these Indians are industrious and accustomed to cultivate the earth, and they hoped to get provisions from them, and to make them work in the mines.

On the twenty-fourth, six Scioux Oujalespoitons wished to go into the fort, but were told that they did not receive men who had killed Frenchmen. This is the term used when they have insulted them. The next day they came to the lodge of Le Sueur to beg him to have pity on them. They wished, according to custom, to weep over his head and make him a present of packs of beavers, which he refused. He told them he was surprised that people who had robbed should come to him; to which they replied that they had heard it said that two Frenchmen had been robbed, but none from their village had been present at that wicked action.

Le Sueur answered, that he knew it was the Mendeucantons and not the Oujalespoitons; "but," continued he, "you are Scioux; it is the Scioux who have robbed me, and if I were to follow your manner of acting I should break your heads; for is it not true, that when a stranger (it is thus they call the Indians who are not Scioux) has insulted a Scioux, Mendeucanton, Oujalespoitons, or others—all the villages revenge upon the first one they meet?"

As they had nothing to answer to what he said to them, they wept and repeated, according to custom, "Ouacchisson! ouacpānimanabo!" Le Sueur told them to cease crying, and added that the French had good hearts, and that they had come into the country to have pity on them. At the same time he made them a present, saying to them, "Carry back your beavers and say to all the Scioux, that they will have from me no more powder or lead, and they will no longer smoke any long pipe until they have made satisfaction for robbing the Frenchman.

The same day the Canadians, who had been sent off on the 22d, arrived without having found the road which led to the Ayavois and Otoctatas. On the 25th, Le Sueur went to the river with three canoes, which he filled with green and blue earth. It is taken from the hills near which are very abundant mines of copper, some of which was worked at Paris in 1696, by L'Huilier, one of the chief collectors of the king. Stones were also found there which would be curious, if worked.

On the ninth of November, eight Mantanton Scioux arrived, who had been sent by their chiefs to say that the Mendeucantons were still at their lake on the east of the Mississippi, and they could not come for a long time; and that for a single village which had no good sense, the others ought not to bear the punishment; and that they were willing to make reparation if they knew how. Le Sueur replied that he was glad that they had a disposition to do so.

On the 15th the two Mantanton Scioux, who had been sent expressly to say that all of the Scioux of the east, and part of those of the west, were joined together to come to the French, because they had heard that the Christianaux and the Assinipoils were making war on them. These two nations dwell above the fort on the east side, more than eighty leagues on the Upper Mississippi.

The Assinipoils speak Scioux, and are certainly of that nation. It is only a few years since that they became enemies. The enmity thus originated: The Christianaux, having the use of arms before the Scioux, through the English at Hudson's Bay, they constantly warred upon the Assinipoils, who were their nearest neighbors. The latter, being weak, sued for peace, and to render it more lasting, married the Christianaux women. The other Scioux, who had not made the compact, continued the war; and, seeing some Christianaux with the Assinipoils, broke their heads. The Christianaux furnished the Assinipoils with arms and merchandise.

On the 16th the Scioux returned to their village, and it was reported that the Ayavois and Otoctatas were gone to establish themselves towards the Missouri River, near the Maha, who dwell in that region. On the 26th the Mantantons and Onjalespoitons arrived at the fort; and, after they had encamped in the woods, Wihkantape came to beg Le Sueur to go to his lodge. He there found sixteen men with women and children, with their faces daubed with black. In the middle of the lodge were several buffalo skins which were sewed for a carpet. After motioning him to sit down, they wept for the fourth of an hour, and the chief gave him some wild rice to eat (as was their custom), putting the first three spoonful to his mouth. After which, he said all present were relatives of Tioscate, whom Le Sueur took to Canada in 1695, and who died there in 1696.

At the mention of Tioscate they began to weep again, and wipe their tears and heads upon the shoulders of Le Sueur. Then Wihkantape again spoke, and said that Tioscate begged him to forget the insult done to the Frenchmen by the Mendeoucantons, and take pity on his brethren by giving them powder and balls whereby they could defend themselves, and gain a living for their wives and children, who languish in a country full of game, because they had not the means of killing them. "Look," added the chief, "Behold thy children, thy brethren, and thy sisters; it is to thee to see whether thou wishest them to die. They will live if thou givest them powder and ball; they will die if thou refusest."

Le Sueur granted them their request, but as the Scioux never answer on the spot, especially in matters of importance, and as he had to speak to them about his establishment he went out of the lodge without saying a word. The chief and all those within followed him as far as the door of the fort; and when he had gone in, they went around it three times, crying with all their strength, "Atheouaman!" that is to say, "Father, have pity on us." [Ate unyampi, means Our Father.]

The next day, he assembled in the fort the principal men of both villages; and as it is not possible to subdue the Scioux or to hinder them from going to war, unless it be by inducing them to cultivate the earth, he said to them that if they wished to render themselves worthy of the protection of the king, they must abandon their erring life, and form a village near his dwelling, where they would be shielded from the insults of of their enemies; and that they might be happy and not hungry, he would give them all the corn necessary to plant a large piece of ground; that the king, their and his chief, in sending him, had forbidden him to purchase beaver skins, knowing that this kind of hunting separates them and exposes them to their enemies; and that in consequence of this he had come to establish himself on Blue River and vicinity, where they had many times assured him were many kinds of beasts, for the skins of which he would give them all things necessary; that they ought to reflect that they could not do without French goods, and that the only way not to want them was, not to go to war with our allied nations.

As it is customary with the Indians to accompany their word with a present proportioned to the affair treated of, he gave them fifty pounds of powder, as many balls, six guns, ten axes, twelve armful of tobacco, and a hatchet pipe.

On the first of December, the Mantantons invited Le Sueur to a great feast. Of four of their lodges they had made one, in which were one hundred men seated around, and every one his dish before him. After the meal, Wihkantape, the chief, made them all smoke, one after another, in the hatchet pipe which had been given them. He then made a present to Le Sueur of a slave and a sack of wild rice, and said to him, showing him his men: "Behold the remains of this great village, which thou hast aforetimes seen so numerous! All the others have been killed in war; and the few men whom thou seest in this lodge, accept the present thou hast made them, and are resolved to obey the great chief of all nations, of whom thou hast spoken to us. Thou oughtest not to regard us as Scioux, but as French, and instead of saying the Scioux are miserable, and have no mind, and are fit for nothing but to rob and steal from the French, thou shalt say my brethren are miserable and have no mind, and we must try to procure some for them. They rob us, but I will take care that they do not lack iron, that is to say, all kinds of goods. If thou dost this, I assure thee that in a little time the Mantantons will become Frenchmen, and they will have none of those vices, with which thou reproachest us."

Having finished his speech, he covered his face with his garment, and the others imitated him. They wept over their companions who had died in war, and chanted an adieu to their country in a tone so gloomy, that one could not keep from partaking of their sorrow.

Wahkantape then made them smoke again, and distributed the presents, and said that he was going to the Mendeoucantons, to inform them of the resolution, and invite them to do the same.

On the twelfth, three Mendeoucauton chiefs, and a large number of Indians of the same village, arrived at the fort, and the next day gave satisfaction for robbing the Frenchmen. They brought four hundred pounds of beaver skins, and promised that the summer following, after their canoes were built and they had gathered their wild rice, that they would come and establish themselves near the French. The same day they returned to their village east of the Mississippi.

The above catalogue of villages concludes the extract that La Harpe has made from Le Sueur's journal.

In the narrative of Major Long's second expedition, there are just as many villages of the Gens du Lac, or Mdewakantonwan Scioux mentioned, though the names are different. After leaving the Mille Lac region, the divisions evidently were different, and the villages known by new names.

Charlevoix, who visited the valley of the Lower Mississippi in 1722, says that Le Sueur spent a winter in his fort on the banks of the Blue Earth, and that in the following April he went up to the mine, about a mile above. In twenty-two days they obtained more than thirty thousand pounds of the substance, four thousand of which were selected and sent to France.

On the tenth of February, 1702, Le Sueur came back to the post on the Gulf of Mexico, and found D'Iberville absent, who, however, arrived on the eighteenth of the next month, with a ship from France, loaded with supplies. After a few weeks, the Governor of Louisiana sailed again for the old country, Le Sueur being a fellow passenger.

On board of the ship, D'Iberville wrote a memorial upon the Mississippi valley, with suggestions for carrying on commerce therein, which contains many facts furnished by Le Sueur. A copy of the manuscript was in possession of the Historical Society of Minnesota, from which are the following extracts:

"If the Sioux remain in their own country, they are useless to us, being too distant. We could have no commerce with them except that of the beaver. M. Le Sueur, who goes to France to give an account of this country, is the proper person to make these movements. He estimates the Sioux at four thousand families, who could settle upon the Missouri.

"He has spoken to me of another which he calls the Mahas, composed of more than twelve hundred families. The Ayooones (Ioways) and the Octoetatas, their neighbors, are about three hundred families. They occupy the lands between the Mississippi and the Missouri, about one hundred leagues from the Illinois. These savages do not know the use of arms, and a descent might be made upon them in a river, which is beyond the Wabash on the west. * * *

"The Assinibonol, Quenistinos, and people of the north, who are upon the rivers which fall into the Mississippi, and trade at Fort Nelson (Hudson Bay), are about four hundred. We could prevent them from going there if we wish."

"In four or five years we can establish a commerce with these savages of sixty or eighty thousand buffalo skins; more than one hundred deer skins, which will produce, delivered in France, more than two million four hundred thousand livres yearly. One might obtain for a buffalo skin four or five pounds of wool, which sells for twenty sous, two pounds of coarse hair at ten sous.

"Besides, from smaller peltries, two hundred thousand livres can be made yearly."

In the third volume of the "History and Statistics of the Indian Tribes," prepared under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian affairs, by Mr. Schoolcraft, a manuscript, a copy of which was in possession of General Cass, is referred to as containing the first enumeration of the Indians of the Mississippi Valley. The following was made thirty-four years earlier by D'Herville:

"The savage tribes located in the places I have marked out, make it necessary to establish three posts on the Mississippi, one at the Arkansas, another at the Wabash (Ohio), and the third at the Missouri. At each post it would be proper to have an officer with a detachment of ten soldiers with a sergeant and corporal. All Frenchmen should be allowed to settle there with their families, and trade with the Indians, and they might establish tanneries for properly dressing the buffalo and deer skins for transportation.

"No Frenchman shall be allowed to follow the Indians on their hunts, as it tends to keep them hunters, as is seen in Canada, and when they are in the woods, they do not desire to become tillers of the soil. * * * * *

"I have said nothing in this memoir of which I have not personal knowledge or the most reliable sources. The most of what I propose is founded upon personal reflection in relation to what might be done for the defence and advancement of the colony. * * * * *

* * * It will be absolutely necessary that the king should define the limits of this country in relation to the government of Canada. It is important that the commandant of the Mississippi should have a report of those who inhabit the rivers that fall into the Mississippi, and principally those of the river Illinois.

"The Canadians intimate to the savages that they ought not to listen to us but to the governor of Canada, who always speaks to them with large presents, that the governor of Mississippi is mean and never sends them any thing. This is true, and what I cannot do. It is imprudent to accustom the savages to be spoken to by presents, for, with so many, it would cost the king more than the revenue derived from the trade. When they come to us, it will be necessary to bring them in subjection, make them no presents, and compel them to do what we wish, as if they were Frenchmen.

"The Spaniards have divided the Indians into parties on this point, and we can do the same. When one nation does wrong, we can cease to trade with them, and threaten to draw down the hostility of other Indians. We rectify the difficulty by having missionaries, who will bring them into obedience secretly.

"The Illinois and Mascoutens have detained the French canoes they find upon the Mississippi, saying that the governors of Canada have given them permission. I do not know whether this is so, but if true, it follows that we have not the liberty to send any one on the Mississippi.

"M. Le Sueur would have been taken if he had not been the strongest. Only one of the canoes he sent to the Sioux was plundered." * * *

Penicaut's account varies in some particulars from that of La Harpe's. He calls the Mahikahto Green River instead of Blue and writes: "We took our route by its mouth and ascended it forty leagues, when we found another river falling into the Saint Pierre, which we entered. We called this the Green River because it is of that color by reason of a green earth which loosening itself from from the copper mines, becomes dissolved and makes it green.

"A league up this river, we found a point of land a quarter of a league distant from the woods, and it was upon this point that M. Le Sueur resolved to build his fort, because we could not go any higher on account of the ice, it being the last day of September. Half of our people went hunting whilst the others worked on the fort. We killed four hundred buffaloes, which were our provisions for the winter, and which we placed upon scaffolds in our fort, after having skinned and cleaned and quartered them. We also made cabins in the fort, and a magazine to keep our goods. After having drawn up our shallop within the inclosure of the fort, we spent the winter in our cabins.

"When we were working in our fort in the beginning seven French traders from Canada took refuge there. They had been pillaged and stripped naked by the Sioux, a wandering nation living only by hunting and plundering. Among these seven persons there was a Canadian gentleman of Le Sueur's acquaintance, whom he recognized at once, and gave him some clothes, as he did also to all the rest, and whatever else was necessary for them. They remained with us during the entire winter at our fort, where we had not food enough for all, except buffalo meat which we had not even salt to eat with. We had a good deal of trouble the first two weeks in accustoming ourselves to it, having fever and diarrhoea and becoming so tired of it as to hate the smell. But by degrees our bodies became adapted to it so well that at the end of six weeks there was not one of us who could not eat six pounds of meat a day, and drink four bowls of broth. As soon as we were accustomed to this kind of living it made us very fat, and then there was no more sickness.

"When spring arrived we went to work in the copper mine. This was the beginning of April of this year [1701.] We took with us twelve laborers and four hunters. This mine was situated about three-quarters of a league from our post. We took from the mine in twenty days more than twenty thousand pounds weight of ore, of which we only selected four thousand pounds of the finest, which M. Le Sueur, who was a very good judge of it, had carried to the fort, and which has since been sent to France, though I have not learned the result.

"This mine is situated at the beginning of a very long mountain, which is upon the bank of the river, so that boats can go right to the mouth of the mine itself. At this place is the green earth, which is a foot and a half in thickness, and above it is a layer of earth as firm and hard as stone, and black and burnt like coal by the exhalation from the mine. The copper is scratched out with a knife. There are no trees upon this mountain. * * * After twenty-two days' work, we returned to our fort. When the Sioux, who belong to the nation of savages who pillaged the Canadians, came they brought us merchandize of furs.

"They had more than four hundred beaver robes, each robe made of nine skins sewed together. M. Le Sueur purchased these and many other skins which he bargained for, in the week he traded with the savages. * * * We sell in return wares which come very dear to the buyers, especially tobacco from Brazil, in the proportion of a hundred crowns the pound; two little horn-handled knives, and four leaden bullets are equal to ten crowns in exchange for skins; and so with the rest.

"In the beginning of May, we launched our shallop in the water, and loaded it with green earth that had been taken out of the river, and with the furs we had traded for, of which we had three canoes full. M. Le Sueur before going held council with M. D'Evaque [or Eraque] the Canadian gentleman, and the three great chiefs of the Sioux, three brothers, and told them that as he had to return to the sea, he desired them to live in peace with M. D'Evaque, whom he left in command at Fort L'Huillier, with twelve Frenchmen. M. Le Sueur made a considerable present to the three brothers, chiefs of the savages, desiring them to never abandon the French. Afterward we the twelve men whom he had chosen to go down to the sea with him embarked. In setting out, M. Le Sueur promised to M. D'Evaque and the twelve Frenchmen who remained with him to guard the fort, to send up munitions of war from the Illinois country as soon as he should arrive there; which he did, for on getting there he sent off to him a canoe loaded with two thousand pounds of lead and powder, with three of our people in charge."

Le Sueur arrived at the French fort on the Gulf of Mexico in safety, and in a few weeks, in the spring of 1701, sailed for France, with his kinsman, D'Iberville, the first governor of Louisiana.

In the spring of the next year (1702) D'Evaque came to Mobile and reported to D'Iberville, who had come back from France, that he had been attacked by the Foxes and Maskoutens, who killed three Frenchmen who were working near Fort L'Huillier, and that, being out of powder and lead, he had been obliged to conceal the goods which were left and abandon the post. At the Wisconsin River he had met Juchereau, formerly criminal judge in Montreal, with thirty-five men, on his way to establish a tannery for buffalo skins at the Wabash, and that at the Illinois he met the canoe of supplies sent by Bienville, D'Iberville's brother.

La Motte Cadillac, in command at Detroit, in a letter written on August 31st, 1703, alludes to Le Sueur's expedition in these words: "Last year they sent Mr. Boudor, a Montreal merchant, into the country of the Sioux to join Le Sueur. He succeeded so well in that journey he transported thither twenty-five or thirty thousand pounds of merchandize with which to trade in all the country of the Outawas. This proved to him an unfortunate investment, as he has been robbed of a part of the goods by the Outagamies. The occasion of the robbery by one of our own allies was as follows. I speak with a full knowledge of the facts as they occurred while I was at Michillimackinac. From time immemorial our allies have been at war with the Sioux, and on my arrival there in conformity to the order of M. Frontenac, the most able man who has ever come into Canada, I attempted to negotiate a truce between the Sioux and all our allies. Succeeding in this negotiation I took the occasion to turn their arms against the Iroquois with whom we were then at war, and soon after I effected a treaty of peace between the Sioux and the French and their allies which lasted two years.

"At the end of that time the Sioux came, in great numbers, to the villages of the Miami, under pretense of ratifying the treaty. They were well received by the Miami, and, after spending several days in their villages, departed, apparently perfectly satisfied with their good reception, as they certainly had every reason to be.

"The Miami, believing them already far distant, slept quietly; but the Sioux, who had premeditated the attack, returned the same night to the principal village of the Miami, where most of the tribe were congregated, and, taking them by surprise, slaughtered nearly three thousand (?) and put the rest to flight.

"This perfectly infuriated all the nations. They came with their complaints, begging me to join with them and exterminate the Sioux. But the war we then had on our hands did not permit it, so it became necessary to play the orator in a long harangue. In conclusion I advised them to 'weep their dead, and wrap them up, and leave them to sleep coldly till the day of vengeance should come;' telling them we must sweep the land on this side of the Iroquois, as it was necessary to extinguish even their memory, after which the allied tribes could more easily avenge the atrocious deed that the Sioux had just committed upon them. In short, I managed them so well that the affair was settled in the manner that I proposed.

"But the twenty-five permits still existed, and the cupidity of the French induced them to go among the Sioux to trade for beaver. Our allies complained bitterly of this, saying it was unjust-ice to them, as they had taken up arms in our quarrel against the Iroquois, while the French traders were carrying munitions of war to the Sioux to enable them to kill the rest of our allies as they had the Miamis.

"I immediately informed M. Frontenac, and M. Champigny having read the communication, and commanded that an ordinance be published at Montreal forbidding the traders to go into the country of the Sioux for the purpose of traffic under penalty of a thousand francs fine, the confiscation of the goods, and other arbitrary penalties. The ordinance was sent to me and faithfully executed. The same year [1699] I descended to Quebec, having asked to be relieved. Since that time, in spite of this prohibition, the French have continued to trade with the Sioux, but not without being subject to affronts and indignities from our allies themselves which bring dishonor on the French name. * * * I do not consider it best any longer to allow the traders to carry on commerce with the Sioux, under any pretext whatever, especially as M. Boudor has just been robbed by the Fox nation, and M. Jucheraux has given a thousand crowns, in goods, for the right of passage through the country of the allies to his habitation.

"The allies say that Le Sueur has gone to the Sioux on the Mississippi; that they are resolved to oppose him, and if he offers any resistance they will not be answerable for the consequences. It would be well, therefore, to give Le Sueur warning by the Governor of Mississippi.

"The Sauteurs [Chippeways] being friendly with the Sioux wished to give passage through their country to M. Boudor and others, permitting them to carry arms and other munitions of war to this nation; but the other nations being opposed to it, differences have arisen between them which have resulted in the robbery of M. Boudor. This has given occasion to the Sauteurs to make an outbreak upon the Sacs and Foxes, killing thirty or forty of them. So there is war among the people."

After the Fox Indians drove away Le Sueur's men, in 1702, from the Makahto, or Blue Earth river, the merchants of Montreal and Quebec did not encourage trade with the tribes beyond Mackinaw.

D'Aigreult, a French officer, sent to inspect that post, in the summer of 1708, reported that he arrived there, on the 19th of August, and found there but fourteen or fifteen Frenchmen. He also wrote: "Since there are now only a few wanderers at Michilimackinac, the greater part of the furs of the savages of the north goes to the English trading posts on Hudson's Bay. The Outawas are unable to make this trade by themselves, because the northern savages are timid, and will not come near them, as they have often been plundered. It is, therefore, necessary that the French be allowed to seek these northern tribes at the mouth of their own river, which empties into Lake Superior."

Louis de la Porte, the Sieur De Louvigny, in 1690, accompanied by Nicholas Perrot, with a detachment of one hundred and seventy Canadians and Indians, came to Mackinaw, and until 1691 was in command, when he was recalled.

In 1712, Father Joseph J. Marest the Jesuit missionary wrote, "If this country ever needs M. Louvigny it is now; the savages say it is absolutely necessary that he should come for the safety of the country, to unite the tribes and to defend those whom the war has caused to return to Michilimacinae. * * * * *

I do not know what course the Pottawatomies will take, nor even what course they will pursue who are here, if M. Louvigny does not come, especially if the Foxes were to attack them or us."

The next July, M. Lignery urged upon the authorities the establishment of a garrison of trained soldiers at Mackinaw, and the Intendant of Canada wrote to the King of France:

"Michilimackinac might be re-established, without expense to his Majesty, either by surrendering the trade of the post to such individuals as will obligate themselves to pay all the expenses of twenty-two soldiers and two officers; to furnish munitions of war for the defense of the fort, and to make presents to the savages.

"Or the expenses of the post might be paid by the sale of permits, if the King should not think proper to grant an exclusive commerce. It is absolutely necessary to know the wishes of the King concerning these two propositions; and as M. Lignery is at Michilimackinac, it will not be any greater injury to the colony to defer the re-establishment of this post, than it has been for eight or ten years past."

The war with England ensued, and in April, 1713, the treaty of Utrecht was ratified. France had now more leisure to attend to the Indian tribes of the West.

Early in 1711, Mackinaw was re-occupied, and on the fourteenth of March, 1716, an expedition under Lieutenant Louvigny, left Quebec. His arrival at Mackinaw, where he had been long expected, gave confidence to the voyageurs, and friendly Indians, and with a force of eight hundred men, he proceeded against the Foxes in Wisconsin. He brought with him two pieces of cannon and a grenade mortar, and besieged the fort of the Foxes, which he stated contained five hundred warriors, and three thousand men, a declaration which can scarcely be credited. After three days of skirmishing, he prepared to mine the fort, when the Foxes capitulated.

The paddles of the birch bark canoes and the gay songs of the voyageurs now began to be heard once more on the waters of Lake Superior and its tributaries. In 1717, the post erected by Du Luth, on Lake Superior near the northern boundary of Minnesota, was re-occupied by Lt. Robertel de la Noue.

In view of the troubles among the tribes of the northwest, in the month of September, 1718, Captain St. Pierre, who had great influence with the Indians of Wisconsin and Minnesota, was sent with Ensign Linetot and some soldiers to re-occupy La Pointe on Lake Superior, now Bayfield, in the northwestern part of Wisconsin. The chiefs of the band there, and at Keweenaw, had threatened war against the Foxes, who had killed some of their number.

When the Jesuit Charlevoix returned to France after an examination of the resources of Canada and Louisiana, he urged that an attempt should be made to reach the Pacific Ocean by an inland route, and suggested that an expedition should proceed from the mouth of the Missouri and follow that stream, or that a post should be established among the Sioux which should be the point of departure. The latter was accepted, and in 1722 an allowance was made by the French Government, of twelve hundred livres, for two Jesuit missionaries to accompany those who should establish the new post. D'Avagour, Superintendent of Missions, in May, 1723, requested the authorities to grant a separate canoe for the conveyance of the goods of the proposed mission, and as it was necessary to send a commandant to persuade the Indians to receive the missionaries, he recommended Sieur Pachot, an officer of experience.

A dispatch from Canada to the French government, dated October 14, 1723, announced that Father de la Classe, Superior of the Jesuits, expected that, the next spring, Father Guymoneau, and another missionary from Paris, would go to the Sioux, but that they had been hindered by the Sioux a few months before killing seven Frenchmen, on their way to Louisiana. The aged Jesuit, Joseph J. Marest, who had been on Lake Pepin in 1689 with Perrot, and was now in Montreal, said that it was the wandering Sioux who had killed the French, but he thought the stationary Sioux would receive Christian instruction.

The hostility of the Foxes had also prevented the establishment of a fort and mission among the Sioux.

On the seventh of June, 1726, peace was concluded by De Lignery with the Sauks, Foxes, and Winnebagoes at Green Bay; and Linetot, who had succeeded Saint Pierre in command at La Pointe, was ordered, by presents and the promise of a missionary, to endeavor to detach the Dakotas from their alliance with the Foxes. At this time Linetot made arrangements for peace between the Ojibways and Dakotas, and sent two Frenchmen to dwell in the villages of the latter, with a promise that, if they ceased to fight the Ojibways, they should have regular trade, and a "black robe" reside in their country.

Traders and missionaries now began to prepare for visiting the Sioux, and in the spring of 1727 the Governor of Canada wrote that the fathers, appointed for the Sioux mission, desired a case of mathematical instruments, a universal astronomical dial, a spirit level, chain and stakes, and a telescope of six or seven feet tube.

On the sixteenth of June, 1727, the expedition for the Sioux country left Montreal in charge of the Sieur de la Perriere who was son of the distinguished and respected Canadian, Pierre Boucher, the Governor of Three Rivers.

La Perriere had served in Newfoundland and been associated with Hertel de Rouville in raids into New England, and gained an unenviable notoriety as the leader of the savages, while Rouville led the French in attacks upon towns like Haverhill, Massachusetts, where the Indians exultingly killed the Puritan pastor, scalped his loving wife, and dashed out his infant's brains against a rock. He was accompanied by his brother and other relatives. Two Jesuit fathers, De Gonor and Pierre Michel Guignas, were also of the party.

In Shea's "Early French Voyages" there was printed, for the first time, a letter from Father Guignas, from the Brevoort manuscripts, written on May 29, 1728, at Fort Beauharnois, on Lake Pepin, which contains facts of much interest.

He writes: "The Scioux convoy left the end of Montreal Island on the 16th of the month of June last year, at 11 A. M., and reached Michili-mackinac the 22d of the month of July. This post is two hundred and fifty-one leagues from Montreal, almost due west, at 45 degrees 46 minutes north latitude.

"We spent the rest of the month at this post, in the hope of receiving from day to day some news from Montreal, and in the design of strengthening ourselves against the alleged extreme difficulties of getting a free passage through the Foxes. At last, seeing nothing, we set out on our march, the first of the month of August, and after seventy-three leagues quite pleasant sail along the northerly side of Lake Michigan, running to the southeast, we reached the Bay [Green] on the 8th of the same month, at 5:30 p. m. This post is at 44 degrees 43 minutes north latitude.

"We stopped there two days, and on the 11th in the morning, we embarked, in a very great impatience to reach the Foxes. On the third day after our departure from the bay, quite late in the afternoon, in fact somewhat in the night, the chiefs of the Puans [Winnebagoes] came out three leagues from their village to meet the French, with their peace calumets and some bear meat as a refreshment, and the next day we were received by that small nation, amid several discharges of a few guns, and with great demonstrations.

"They asked us with so good a grace to do them the honor to stay some time with them that we granted them the rest of the day from noon, and the following day. There may be in all the village, sixty to eighty men, but all the men and women of very tall stature, and well made. They are on the bank of a very pretty little lake, in a most agreeable spot for its situation and the goodness of the soil, nineteen leagues from the bay and eight leagues from the Foxes.

"Early the next morning, the 15th of the month of August, the convoy preferred to continue its route, with quite pleasant weather, but a storm coming on in the afternoon, we arrived quite wet, still in the rain, at the cabins of the Foxes, a nation so much dreaded, and really so little to be dreaded. From all that we could see, it is composed of two hundred men at most, but there is a perfect hive of children, especially boys from ten to fourteen years old, well formed.

"They are cabins on a little eminence on the bank of a small river that bears their name, extremely tortuous or winding, so that you are constantly boxing the compass. Yet it is apparently quite wide, with a chain of hills on both sides, but there is only one miserable little channel amid this extent of apparent bed, which is a kind of marsh full of rushes and wild rice of almost impenetrable thickness. They have nothing but mere bark cabins, without any kind of palisade or other fortification. As soon as the French canoes touched their shore they ran down with their peace calumets, lighted in spite of the rain, and all smoked.

"We stayed among them the rest of this day, and all the next, to know what were their designs and ideas as to the French post among the Sioux. The Sieur Reaume, interpreter of Indian languages at the Bay, acted efficiently there, and with devotion to the King's service. Even if my testimony, Sir, should be deemed not impartial, I must have the honor to tell you that Rev. Father Chardon, an old missionary, was of very great assistance there, and the presence of three missionaries reassured these cut-throats and assassins of the French more than all the speeches of the best orators could have done.

"A general council was convened in one of the cabins, they were addressed in decided friendly terms, and they replied in the same way. A small present was made to them. On their side they gave some quite handsome dishes, lined with dry meat.

On the following Sunday, 17th of the month of August, very early in the morning, Father Chardon set out, with Sieur Reaume, to return to the Bay, and the Sioux expedition, greatly rejoiced to have so easily got over this difficulty, which had everywhere been represented as so insurmountable, got under way to endeavor to reach its journey's end.

"Never was navigation more tedious than what we subsequently made from uncertainty as to our course. No one knew it, and we got astray every moment on water and on land for want of a guide and pilots. We kept on, as it were feeling our way for eight days, for it was only on the ninth, about three o'clock p. m., that we arrived, by accident, believing ourselves still far off, at the portage of the Ouisconsin, which is forty-five leagues from the Foxes, counting all the twists and turns of this abominable river.

This portage is half a league in length, and half of that is a kind of marsh full of mud.

"The Ouisconsin is quite a handsome river, but far below what we had been told, apparently, as those who gave the description of it in Canada saw it only in the high waters of spring. It is a shallow river on a bed of quicksand, which forms bars almost everywhere, and these often change place. Its shores are either steep, bare mountains or low points with sandy base. Its course is from northeast to southwest. From the portage to its mouth in the Mississippi, I estimated thirty-eight leagues. The portage is at 43 deg. 24 min. north latitude.

"The Mississippi from the mouth of the Ouisconsin ascending, goes northwest. This beautiful river extends between two chains of high, bare and very sterile mountains, constantly a league, three-quarters of a league, or where it is narrowest, half a league apart. Its centre is occupied by a chain of well wooded islands, so that regarding from the heights above, you would think you saw an endless valley watered on the right and left by two large rivers; sometimes, too, you could discern no river. These islands are overflowed every year, and would be adapted to raising rice. Fifty-eight leagues from the mouth of the Ouisconsin, according to my calculation, ascending the Mississippi, is Lake Pepin, which is nothing else but the river itself, destitute of islands at that point, where it may be half a league wide. This river, in what I traversed of it, is shallow, and has shoals in several places, because its bed is moving sands, like that of the Ouisconsin.

"On the 17th of September, 1727, at noon, we reached this lake, which had been chosen as the bourne of our voyage. We planted ourselves on the shore about the middle of the north side, on a low point, where the soil is excellent. The wood is very dense there, but is already thinned in consequence of the rigor and length of the winter, which has been severe for the climate, for we are here on the parallel of 43 deg. 41 min. It is true that the difference of the winter is great compared to that of Quebec and Montreal, for all that some poor judges say.

"From the day after our landing we put our axes to the wood: on the fourth day following the fort was entirely finished. It is a square plat of one hundred feet, surrounded by pickets twelve feet long, with two good bastions. For so small a space there are large buildings quite distinct and not huddled together, each thirty, thirty-eight, and twenty-five feet long by sixteen feet wide.

"All would go well there if the spot were not inundated, but this year [1728], on the 15th of the month of April, we were obliged to camp out, and the water ascended to the height of two feet and eight inches in the houses, and it is idle to say that it was the quantity of snow that fell this year. The snow in the vicinity had melted long before, and there was only a foot and a half from the 8th of February to the 15th of March; you could not use snow-shoes.

"I have great reason to think that this spot is inundated more or less every year; I have always thought so, but they were not obliged to believe me, as old people who said that they had lived in this region fifteen or twenty years declared that it was never overflowed. We could not enter our much-devastated houses until the 30th of April, and the disorder is even now scarcely repaired.

"Before the end of October [1727] all the houses were finished and furnished, and each one found himself tranquilly lodged at home. They then thought only of going out to explore the hills and rivers and to see those herds of all kinds of deer of which they tell such stories in Canada. They must have retired, or diminished greatly, since the time the old voyageurs left the country; they are no longer in such great numbers, and are killed with difficulty.

"After beating the field, for some time, all re-assembled at the fort, and thought of enjoying a little the fruit of their labors. On the 4th of November we did not forget it was the General's birthday. Mass was said for him [Beaubarnois, Governor-General of Canada] in the morning, and they were well disposed to celebrate the day in the evening, but the tardiness of the pyrotechnists and the inconstancy of the weather caused them to postpone the celebration to the 14th of the same month, when they set off some very fine rockets and made the air ring with an hundred shouts of Vive le Roy! and Vive Charles de Beaubarnois! It was on this occasion that the wine of the Sioux was broached; it was par ex- cellence, although there are no wines here finer than in Canada.

"What contributed much to the amusement, was the terror of some cabins of Indians, who were at the time around the fort. When these poor people saw the fireworks in the air, and the stars fall from heaven, the women and children began to take flight, and the most courageous of the men to cry mercy, and implore us very earnestly to stop the surprising play of that wonderful medicine.

"As soon as we arrived among them, they assembled, in a few days, around the French fort to the number of ninety-five cabins, which might make in all one hundred and fifty men; for there are at most two men in their portable cabins of dressed skins, and in many there is only one. This is all we have seen except a band of about sixty men, who came on the 26th of the month of February, who were of those nations called Sioux of the Prairies.

"At the end of November, the Indians set out for their winter quarters. They do not, indeed, go far, and we saw some of them all through the winter; but from the second of the month of April last, when some cabins repassed here to go in search of them, [he] sought them in vain, during a week, for more than sixty leagues of the Mississippi. He [La Perriere?] arrived yesterday without any tidings of them.

"Although I said above, that the Sioux were alarmed at the rockets, which they took for new phenomena, it must not be supposed from that they were less intelligent than other Indians we know. They seem to me more so; at least they are much gayer and open, apparently, and far more dextrous thieves, great dancers, and great medicine men. The men are almost all large and well made, but the women are very ugly and disgusting, which does not, however, check debauchery among them, and is perhaps an effect of it."

In the summer of 1728 the Jesuit De Genor left the fort on Lake Pepin, and, by way of Mackinaw, returned to Canada. The Foxes had now become very troublesome, and De Lignery and Beaujeu marched against their stronghold, to find they had retreated to the Mississippi River.

On the 12th of October, Boucherville, his brother Montbrun, a young cadet of enterprising spirit, the Jesuit Guignas, and other Frenchmen, eleven in all, left Fort Pepin to go to Canada, by way of the Illinois River. They were captured by the Mascoutens and Kickapoos, and detained at the river "Au Bœuf," which stream was probably the one mentioned by Le Sueur as twenty-two leagues above the Illinois River, although the same name was given by Hennepin to the Chipewewa River, just below Lake Pepin. They were held as prisoners, with the view of delivering them to the Foxes. The night before the delivery the Sieur Montbrun and his brother and another Frenchman escaped. Montbrun, leaving his sick brother in the Illinois country, journeyed to Canada and informed the authorities.

Boucherville and Guignas remained prisoners for several months, and the former did not reach Detroit until June, 1729. The account of expenditures made during his captivity is interesting as showing the value of merchandise at that time. It reads as follows:

"Memorandum of the goods that Monsieur de Boucherville was obliged to furnish in the service of the King, from the time of his detention among the Kickapoos, on the 12th of October, 1728, until his return to Detroit, in the year 1729, in the month of June. On arriving at the Kickapoo village, he made a present to the young men to secure their opposition to some evil minded old warriors—

In a letter, written by a priest, at New Orleans, on July 12, 1730, is the following exaggerated account of the capture of Father Guignas: "We always felt a distrust of the Fox Indians, although they did not longer dare to undertake anything, since Father Guignas has detached from their alliance the tribes of the Kickapoos and Maskoutins. You know, my Reverend Father, that, being in Canada, he had the courage to penetrate even to the Sioux near the sources of the Mississippi, at the distance of eight hundred leagues from New Orleans and five hundred from Quebec. Obligated to abandon this important mission by the unfortunate result of the enterprise against the Foxes, he descended the river to repair to the Illinois. On the 15th of October in the year 1728 he was arrested when half way by the Kickapous and Maskoutins. For four months he was a captive among the Indians, where he had much to suffer and everything to fear. The time at last came when he was to be burned alive, when he was adopted by an old man whose family saved his life and procured his liberty.

"Our missionaries who are among the Illinois were no sooner acquainted with the situation than they procured him all the alleviation they were able. Everything which he received he employed to conciliate the Indians, and succeeded to the extent of engaging them to conduct him to the Illinois to make peace with the French and Indians of this region. Seven or eight months after this peace was concluded, the Maskoutins and Kickapous returned again to the Illinois country, and took back Father Guignas to spend the winter, from whence, in all probability, he will return to Canada."

In dispatches sent to France, in October, 1729, by the Canadian government, the following reference is made to Fort Beauharnois: "They agree that the fort built among the Scionx, on the border of Lake Pepin, appears to be badly situated on account of the freshets, but the Indians assure that the waters rose higher in 1728 than it ever did before. When Sieur de Laperriere located it at that place it was on the assurance of the Indians that the waters did not rise so high." In reference to the absence of Indians, is the following:

"It is very true that these Indians did leave shortly after on a hunting excursion, as they are in the habit of doing, for their own support and that of their families, who have only that means of livelihood, as they do not cultivate the soil at all. M. de Beauharnois has just been informed that their absence was occasioned only by having fallen in while hunting with a number of prairie Scionx, by whom they were invited to accompany them on a war expedition against the Mahas, which invitation they accepted, and returned only in the month of July following.

"The interests of religion, of the service, and of the colony, are involved in the maintenance of this establishment, which has been the more necessary as there is no doubt but the Foxes, when routed, would have found an asylum among the Scioux had not the French been settled there, and the docility and submission manifested by the Foxes can not be attributed to any cause except the attention entertained by the Scioux for the French, and the offers which the former made the latter, of which the Foxes were fully cognisant.

"It is necessary to retain the Scioux in these favorable dispositions, in order to keep the Foxes in check and counteract the measures they might adopt to gain over the Scioux, who will invariably reject their propositions so long as the French remain in the country, and their trading post shall continue there. But, despite all these advantages and the importance of preserving that establishment, M. de Beauharnois cannot take any steps until he has news of the French who asked his permission this summer to go up there with a canoe load of goods, and until assured that those who wintered there have not dismantled the fort, and that the Scioux continue in the same sentiments. Besides, it does not seem very easy, in the present conjuncture, to maintain that post unless there is a solid peace with the Foxes; on the other hand, the greatest portion of the traders, who applied in 1727 for the establishment of that post, have withdrawn, and will not send thither any more, as the rupture with the Foxes, through whose country it is necessary to pass in order to reach the Scioux in canoe, has led them to abandon the idea. But the one and the other case might be remedied. The Foxes will, in all probability, come or send next year to sue for peace; therefore, if it be granted to them on advantageous conditions, there need be no apprehension when going to the Sioux, and another company could be formed, less numerous than the first, through whom, or some responsible merchants able to afford the outfit, a new treaty could be made, whereby these difficulties would be soon obviated. One only trouble remains, and that is, to send a commanding and sub-officer, and some soldiers, up there, which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of good order at that post; the missionaries would not go there without a commandant. This article, which regards the service, and the expense of which must be on his majesty's account, obliges them to apply for orders. They will, as far as lies in their power, induce the traders to meet that expense, which will possibly amount to 1000 livres or 1500 livres a year for the commandant, and in proportion for the officer under him; but, as in the beginning of an establishment the expenses exceed the profits, it is improbable that any company of merchants will assume the outlay, and in this case they demand orders on this point, as well as his majesty's opinion as to the necessity of preserving so useful a post, and a nation which has already afforded proofs of its fidelity and attachment.

"These orders could be sent them by the way of Ile Royale, or by the first merchantmen that will sail for Quebec. The time required to receive intelligence of the occurrences in the Scioux country, will admit of their waiting for these orders before doing anything."

Sieur de la Jemeraye, a relative of Sieur de la Perriere Boucher, with a few French, during the troubles remained in the Sioux country. After peace was established with the Foxes, Legardeur Saint Pierre was in command at Fort Beauharnois, and Father Guignas again attempted to establish a Sioux mission. In a communication dated 12th of October, 1736, by the Canadian authorities is the following: "In regard to the Scioux, Saint Pierre, who commanded at that post, and Father Guignas, the missionary, have written to Sieur de Beauharnois on the tenth and eleventh of last April, that these Indians appeared well intentioned toward the French, and had no other fear than that of being abandoned by them. Sieur de Beauharnois annexes an extract of these letters, and although the Scioux seem very friendly, the result only can tell whether this fidelity is to be absolutely depended upon, for the unrestrained and inconsistent spirit which composes the Indian character may easily change it. They have not come over this summer as yet, but M. de la St. Pierre is to get them to do so next year, and to have an eye on their proceedings."

The reply to this communication from Louis

XV. dated Versailles, May 10th, 1737, was in these words: "As respects the Scionx, according to what the commandant and missionary at that post have written to Sieur de Beauharnois relative to the disposition of these Indians, nothing appears to be wanting on that point.

"But their delay in coming down to Montreal since the time they have promised to do so, must render their sentiments somewhat suspected, and nothing but facts can determine whether their fidelity can be absolutely relied on. But what must still further increase the uneasiness to be entertained in their regard is the attack on the convoy of M. de Verandrie, especially if this officer has adopted the course he had informed the Marquis de Beauharnois he should take to have revenge therefor."

The particulars of the attack alluded to will be found in the next chapter. Soon after this the Foxes again became troublesome, and the post on Lake Pepin was for a time abandoned by the French. A dispatch in 1741 uses this language: "The Marquis de Beauharnois' opinion respecting the war against the Foxes, has been the more readily approved by the Baron de Longueuil, Messieurs De la Chassaigne, La Corne, de Lignery, La Noue, and Duplessis-Fabert, whom he had assembled at his house, as it appears from all the letters that the Count has written for several years, that he has nothing so much at heart as the destruction of that Indian nation, which can not be prevailed on by the presents and the good treatment of the French, to live in peace, notwithstanding all its promises.

"Besides, it is notorious that the Foxes have a secret understanding with the Iroquois, to secure a retreat among the latter, in case they be obliged to abandon their villages. They have one already secured among the Sioux of the prairies, with whom they are allied; so that, should they be advised beforehand of the design of the French to wage war against them, it would be easy for them to retire to the one or the other before their passage could be intersected or themselves attacked in their villages."

In the summer of 1743, a deputation of the Sioux came down to Quebec, to ask that trade might be resumed. Three years after this, four Sioux chiefs came to Quebec, and asked that a commandant might be sent to Fort Beauharnois; which was not granted.

During the winter of 1745-6, De Lusignan visited the Sioux country, ordered by the government to hunt up the "coureurs des bois," and withdraw them from the country. They started to return with him, but learning that they would be arrested at Mackinaw, for violation of law, they ran away. While at the villages of the Sioux of the lakes and plains, the chiefs brought to this officer nineteen of their young men, bound with cords, who had killed three Frenchmen, at the Illinois. While he remained with them, they made peace with the Ojibways of La Pointe, with whom they had been at war for some time. On his return, four chiefs accompanied him to Montreal, to solicit pardon for their young braves.

The lessees of the trading-post lost many of their peltries that winter in consequence of a fire.

Reminiscences of St. Pierre's residence at Lake Pepin were long preserved. Carver, in 1766, "observed the ruins of a French factory, where, it is said, Captain St. Pierre resided, and carried on a great trade with the Nadouessies before the reduction of Canada."

Pike, in 1805, wrote in his journal: "Just below Pt. Le Sable, the French, who had driven the Renards [Foxes] from Wisconsin, and chased them up the Mississippi, built a stockade on this lake, as a barrier against the savages. It became a noted factory for the Sioux."

Early in the year 1728, two travelers met at the secluded post of Mackinaw, one was named De Gonor, a Jesuit Father, who with Guignas, had gone with the expedition, that the September before had built Fort Beauharnois on the shores of Lake Pepin, the other was Pierre Gualtier Varennes, the Sieur de la Verendrye the commander of the post on Lake Nipigon of the north shore of Lake Superior, and a relative of the Sieur de la Perriere, the commander at Lake Pepin.

Verendrye was the son of Rene Gualtier Varennes who for twenty-two years was the chief magistrate at Three Rivers, whose wife was Marie Boucher, the daughter of his predecessor whom he had married when she was twelve years of age. He became a cadet in 1697, and in 1701 accompanied an expedition to New England. The next year he was in Newfoundland and the year following he went to France, joined a regiment of Brittany and was in the conflict at Malplaquet when the French troops were defeated by the Duke of Marlborough. When he returned to Canada he was obliged to accept the position of ensign notwithstanding the gallant manner in which he had behaved. In time he became identified with the Lake Superior region. While at Lake Nipigon the Indians assured him that there was a communication largely by water to the Pacific Ocean. One, named Ochagachs, drew a rude map of the country, which is still preserved among the French archives. Pigeon River is marked thereon Mantohavagane, and the River St. Louis is marked R. fond du L. Superior, and the Indians appear to have passed from its headwaters to Rainy Lake. Upon the western extremity is marked the River of the West.

De Gonor conversed much upon the route to the Pacific with Verendrye, and promised to use his influence with the Canadian authorities to advance the project of exploration.

Charles De Beauharnois, the Governor of Canada, gave Verendrye a respectful hearing, and carefully examined the map of the region west of the great lakes, which had been drawn by Ochagachs (Otebaga), the Indian guide. Orders were soon given to fit out an expedition of fifty men. It left Montreal in 1731, under the conduct of his sons and nephew De la Jemeraye, he not joining the party till 1733, in consequence of the detentions of business.

In the autumn of 1731, the party reached Rainy Lake, by the Nantonagan, or Groselliers river, now called Pigeon. Father Messayer, who had been stationed on Lake Superior, at the Groselliers river, was taken as a spiritual guide. At the foot of Rainy Lake a post was erected and called Fort St. Pierre, and the next year, having crossed Minnietie, or Lake of the Woods, they established Fort St. Charles on its southwestern bank. Five leagues from Lake Winnipeg they established a post on the Assinaboine. An unpublished map of these discoveries by De la Jemeraye still exists at Paris. The river Winnipeg, called by them Maurepas, in honor of the minister of France in 1734, was protected by a fort of the same name.

About this time their advance was stopped by the exhaustion of supplies, but on the 12th of April, 1735, an arrangement was made for a second equipment, and a fourth son joined the expedition.

In June, 1736, while twenty-one of the expedition were camped upon an isle in the Lake of the Woods, they were surprised by a band of Sioux hostile to the French allies, the Cristinaux, and all killed. The island, upon this account, is called Massacre Island. A few days after, a party of five Canadian voyageurs discovered their dead bodies and scalped heads. Father Onneau, the missionary, was found upon one knee, an arrow in his head, his breast bare, his left hand touching the ground, and the right hand raised.

Among the slaughtered was also a son of Verendrye, who had a tomahawk in his back, and his body adorned with garters and bracelets of porcupine. The father was at the foot of the Lake of the Woods when he received the news of his son's murder, and about the same time heard of the death of his enterprising nephew, Dufrost de la Jemeraie, the son of his sister Marie Reine de Varennes, and brother of Madame Yonville, the foundress of the Hospitaliers at Montreal.

It was under the guidance of the latter that the party had, in 1731, mastered the difficulties of the Nantaouagon, or Groselliers river.

On the 3d of October, 1738, they built an advanced post, Fort La Reine, on the river Assiniboels, now Assiniboine, which they called St. Charles, and beyond was a branch called St. Pierre. These two rivers received the baptismal name of Verendrye, which was Pierre, and Governor Beauharnois, which was Charles. The post became the centre of trade and point of departure for explorations, either north or south.

It was by ascending the Assiniboine, and by the present trail from its tributary, Mouse river, they reached the country of the Mantanes, and in 1741, came to the upper Missouri, passed the Yellow Stone, and at length arrived at the Rocky Mountains. The party was led by the eldest son and his brother, the chevalier. They left the Lake of the Woods on the 29th of April, 1742, came in sight of the Rocky Mountains on the 1st of January, 1743, and on the 12th ascended them. On the route they fell in with the Beaux Hommes, Pioya, Petits Renards, and Arc tribes, and stopped among the Snake tribe, but could go no farther in a southerly direction, owing to a war between the Arcs and Snakes.

On the 19th of May, 1744, they had returned to the upper Missouri, and, in the country of the Petite Cerise tribe, they planted on an eminence a leaden plate of the arms of France, and raised a monument of stones, which they called Beauharnois. They returned to the Lake of the Woods on the 2d of July.

North of the Assiniboine they proceeded to Lake Dauphin, Swan's Lake, explored the river "Des Biches," and ascended even to the fork of the Saskatchewan, which they called Poskoiac. Two forts were subsequently established, one near Lake Dauphin and the other on the river "des Biches," called Fort Bourbon. The northern route, by the Saskatchewan, was thought to have some advantage over the Missouri, because there was no danger of meeting with the Spaniards.

Governor Beauharnois having been prejudiced against Verendrye by envious persons, De Noyelles was appointed to take command of the posts. During these difficulties, we find Sieur de la Verendrye, Jr., engaged in other duties. In August, 1747, he arrives from Mackinaw at Montreal, and in the autumn of that year he accompanies St. Pierre to Mackinaw, and brings back the convoy to Montreal. In February, 1748, with five Canadians, five Cristinaux, two Ottawas, and one Sauteur, he attacked the Mohawks near Schenectady, and returned to Montreal with two scalps, one that of a chief. On June 20th, 1748, it is recorded that Chevalier de la Verendrye departed from Montreal for the head of Lake Superior. Margry states that he perished at sea in November, 1764, by the wreck of the "Auguste."

Fortunately, Galissioniere the successor of Beauharnois, although deformed and insignificant in appearance, was fair minded, a lover of science, especially botany, and anxious to push discoveries toward the Pacific. Verendrye the father was restored to favor, and made Captain of the Order of St. Louis, and ordered to resume explorations, but he died on December 6th, 1749, while planning a tour up the Saskatchewan.

The Swedish Professor, Kalm, met him in Canada, not long before his decease, and had interesting conversations with him about the furrows on the plains of the Missouri, which he erroneously conjectured indicated the former abode of an agricultural people. These ruts are familiar to modern travelers, and may be only buffalo trails.

Father Coquard, who had been associated with Verendrye, says that they first met the Mantanes, and next the Brochets. After these were the Gros Ventres, the Crows, the Flat Heads, the Black Feet, and Dog Feet, who were established on the Missouri, even up to the falls, and that about thirty leagues beyond they found a narrow pass in the mountains.

Bougainville gives a more full account: he says: "He who most advanced this discovery was the Sieur de la Verandrie. He went from Fort la Reine to the Missouri. He met on the banks of this river the Mandans, or White Beards, who had seven villages with pine stockades, strengthened by a ditch. Next to these were the Kinongewiniris, or the Brochets, in three villages, and toward the upper part of the river were three villages of the Mahantas. All along the mouth of the Wabeik, or Shell River, were situated twenty-three villages of the Panis. To the southwest of this river, on the banks of the Ouanaradeba, or La Graisse, are the Hectanes or Snake tribe. They extend to the base of a chain of mountains which runs north northeast. South of this is the river Karoskion, or Cerise Pelee, which is supposed to flow to California.

"He found in the immense region watered by the Missouri, and in the vicinity of forty leagues, the Mahantas, the Owlinioek, or Beaux Hommes, four villages; opposite the Brochets the Black Feet, three villages of a hundred lodges each; opposite the Mandans are the Ospekakaerenousques, or Flat Heads, four villages; opposite the Panis are the Ares of Cristinaux, and Utasibaoutchatas of Assiniboel, three villages; following these the Makesch, or Little Foxes, two villages; the Piwassa, or great talkers, three villages; the Kakoschena, or Gens de la Pie, five villages; the Kiskipisounouini, or the Garter tribe, seven villages."

Galassoniere was succeeded by Jonquiere in the governorship of Canada, who proved to be a grasping, peevish, and very miserly person. For the sons of Verendrye he had no sympathy, and forming a clique to profit by their father's toils, he determined to send two expeditions toward the Pacific Ocean, one by the Missouri and the other by the Saskatchewan.

Father Coquard, one of the companions of Verendrye, was consulted as to the probability of finding a pass in the Rocky Mountains, through which they might, in canoes, reach the great lake of salt water, perhaps Puget's Sound.

The enterprise was at length confided to two experienced officers, Lamarque de Marin and Jacques Legardeur de Saint Pierre. The former was assigned the way, by the Missouri, and to the latter was given the more northern route; but Saint Pierre in some way excited the hostility of the Cristinaux, who attempted to kill him, and burned Fort la Reine. His lieutenant, Boucher de Niverville, who had been sent to establish a post toward the source of the Saskatchewan, failed on account of sickness. Some of his men, however, pushed on to the Rocky Mountains, and in 1753 established Fort Jonquiere. Henry says St. Pierre established Fort Bourbon.

In 1753, Saint Pierre was succeeded in the command of the posts of the West, by de la Corne, and sent to French Creek, in Pennsylvania. He had been but a few days there when he received a visit from Washington, just entering upon manhood, bearing a letter from Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia, complaining of the encroachments of the French.

Soon the clash of arms between France and England began, and Saint Pierre, at the head of the Indian allies, fell near Lake George, in September, 1755, in a battle with the English. After the seven years' war was concluded, by the treaty of Paris, the French relinquished all their posts in the Northwest, and the work begun by Verendrye, was, in 1805, completed by Lewis and Clarke; and the Northern Pacific Railway is fast approaching the passes of the Rocky Mountains, through the valley of the Yellow Stone, and from thence to the great land-locked bay of the ocean, Puget's Sound.

CHAPTER X.

EFFECT OF THE ENGLISH AND FRENCH WAR.

English Influence Increasing.—Le Duc Robbed at Lake Superior.—St. Pierre at Mackinaw.—Escape of Indian Prisoners.—La Ronde and Verendrye.—Influence of Sieur Marin.—St. Pierre Recalled from Winnipeg Region.—Interview with Washington.—Langlade Urges Attack Upon Troops of Braddock.—Saint Pierre Killed in Battle.—Marin's Boldness.—Rogers, a Partisan Ranger, Commands at Mackinaw.—At Ticonderoga.—French Deliver up the Posts in Canada.—Capt. Balfour Takes Possession of Mackinaw and Green Bay.—Lieut. Gorrell in Command at Green Bay.—Sioux Visit Green Bay.—Pennasha a French Trader Among the Sioux.—Treaty of Paris.

English influence produced increasing dissatisfaction among the Indians that were beyond Mackinaw. Not only were the voyageurs robbed and maltreated at Sault St. Marie and other points on Lake Superior, but even the commandant at Mackinaw was exposed to insolence, and there was no security anywhere.

On the twenty-third of August, 1747, Philip Le Duc arrived at Mackinaw from Lake Superior, stating that he had been robbed of his goods at Kamanistigoya, and that the Ojibways of the lake were favorably disposed toward the English. The Dakotahs were also becoming unruly in the absence of French officers.

In a few weeks after Le Duc's robbery, St. Pierre left Montreal to become commandant at Mackinaw, and Vercheres was appointed for the post at Green Bay. In the language of a document of the day, St. Pierre was "a very good officer, much esteemed among all the nations of those parts; none more loved and feared." On his arrival, the savages were so cross, that he advised that no Frenchman should come to trade.

By promptness and boldness, he secured the Indians who had murdered some Frenchmen, and obtained the respect of the tribes. While the three murderers were being conveyed in a canoe down the St. Lawrence to Quebec, in charge of a sergeant and seven soldiers, the savages, with characteristic cunning, though manacled, succeeded in killing or drowning the guard. Cutting their irons with an axe, they sought the woods, and escaped to their own country. "Thus," writes Galassoniere, in 1748, to Count Maurepas, was lost in a great measure the fruit of Sieur St. Pierre's good management, and of all the fatigue I endured to get the nations who surrendered these rascals to listen to reason."

On the twenty-first of June of the next year, La Ronde started to La Pointe, and Verendrye for West Sea, or Fon du Lac, Minnesota.

Under the influence of Sieur Marin, who was in command at Green Bay in 1753, peaceful relations were in a measure restored between the French and Indians.

As the war between England and France deepened, the officers of the distant French posts were called in and stationed nearer the enemy. Legardeur St. Pierre, was brought from the Lake Winnipeg region, and, in December, 1753, was in command of a rude post near Erie, Pennsylvania. Langlade, of Green Bay, Wisconsin, arrived early in July, 1755, at Fort Duquesne. With Beauyeu and De Lignery, who had been engaged in fighting the Fox Indians, he left that fort, at nine o'clock of the morning of the 9th of July, and, a little after noon, came near the English, who had halted on the south shore of the Monongahela, and were at dinner, with their arms stacked. By the urgent entreaty of Langlade, the western half-breed, Beauyeu, the officer in command ordered an attack, and Braddock was overwhelmed, and Washington was obliged to say, "We have been beaten, shamefully beaten, by a handful of Frenchmen."

Under Baron Dieskau, St. Pierre commanded the Indians, in September, 1755, during the campaign near Lake George, where he fell gallantly fighting the English, as did his commander. The Rev. Claude Coquard, alluding to the French defeat, in a letter to his brother, remarks:

"We lost, on that occasion, a brave officer, M. de St. Pierre, and had his advice, as well as that of several other Canadian officers, been followed, Jonckson [Johnson] was irretrievably destroyed.

and we should have been spared the trouble we have had this year."

Other officers who had been stationed on the borders of Minnesota also distinguished themselves during the French war. The Marquis Montcalm, in camp at Ticonderoga, on the twenty-seventh of July, 1757, writes to Vaudreuil, Governor of Canada:

"Lieutenant Marin, of the Colonial troops, who has exhibited a rare audacity, did not consider himself bound to halt, although his detachment of about four hundred men was reduced to about two hundred, the balance having been sent back on account of inability to follow. He carried off a patrol of ten men, and swept away an ordinary guard of fifty like a wafer; went up to the enemy's camp, under Fort Lydias (Edward), where he was exposed to a severe fire, and retreated like a warrior. He was unwilling to amuse himself making prisoners; he brought in only one, and thirty-two scalps, and must have killed many men of the enemy, in the midst of whose ranks it was neither wise nor prudent to go in search of scalps. The Indians generally all behaved well. * * * The Ontaouais, who arrived with me, and whom I designed to go on a scouting party towards the lake, had conceived a project of administering a corrective to the English barges. * * * On the day before yesterday, your brother formed a detachment to accompany them. I arrived at his camp on the evening of the same day. Lieutenant de Corbiere, of the Colonial troops, was returning, in consequence of a misunderstanding, and as I knew the zeal and intelligence of that officer, I made him set out with a new instruction to join Messrs de Langlade and Hertel de Chantly. They remained in ambush all day and night yesterday; at break of day the English appeared on Lake St. Sacrament, to the number of twenty-two barges, under the command of Sieur Parker. The whoops of our Indians impressed them with such terror that they made but feeble resistance, and only two barges escaped."

After De Corbiere's victory on Lake Champlain, a large French army was collected at Ticonderoga, with which there were many Indians from the tribes of the Northwest, and the Ioways appeared for the first time in the east.

It is an interesting fact that the English officers who were in frequent engagements with St.

Pierre, Lusignan, Marin, Langlade, and others, became the pioneers of the British, a few years afterwards, in the occupation of the outposts of the lakes, and in the exploration of Minnesota.

Rogers, the celebrated captain of rangers, subsequently commander of Mackinaw, and Jonathan Carver, the first British explorer of Minnesota, were both on duty near Lake Champlain, the latter narrowly escaping at the battle of Fort George.

On Christmas eve, 1757, Rogers approached Fort Ticonderoga, to fire the outhouses, but was prevented by discharge of the cannons of the French.

He contented himself with killing fifteen beaves, on the horns of one of which he left this laconic and amusing note, addressed to the commander of the post:

"I am obliged to you, Sir, for the repose you have allowed me to take; I thank you for the fresh meat you have sent me, I request you to present my compliments to the Marquis du Montcalm."

On the thirteenth of March, 1758, Durantaye, formerly at Mackinaw, had a skirmish with Rogers. Both had been trained on the frontier, and they met "as Greek met Greek." The conflict was fierce, and the French victorious. The Indian allies, finding a scalp of a chief underneath an officer's jacket, were furious, and took one hundred and fourteen scalps in return. When the French returned, they supposed that Captain Rogers was among the killed.

At Quebec, when Montcalm and Wolfe fell, there were Ojibways present assisting the French.

The Indians, returning from the expeditions against the English, were attacked with small-pox, and many died at Mackinaw.

On the eighth of September, 1760, the French delivered up all their posts in Canada. A few days after the capitulation at Montreal, Major Rogers was sent with English troops, to garrison the posts of the distant Northwest.

On the eighth of September, 1761, a year after the surrender, Captain Balfour, of the eightieth regiment of the British army, left Detroit, with a detachment to take possession of the French forts at Mackinaw and Green Bay. Twenty-five soldiers were left at Mackinaw, in command of Lieutenant Leslie, and the rest sailed to Green Bay, under Lieutenant Gorrell of the Royal Americans, where they arrived on the twelfth of October. The fort had been abandoned for several years, and was in a dilapidated condition. In charge of it there was left a lieutenant, a corporal, and fifteen soldiers. Two English traders arrived at the same time, McKay from Albany, and Goddard from Montreal.

Gorrell in his journal alludes to the Minnesota Sioux. He writes—

“ On March 1, 1763, twelve warriors of the Sous came here. It is certainly the greatest nation of Indians ever yet found. Not above two thousand of them were ever armed with firearms; the rest depending entirely on bows and arrows, which they use with more skill than any other Indian nation in America. They can shoot the wildest and largest beasts in the woods at seventy or one hundred yards distant. They are remarkable for their dancing, and the other nations take the fashions from them. * * * * * This nation is always at war with the Chippewas, those who destroyed Mishamakinak. They told me with warmth that if ever the Chippewas or any other Indians wished to obstruct the passage of the traders coming up, to send them word, and they would come and cut them off from the face of the earth; as all Indians were their slaves or dogs. I told them I was glad to see them, and hoped to have a lasting peace with them. They then gave me a letter wrote in French, and two belts of wampum from their king, in which he expressed great joy on hearing of there being English at his post. The letter was written by a French trader whom I had allowed to go among them last fall, with a promise of his behaving well; which he did, better than any Canadian I ever knew. * * * * * With regard to traders, I would not allow any to go amongst them, as I then understood they lay out of the government of Canada, but made no doubt they would have traders from the Mississippi in the spring. They went away extremely well pleased. June 14th, 1763, the traders came down from the Sack country, and confirmed the news of Landsing and his son being killed by the French. There came with the traders some Puans, and four young men with one chief of the Avoy [Ioway] nation, to demand traders. * * * * *

“ On the nineteenth, a deputation of Winnebagoes, Sacs, Foxes and Menominees arrived with a Frenchman named Pennensha. This Pennensha is the same man who wrote the letter the Sous brought with them in French, and at the same time held council with that great nation in favour of the English, by which he much promoted the interest of the latter, as appeared by the behaviour of the Sous. He brought with him a pipe from the Sous, desiring that as the road is now clear, they would by no means allow the Chippewas to obstruct it, or give the English any disturbance, or prevent the traders from coming up to them. If they did so they would send all their warriors and cut them off.”

In July, 1763, there arrived at Green Bay, Bruce, Fisher, and Roseboom of Albany, to engage in the Indian trade.

By the treaty of Paris of 1763, France ceded to Great Britain all of the country east of the Mississippi, and to Spain the whole of Louisiana, so that the latter power for a time held the whole region between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean, and that portion of the city of Minneapolis known as the East Division was then governed by the British, while the West Division was subject to the Spanish code.

Jonathan Carver was a native of Connecticut. His grandfather, William Carver, was a native of Wigan, Lancashire, England, and a captain in King William's army during the campaign in Ireland, and for meritorious services received an appointment as an officer of the colony of Connecticut.

His father was a justice of the peace in the new world, and in 1732, the subject of this sketch was born. At the early age of fifteen he was called to mourn the death of his father. He then commenced the study of medicine, but his roving disposition could not bear the confines of a doctor's office, and feeling, perhaps, that his genius would be cramped by pestle and mortar, at the age of eighteen he purchased an ensign's commission in one of the regiments raised during the French war. He was of medium stature, and of strong mind and quick perceptions.

In the year 1757, he was captain under Colonel Williams in the battle near Lake George, where Saint Pierre was killed, and narrowly escaped with his life.

After the peace of 1763, between France and England was declared, Carver conceived the project of exploring the Northwest. Leaving Boston in the month of June, 1796, he arrived at Mackinaw, then the most distant British post, in the month of August. Having obtained a credit on some French and English traders from Major Rogers, the officer in command, he started with them on the third day of September. Pursuing the usual route to Green Bay, they arrived there on the eighteenth.

The French fort at that time was standing, though much decayed. It was, some years previous to his arrival, garrisoned for a short time by an officer and thirty English soldiers, but they having been captured by the Menominees, it was abandoned.

In company with the traders, he left Green Bay on the twentieth, and ascending Fox river, arrived on the twenty-fifth at an island at the east end of Lake Winnebago, containing about fifty acres.

Here he found a Winnebago village of fifty houses. He asserts that a woman was in authority. In the month of October the party was at the portage of the Wisconsin, and descending that stream, they arrived, on the ninth at a town of the Sauks. While here he visited some lead mines about fifteen miles distant. An abundance of lead was also seen in the village, that had been brought from the mines.

On the tenth they arrived at the first village of the "Ojigawmies" [Foxes] about five miles before the Wisconsin joins the Mississippi, he perceived the remnants of another village, and learned that it had been deserted about thirty years before, and that the inhabitants soon after their removal, built a town on the Mississippi, near the mouth of the "Ouisconsin," at a place called by the French La Prairie les Chiens, which signified the Dog Plains. It was a large town, and contained about three hundred families. The houses were built after the Indian manner, and pleasantly situated on a dry rich soil.

He saw here many houses of a good size and shape. This town was the great mart where all the adjacent tribes, and where those who inhabit the most remote branches of the Mississippi, annually assemble about the latter end of May, bringing with them their furs to dispose of to the traders. But it is not always that they conclude their sale here. This was determined by a general council of the chiefs, who consulted whether it would be more conducive to their interest to sell their goods at this place, or to carry them on to Louisiana or Mackinaw.

At a small stream called Yellow River, opposite Prairie du Chien, the traders who had thus far accompanied Carver took up their residence for the winter.

From this point he proceeded in a canoe, with a Canadian voyageur and a Mohawk Indian as companions. Just before reaching Lake Pepin, while his attendants were one day preparing dinner, he walked out and was struck with the peculiar appearance of the surface of the country, and thought it was the site of some vast artificial earth-work. It is a fact worthy of remembrance, that he was the first to call the attention of the civilized world to the existence of ancient monuments in the Mississippi valley. We give his own description :

"On the first of November I reached Lake Pepin, a few miles below which I landed, and, whilst the servants were preparing my dinner, I ascended the bank to view the country. I had not proceeded far before I came to a fine, level, open plain, on which I perceived, at a little distance, a partial elevation that had the appearance of entrenchment. On a nearer inspection I had greater reason to suppose that it had really been intended for this many centuries ago. Notwithstanding it was now covered with grass, I could plainly see that it had once been a breastwork of about four feet in height, extending the best part of a mile, and sufficiently capacious to cover five thousand men. Its form was somewhat circular and its flanks reached to the river.

"Though much defaced by time, every angle was distinguishable, and appeared as regular and fashioned with as much military skill as if planned by Vauban himself. The ditch was not visible, but I thought, on examining more curiously, that I could perceive there certainly had been one. From its situation, also, I am convinced that it must have been designed for that purpose. It fronted the country, and the rear was covered by the river, nor was there any rising ground for a considerable way that commanded it; a few straggling lakes were alone to be seen near it. In many places small tracks were worn across it by the feet of the elks or deer, and from the depth of the bed of earth by which it was covered, I was able to draw certain conclusions of its great antiquity. I examined all the angles, and every part with great attention, and have often blamed myself since, for not encamping on the spot, and drawing an exact plan of it. To show that this description is not the offspring of a heated imagination, or the chimerical tale of a mistaken traveler, I find, on inquiry since my return, that Mons. St. Pierre, and several traders have at different times, taken notice of similar appearances, upon which they have formed the same conjectures, but without examining them so minutely as I did. How a work of this kind could exist in a country that has hitherto (according to the generally received opinion) been the seat of war to untutored Indians alone, whose whole stock of military knowledge has only, till within two centuries, amounted to drawing the bow, and whose only breastwork even at present is the thicket, I know not. I have given as exact an account as possible of this singular appearance, and leave to future explorers of those distant regions, to discover whether it is a production of nature or art. Perhaps the hints I have here given might lead to a more perfect investigation of it, and give us very different ideas of the ancient state of realms that we at present believe to have been, from the earliest period, only the habitations of savages."

Lake Pepin excited his admiration, as it has that of every traveler since his day, and here he remarks: "I observed the ruins of a French factory, where it is said Captain St. Pierre resided, and carried on a very great trade with the Naudowessies, before the reduction of Canada."

Carver's first acquaintance with the Dahkotahs commenced near the river St. Croix. It would seem that the erection of trading posts on Lake Pepin had enticed them from their old residence on Rum river and Mille Laes.

He says: "Near the river St. Croix reside bands of the Naudowessie Indians, called the River Bands. This nation is composed at present of eleven bands. They were originally twelve, but the Assinipoils, some years ago, revolting and separating themselves from the others, there remain at this time eleven. Those I met here are termed the River Bands, because they chiefly dwell near the banks of this river; the other eight are generally distinguished by the title of Nadowessies of the Plains, and inhabit a country more to the westward. The names of the former are Nchogatawonahs, the Mawtawbauntowahs, and Shashweentowahs.

Arriving at what is now a suburb of the capital of Minnesota, he continues: "About thirteen miles below the Falls of St. Anthony, at which I arrived the tenth day after I left Lake Pepin, is a remarkable cave, of an amazing depth. The Indians term it Wakon-teebe [Wakan-tipi]. The entrance into it is about ten feet wide, the height of it five feet. The arch within is fifteen feet high and about thirty feet broad; the bottom consists of fine, clear sand. About thirty feet from the entrance begins a lake, the water of which is transparent, and extends to an unsearchable distance, for the darkness of the cave prevents all attempts to acquire a knowledge of it.] I threw a small pebble towards the interior part of it with my utmost strength. I could hear that it fell into the water, and, notwithstanding it was of a small size, it caused an astonishing and terrible noise, that reverberated through all those gloomy regions. I found in this cave many Indian hieroglyphics, which appeared very ancient, for time had nearly covered them with moss, so that it was with difficulty I could trace them. They were cut in a rude manner upon the inside of the wall, which was composed of a stone so extremely soft that it might be easily penetrated with a knife; a stone everywhere to be found near the Mississippi.

"At a little distance from this dreary cavern, is the burying-place of several bands of the Nadowessie Indians. Though these people have no fixed residence, being in tents, and seldom but a few months in one spot, yet they always bring the bones of the dead to this place.

"Ten miles below the Falls of St. Anthony, the river St. Pierre, called by the natives Wadapaw Menesotor, falls into the Mississippi from the west. It is not mentioned by Father Hennepin, though a large, fair river. This omission, I consider, must have proceeded from a small island [Pike's] that is situated exactly in its entrance."

When he reached the Minnesota river, the ice became so troublesome that he left his canoe in the neighborhood of what is now St. Anthony, and walked to St. Anthony, in company with a young Winnebago chief, who had never seen the curling waters. The chief, on reaching the eminence some distance below Cheever's, began to invoke his gods, and offer oblations to the spirit in the waters.

"In the middle of the Falls stands a small island, about forty feet broad and somewhat longer, on which grow a few cragged hemlock and spruce trees, and about half way between this island and the eastern shore is a rock, lying at the very edge of the Falls, in an oblique position, that appeared to be about five or six feet broad, and thirty or forty long. At a little distance below the Falls stands a small island of about an acre and a half, on which grow a great number of oak trees."

From this description, it would appear that the little island, now some distance below the Falls, was once in the very midst, and shows that a constant recession has been going on, and that in ages long past they were not far from the Minnesota river.

No description is more glowing than Carver's of the country adjacent:

"The country around them is extremely beautiful. It is not an uninterrupted plain, where the eye finds no relief, but composed of many gentle ascents, which in the summer are covered with the finest verdure, and interspersed with little groves that give a pleasing variety to the prospect. On the whole, when the Falls are included, which may be seen at a distance of four miles, a more pleasing and picturesque view, I believe, cannot be found throughout the universe."

"He arrived at the Falls on the seventeenth of November, 1766, and appears to have ascended as far as Elk river.

On the twenty-fifth of November, he had returned to the place opposite the Minnesota, where he had left his canoe, and this stream as yet not being obstructed with ice, he commenced its ascent, with the colors of Great Britain flying at the stern of his canoe. There is no doubt that he entered this river, but how far he explored it cannot be ascertained. He speaks of the Rapids near Shakopay, and asserts that he went as far as two hundred miles beyond Mendota. He remarks:

"On the seventh of December, I arrived at the utmost of my travels towards the West, where I met a large party of the Naudowessie Indians, among whom I resided some months."

After speaking of the upper bands of the Dahkotahs and their allies, he adds that he "left the habitations of the hospitable Indians the latter end of April, 1767, but did not part from them for several days, as I was accompanied on my journey by near three hundred of them to the mouth of the river St. Pierre. At this season these bands annually go to the great cave (Dayton's Bluff) before mentioned.

When he arrived at the great cave, and the Indians had deposited the remains of their deceased friends in the burial-place that stands adjacent to it, they held their great council to which he was admitted.

When the Naudowessies brought their dead for interment to the great cave (St. Paul), I attempted to get an insight into the remaining burial rites, but whether it was on account of the stench which arose from so many dead bodies, or whether they chose to keep this part of their custom secret from me, I could not discover. I found, however, that they considered my curiosity as ill-timed, and therefore I withdrew. * *

One formality among the Naudowessies in mourning for the dead is very different from any mode I observed in the other nations through which I passed. The men, to show how great their sorrow is, pierce the flesh of their arms above the elbows with arrows, and the women cut and gash their legs with broken flints till the blood flows very plentifully. * *

After the breath is departed, the body is dressed in the same attire it usually wore, his face is painted, and he is seated in an erect posture on a mat or skin, placed in the middle of the hut, with his weapons by his side. His relatives seated around, each in turn harangues the deceased; and if he has been a great warrior, recounts his heroic actions, nearly to the following purport, which in the Indian language is extremely poetical and pleasing

"You still sit among us, brother, your person retains its usual resemblance, and continues similar to ours, without any visible deficiency, except it has lost the power of action! But whither is that breath flown, which a few hours ago sent up smoke to the Great Spirit? Why are those lips silent, that lately delivered to us expressions and pleasing language? Why are those feet motionless, that a few hours ago were fleetier than the deer on yonder mountains? Why useless hang those arms, that could climb the tallest tree or draw the toughest bow? Alas, every part of that frame which we lately beheld with admiration and wonder has now become as inanimate as it was three hundred years ago! We will not, however, bemoan thee as if thou wast forever lost to us, or that thy name would be buried in oblivion; thy soul yet lives in the great country of spirits, with those of thy nation that have gone before thee; and though we are left behind to perpetuate thy fame, we will one day join thee.

"Actuated by the respect we bore thee whilst living, we now come to tender thee the last act of kindness in our power; that thy body might not lie neglected on the plain, and become a prey to the beasts of the field or fowls of the air, and we will take care to lay it with those of thy predecessors that have gone before thee; hoping at the same time that thy spirit will feed with their spirits, and be ready to receive ours when we shall also arrive at the great country of souls."

For this speech Carver is principally indebted to his imagination, but it is well conceived, and suggested one of Schiller's poems, which Goethe considered one of his best, and wished "he had made a dozen such."

Sir E. Lytton Bulwer the distinguished novelist, and Sir John Herschel the eminent astronomer, have each given a translation of Schiller's "Song of the Nadowessee Chief."

SIR E. L. BULWER'S TRANSLATION.

See on his mat—as if of yore,
All life-like sits he here!
With that same aspect which he wore
When light to him was dear

But where the right hand's strength? and where
The breath that loved to breathe
To the Great Spirit, aloft in air,
The peace pipe's lusty wreath?

And where the hawk-like eye, alas!
That wont the deer pursue,
Along the waves of rippling grass,
Or fields that shone with dew?

Are these the limber, bounding feet
That swept the winter's snows?
What stateliest stag so fast and fleet?
Their speed outstripped the roe's!

These arms, that then the steady bow
Could supple from its pride,
How stark and helpless hang they now
Adown the stiffened side!

Yet weal to him—at peace he stays
Wherever fall the snows;
Where o'er the meadows springs the maize
That mortal never sows.

Where birds are blithe on every brake—
Where forests teem with deer—
Where glide the fish through every lake—
One chase from year to year!

With spirits now he feasts above;
All left us to revere
The deeds we honor with our love,
The dust we bury here.

Here bring the last gift; loud and shrill
Wail death dirge for the brave;
What pleased him most in life, may still Give pleasure in the grave.

We lay the axe beneath his head
He swung when strength was strong—
The bear on which his banquets fed,
The way from earth is long.

And here, new sharpened, place the knife
That severed from the clay,
From which the axe had spoiled the life,
The conquered scalp away.

The paints that deck the dead, bestow;
Yes, place them in his hand,
That red the kingly shade may glow
Amid the spirit land.

SIR JOHN HERSCHEL'S TRANSLATION.

See, where upon the mat he sits Erect, before his door,
With just the same majestic air
That once in life he wore.

But where is fled his strength of limb,
The whirlwind of his breath,
To the Great Spirit, when he sent
The peace pipe's mounting wreath?

Where are those falcon eyes, which late
Along the plain could trace,
Along the grass's dewy waves
The reindeer's printed pace?

Those legs, which once with matchless speed,
Flew through the drifted snow,
Surpassed the stag's unwearied course,
Outran the mountain roe?

Those arms, once used with might and main,
The stubborn bow to twang?
See, see, their nerves are slack at last,
All motionless they hang.

'Tis well with him, for he is gone
Where snow no more is found,
Where the gay thorn's perpetual bloom
Decks all the field around.

Where wild birds sing from every spray,
Where deer come sweeping by,
Where fish from every lake afford
A plentiful supply.

With spirits now he feasts above,
And leaves us here alone,
To celebrate his valiant deeds,
And round his grave to moan.

Sound the death song, bring forth the gifts,
The last gifts of the dead,—
Let all which yet may yield him joy
Within his grave be laid.

The hatchet place beneath his head
Still red with hostile blood;
And add, because the way is long,
The bear's fat limbs for food.

The scalping-knife beside him lay,
With paints of gorgeous dye,
That in the land of souls his form
May shine triumphantly.

It appears from other sources that Carver's visit to the Dakhotahs was of some effect in bringing about friendly intercourse between them and the commander of the English force at Mackinaw.

The earliest mention of the Dakotas, in any public British documents that we know of, is in the correspondence between Sir William Johnson, Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Colony of New York, and General Gage, in command of the forces.

On the eleventh of September, less than six months after Carver's speech at Dayton's Bluff, and the departure of a number of chiefs to the English fort at Mackinaw, Johnson writes to General Gage: "Though I wrote to you some days ago, yet I would not mind saying something again on the score of the vast expenses incurred, and, as I understand, still incurring at Michilimackinac, chiefly on pretence of making a peace between the Sioux and Chippeweighs, with which I think we have very little to do, in good policy or otherwise."

Sir William Johnson, in a letter to Lord Hillsborough, one of his Majesty's ministers, dated August seventeenth, 1768, again refers to the subject:

"Much greater part of those who go a trading are men of such circumstances and disposition as to venture their persons everywhere for extravagant gains, yet the consequences to the public are not to be slighted, as we may be led into a general quarrel through their means. The Indians in the part adjacent to Michilimackinac have been treated with at a very great expense for some time previous.

"Major Rodgers brings a considerable charge against the former for mediating a peace between some tribes of the Sioux and some of the Chippeweighs, which, had it been attended with success, would only have been interesting to a very few French, and others, that had goods in that part of the Indian country, but the contrary has happened, and they are now more violent, and war against one another."

Though a wilderness of over one thousand miles intervened between the Falls of St. Anthony and the white settlements of the English, Carver was fully impressed with the idea that the State now organized under the name of Minnesota, on account of its beauty and fertility, would attract settlers.

Speaking of the advantages of the country, he says that the future population will be "able to convey their produce to the seaports with great facility, the current of the river from its source to its entrance into the Gulf of Mexico being extremely favourable for doing this in small craft This might also in time be facilitated by canals or shorter cuts, and a communication opened by water with New York by way of the Lakes."

The subject of this sketch was also confident that a route would be discovered by way of the Minnesota river, which "would open a passage to China and the English settlements in the East Indies."

Carver, having returned to England, interested Whitworth, a member of parliament, in the northern route. Had not the American Revolution commenced, they proposed to have built a fort at Lake Pepin, to have proceeded up the Minnesota until they found, as they supposed they could, a branch of the Missouri, and from thence, journeying over the summit of lands until they came to a river which they called Oregon, they expected to descend to the Pacific.

Carver, in common with other travelers, had his theory in relation to the origin of the Dakotas. He supposed that they came from Asia. He remarks: "But this might have been at different times and from various parts—from Tartary, China, Japan, for the inhabitants of these places resemble each other. * * *

"It is very evident that some of the names and customs of the American Indians resemble those of the Tartars, and I make no doubt but that in some future era, and this not far distant, it will be reduced to certainty that during some of the wars between the Tartars and Chinese a part of the inhabitants of the northern provinces were driven from their native country, and took refuge in some of the isles before mentioned, and from thence found their way into America. * * *

"Many words are used both by the Chinese and the Indians which have a resemblance to each other, not only in their sound, but in their signification. The Chinese call a slave Shungo; and the Naudowessie Indians, whose language, from their little intercourse with the Europeans, is least corrupted, term a dog Shungush [Shoan-kah]. The former denominate one species of their tea Shoushong; the latter call their tobacco Shousas-sau [Chanshasha]. Many other of the words used by the Indians contain the syllables che, chow, and chu, after the dialect of the Chinese."

The comparison of languages has become a rich source of historical knowledge, yet many of the analogies traced are fanciful. The remark of Humbolt in "Cosmos" is worthy of remembrance. "As the structure of American idioms appears remarkably strange to nations speaking the modern languages of Western Europe, and who readily suffer themselves to be led away by some accidental analogies of sound, theologians have generally believed that they could trace an affinity with the Hebrew, Spanish colonists with the Basque and the English, or French settlers with Gaelic, Erse, or the Bas Breton. I one day met on the coast of Peru, a Spanish naval officer and an English whaling captain, the former of whom declared that he had heard Basque spoken at Tahiti; the other, Gaelic or Erse at the Sandwich Islands."

Carver became very poor while in England, and was a clerk in a lottery-office. He died in 1780, and left a widow, two sons, and five daughters, in New England, and also a child by another wife that he had married in Great Britain.

After his death a claim was urged for the land upon which the capital of Minnesota now stands, and for many miles adjacent. As there are still many persons who believe that they have some right through certain deeds purporting to be from the heirs of Carver, it is a matter worthy of an investigation.

Carver says nothing in his book of travels in relation to a grant from the Dakotahs, but after he was buried, it was asserted that there was a deed belonging to him in existence, conveying valuable lands, and that said deed was executed at the cave now in the eastern suburbs of Saint Paul.

DEED PURPORTING TO HAVE BEEN GIVEN AT THE CAVE IN THE BLUFF BELOW ST. PAUL.

"To Jonathan Carver, a chief under the most mighty and potent George the Third, King of the English and other nations, the fame of whose warriors has reached our ears, and has now been fully told us by our good brother Jonathan, afore-said, whom we rejoice to have come among us, and bring us good news from his country.

"We, chiefs of the Nadowessies, who have hereunto set our seals, do by these presents, for ourselves and heirs forever, in return for the aid and other good services done by the said Jonathan to ourselves and allies, give grant and convey to him, the said Jonathan, and to his heirs and assigns forever, the whole of a certain tract or territory of land, bounded as follows, viz: from the Falls of St. Anthony, running on the east bank of the Mississippi, nearly southeast, as far as Lake Pepin, where the Chippewa joins the Mississippi, and from thence eastward five days travel, accounting twenty English miles per day; and from thence again to the Falls of St. Anthony, on a direct straight line. We do for ourselves, heirs, and assigns, forever give unto the said Jonathan, his heirs and assigns, with all the trees, rocks, and rivers therein, reserving the sole liberty of hunting and fishing on land not planted or improved by the said Jonathan, his heirs and assigns, to which we have affixed our respective seals.

"At the Great Cave, May 1st, 1767.

"Signed, HAWNOPAWJATIN.

OTOHITGNGOONLISHEAW."

The original deed was never exhibited by the assignees of the heirs. By his English wife Carver had one child, a daughter Martha, who was cared for by Sir Richard and Lady Pearson. In time she eloped and married a sailor. A mercantile firm in London, thinking that money could be made, induced the newly married couple, the day after the wedding, to convey the grant to them, with the understanding that they were to have a tenth of the profits.

The merchants despatched an agent by the name of Clarke to go to the Dakotahs, and obtain a new deed; but on his way he was murdered in the state of New York.

In the year 1794, the heirs of Carver's American wife, in consideration of fifty thousand pounds sterling, conveyed their interest in the Carver grant to Edward Houghton of Vermont. In the year 1806, Samuel Peters, who had been a tory and an Episcopal minister during the Revolutionary war, alleges, in a petition to Congress, that he had also purchased of the heirs of Carver their rights to the grant.

Before the Senate committee, the same year, he testified as follows:

"In the year 1774, I arrived there (London), and met Captain Carver. In 1775, Carver had a hearing before the king, praying his majesty's approval of a deed of land dated May first, 1767, and sold and granted to him by the Naudowissies. The result was his majesty approved of the exertions and bravery of Captain Carver among the Indian nations, near the Falls of St. Anthony, in the Mississippi, gave to said Carver £3717. 13s. 8d. sterling, and ordered a frigate to be prepared, and a transport ship to carry one hundred and fifty men, under command of Captain Carver, with four others as a committee, to sail the next June to New Orleans, and then to ascend the Mississippi, to take possession of said territory conveyed to Captain Carver; but the battle of Bunker Hill prevented."

In 1821, General Leavenworth, having made inquiries of the Dahkotahs, in relation to the alleged claim, addressed the following to the commissioner of the land office:

"Sir:—Agreeably to your request, I have the honour to inform you what I have understood from the Indians of the Sioux Nation, as well as some facts within my own knowledge, as to what is commonly termed Carver's Grant. The grant purports to be made by the chiefs of the Sioux of the Plains, and one of the chiefs uses the sign of a serpent, and the other of a turtle, purporting that their names are derived from those animals.

"The land lies on the east side of the Mississippi. The Indians do not recognize or acknowledge the grant to be valid, and they among others assign the following reasons:

"1. The Sioux of the Plains never owned a foot of land on the east side of the Mississippi. The Sioux Nation is divided into two grand divisions, viz: The Sioux of the Lake; or perhaps more literally Sioux of the River, and Sioux of the Plain. The former subsists by hunting and fishing, and usually move from place to place by water, in canoes, during the summer season, and travel on the ice in the winter, when not on their hunting excursions. The latter subsist entirely by hunting, and have no canoes, nor do they know but little about the use of them. They reside in the large prairies west of the Mississippi, and follow the buffalo, upon which they entirely subsist; these are called Sioux of the Plain, and never owned land east of the Mississippi.

"2. The Indians say they have no knowledge of any such chiefs as those who have signed the grant to Carver, either amongst the Sioux of the River or the Sioux of the Plain. They say that if Captain Carver did ever obtain a deed or grant, it was signed by some foolish young men who were not chiefs and who were not authorized to make a grant. Among the Sioux of the River there are no such names.

"3. They say the Indians never received anything for the land, and they have no intention to part with it without a consideration. From my knowledge of the Indians, I am induced to think they would not make so considerable a grant, and have it to go into full effect without receiving a substantial consideration.

"4. They have, and ever have had, the possession of the land, and intend to keep it. I know that they are very particular in making every person who wishes to cut timber on that tract obtain their permission to do so, and to obtain payment for it. In the month of May last, some Frenchmen brought a large raft of red cedar timber out of the Chippewa River, which timber was cut on the tract before mentioned. The Indians at one of the villages on the Mississippi, where the principal chief resided, compelled the Frenchmen to land the raft, and would not permit them to pass until they had received pay for the timber, and the Frenchmen were compelled to leave their raft with the Indians until they went to Prairie du Chien, and obtained the necessary articles, and made the payment required."

On the twenty-third of January, 1823, the Committee of Public Lands made a report on the claim to the Senate, which, to every disinterested person, is entirely satisfactory. After stating the facts of the petition, the report continues:

"The Rev. Samuel Peters, in his petition, further states that Lefei, the present Emperor of the Sioux and Naudowessies, and Red Wing, a sachem, the heirs and successors of the two grand chiefs who signed the said deed to Captain Carver, have given satisfactory and positive proof that they allowed their ancestors' deed to be genuine, good, and valid, and that Captain Carver's heirs and assigns are the owners of said territory, and may occupy it free of all molestation.

The committee have examined and considered the claims thus exhibited by the petitioners, and remark that the original deed is not produced, nor any competent legal evidence offered of its execution; nor is there any proof that the persons, who

it is alleged made the deed, were the chiefs of said tribe, nor that (if chiefs) they had authority to grant and give away the land belonging to their tribe. The paper annexed to the petition, as a copy of said deed, has no subscribing witnesses; and it would seem impossible, at this remote period, to ascertain the important fact, that the persons who signed the deed comprehended and understood the meaning and effect of their act.

"The want of proof as to these facts, would interpose in the way of the claimants insuperable difficulties. But, in the opinion of the committee, the claim is not such as the United States are under any obligation to allow, even if the deed were proved in legal form.

"The British government, before the time when the alleged deed bears date, had deemed it prudent and necessary for the preservation of peace with the Indian tribes under their sovereignty, protection and dominion, to prevent British subjects from purchasing lands from the Indians, and this rule of policy was made known and enforced by the proclamation of the king of Great Britain, of seventh October, 1763, which contains an express prohibition.

"Captain Carver, aware of the law, and knowing that such a contract could not vest the legal title in him, applied to the British government to ratify and confirm the Indian grant, and, though it was competent for that government then to confirm the grant, and vest the title of said land in him, yet, from some cause, that government did not think proper to do it.

"The territory has since become the property of the United States, and an Indian grant not good against the British government, would appear to be not binding upon the United States government.

"What benefit the British government derived from the services of Captain Carver, by his travels and residence among the Indians, that government alone could determine, and alone could judge what remuneration those services deserved.

"One fact appears from the declaration of Mr. Peters, in his statement in writing, among the papers exhibited, namely, that the British government did give Captain Carver the sum of one thousand three hundred and seventy-five pounds six shillings and eight pence sterling. To the United States, however, Captain Carver rendered no services which could be assumed as any equitable ground for the support of the petitioners' claim.

"The committee being of opinion that the United States are not bound in law and equity to confirm the said alleged Indian grant, recommend the adoption of the resolution:

"Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted."

Lord Palmerston stated in 1839, that no trace could be found in the records of the British office of state papers, showing any ratification of the Carver grant.

EXPLORATION BY THE FIRST UNITED STATES ARMY OFFICER, LIEUTENANT Z. M. PIKE.

Trading Posts at the beginning of Nineteenth Century.—Sandy Lake Fort.—Leech Lake Fort.—William Morrison, before Schoolcraft at Itasca Lake.—Division of Northwest Territory.—Organization of Indiana, Michigan and Upper Louisiana.—Notices of Wood, Frazer, Fisher, Cameron, Faribault.—Early Traders.—Pike's Council at Mouth of Minnesota River.—Grant for Military Posts.—Encampment at Falls of St. Anthony.—Block House near Swan River.—Visit to Sandy and Leech Lakes.—British Flag Shot at and Lowered.—Thompson, Topographer of Northwest Company.—Pike at Dickson's Trading Post.—Returns to Mendota.—Fails to find Carver's Cave.—Conference with Little Crow.—Cameron sells Liquor to Indians.

At the beginning of the present century, the region now known as Minnesota, contained no white men, except a few engaged in the fur trade. In the treaty effected by Hon. John Jay, Great Britain agreed to withdraw her troops from all posts and places within certain boundary lines, on or before the first of June, 1796, but all British settlers and traders might remain for one year, and enjoy all their former privileges, without being obliged to be citizens of the United States of America.

In the year 1800, the trading posts of Minnesota were chiefly held by the Northwest Company, and their chief traders resided at Sandy Lake, Leech Lake, and Fond du Lac, on St. Louis River. In the year 1794, this company built a stockade one hundred feet square, on the southeast end of Sandy Lake. There were bastions pierced for small arms, in the southeast and in the northwest corner. The pickets which surrounded the post were thirteen feet high. On the north side there was a gate ten by nine feet; on the west side, one six by five feet, and on the east side a third gate six by five feet. Travelers entering the main gate, saw on the left a one story building twenty feet square, the residence of the superintendent, and on the left of the east gate, a building twenty-five by fifteen, the quarters of the voyageurs. Entering the western gate, on the left was a stone house, twenty by thirty feet, and a house twenty by forty feet, used as a store, and a workshop, and a residence for clerks. On the south shore of Leech Lake there was another establishment, a little larger. The stockade was one hundred and fifty feet square. The main building was sixty by twenty-five feet, and one and a half story in height, where resided the Director of the fur trade of the Fond du Lac department of the Northwest Company. In the centre was a small store, twelve and a half feet square, and near the main gate was flagstaff fifty feet in height, from which used to float the flag of Great Britain.

William Morrison was, in 1802, the trader at Leech Lake, and in 1804 he was at Elk Lake, the source of the Mississippi, thirty-two years afterwards named by Schoolcraft, Lake Itasca.

The entire force of the Northwest Company, west of Lake Superior, in 1805, consisted of three accountants, nineteen clerks, two interpreters, eighty-five canoe men, and with them were twenty-nine Indian or half-breed women, and about fifty children.

On the seventh of May, 1800, the Northwest Territory, which included all of the western country east of the Mississippi, was divided. The portion not designated as Ohio, was organized as the Territory of Indiana.

On the twentieth of December, 1803, the province of Louisiana, of which that portion of Minnesota west of the Mississippi was a part, was officially delivered up by the French, who had just obtained it from the Spaniards, according to treaty stipulations.

To the transfer of Louisiana by France, after twenty days' possession, Spain at first objected; but in 1804 withdrew all opposition.

President Jefferson now deemed it an object of paramount importance for the United States to explore the country so recently acquired, and make the acquaintance of the tribes residing therein; and steps were taken for an expedition to the upper Mississippi.

Early in March, 1804, Captain Stoddard, of the United States army, arrived at St. Louis, the agent of the French Republic, to receive from the Spanish authorities the possession of the country, which he immediately transferred to the United States.

As the old settlers, on the tenth of March, saw the ancient flag of Spain displaced by that of the United States, the tears coursed down their cheeks.

On the twentieth of the same month, the territory of Upper Louisiana was constituted, comprising the present states of Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, and a large portion of Minnesota.

On the eleventh of January, 1805, the territory of Michigan was organized.

The first American officer who visited Minnesota, on business of a public nature, was one who was an ornament to his profession, and in energy and endurance a true representative of the citizens of the United States. We refer to the gallant Zebulon Montgomery Pike, a native of New Jersey, who afterwards fell in battle at York, Upper Canada, and whose loss was justly mourned by the whole nation.

When a young lieutenant, he was ordered by General Wilkinson to visit the region now known as Minnesota, and expel the British traders who were found violating the laws of the United States, and form alliances with the Indians. With only a few common soldiers, he was obliged to do the work of several men. At times he would precede his party for miles to reconnoitre, and then he would do the duty of hunter.

During the day he would perform the part of surveyor, geologist, and astronomer, and at night, though hungry and fatigued, his lofty enthusiasm kept him awake until he copied the notes, and plotted the courses of the day.

On the 4th day of September, 1805, Pike arrived at Prairie du Chien, from St. Louis, and was politely treated by three traders, all born under the flag of the United States. One was named Wood, another Frazer, a native of Vermont, who, when a young man became a clerk of one Blakely, of Montreal, and thus became a fur trader. The third was Henry Fisher, a captain of the Militia, and Justice of the Peace, whose wife was a daughter of Goutier de Verville. Fisher was said to have been a nephew of President Monroe, and later in life traded at the sources of the Minnesota. One of his daughters was the mother of Joseph Rolette, Jr., a member of the early Minnesota Legislative assemblies. On the eighth of the month Lieutenant Pike left Prairie du Chien, in two batteaux, with Sergeant Henry Kennerman, Corporals William E. Mack and Samuel Bradley, and ten privates.

At La Crosse, Frazer, of Prairie du Chien, overtook him, and at Sandy point of Lake Pepin he found a trader, a Scotchman by the name of Murdoch Cameron, with his son, and a young man named John Rudsell. On the twenty-first he breakfasted with the Kaposia band of Sioux, who then dwelt at the marsh below Dayton's Bluff, a few miles below St. Paul. The same day he passed three miles from Mendota the encampment of J. B. Faribault, a trader and native of Lower Canada, then about thirty years of age, in which vicinity he continued for more than fifty years. He married Pelagie the daughter of Francis Kinnie by an Indian woman, and his eldest son, Alexander, born soon after Pike's visit, was the founder of the town of Faribault.

Arriving at the confluence of the Minnesota and the Mississippi Rivers, Pike and his soldiers encamped on the Northeast point of the island which still bears his name. The next day was Sunday, and he visited Cameron, at his trading post on the Minnesota River, a short distance above Mendota.

On Monday, the 23d of September, at noon, he held a Council with the Sioux, under a covering made by suspending sails, and gave an admirable talk, a portion of which was as follows:

"Brothers, I am happy to meet you here, at this council fire which your father has sent me to kindle, and to take you by the hands, as our children. We having but lately acquired from the Spanish, the extensive territory of Louisiana, our general has thought proper to send out a number of his warriors to visit all his red children; to tell them his will, and to hear what request they may have to make of their father. I am happy the choice fell on me to come this road, as I find my brothers, the Sioux, ready to listen to my words.

"Brothers, it is the wish of our government to establish military posts on the Upper Mississippi, at such places as might be thought expedient. I have, therefore, examined the country, and have pitched on the mouth of the river St. Croix, this place, and the Falls of St. Anthony; I therefore wish you to grant to the United States, nine miles square, at St. Croix, and at this place, from a league below the confluence of the St. Peter's and Mississippi, to a league above St. Anthony, extending three leagues on each side of the river; and as we are a people who are accustomed to have all our acts written down, in order to have them handed to our children, I have drawn up a form of an agreement, which we will both sign, in the presence of the traders now present. After we know the terms, we will fill it up, and have it read and interpreted to you.

"Brothers, those posts are intended as a benefit to you. The old chiefs now present must see that their situation improves by a communication with the whites. It is the intention of the United States to establish at those posts factories, in which the Indians may procure all their things at a cheaper and better rate than they do now, or than your traders can afford to sell them to you, as they are single men, who come from far in small boats; but your fathers are many and strong, and will come with a strong arm, in large boats. There will also be chiefs here, who can attend to the wants of their brothers, without their sending or going all the way to St. Louis, and will see the traders that go up your rivers, and know that they are good men. * * * *

"Brothers, I now present you with some of your father's tobacco, and some other trifling things, as a memorandum of my good will, and before my departure I will give you some liquor to clear your throats."

The traders, Cameron and Frazer, sat with Pike. His interpreter was Pierre Rosseau. Among the Chiefs present were Le Petit Corbeau (Little Crow), and Way-ago Enagee, and L'Original Leve or Rising Moose. It was with difficulty that the chiefs signed the following agreement; not that they objected to the language, but because they thought their word should be taken, without any mark; but Pike overcame their objection, by saying that he wished them to sign it on his account.

"Whereas, at a conference held between the United States of America and the Sioux nation of Indians, Lieutenant Z. M. Pike, of the army of the United States, and the chiefs and warriors of said tribe, have agreed to the following articles, which, when ratified and approved of by the proper authority, shall be binding on both parties:

ART. 1. That the Sioux nation grant unto the United States, for the purpose of establishment of military posts, nine miles square, at the mouth of the St. Croix, also from below the confluence of the Mississippi and St. Peter's, up the Mississippi to include the Falls of St. Anthony, extending nine miles on each side of the river; that the Sioux Nation grants to the United States the full sovereignty and power over said district forever.

ART. 2. That in consideration of the above grants, the United States shall pay [filled up by the Senate with 2,000 dollars].

ART. 3. The United States promise, on their part, to permit the Sioux to pass and repass, hunt, or make other use of the said districts, as they have formerly done, without any other exception than those specified in article first.

In testimony whereof, we, the undersigned, have hereunto set our hands and seals, at the mouth of the river St. Peter's, on the 23d day of September, 1805.

The following entries from Pike's Journal, descriptive of the region around the city of Minneapolis, seventy-five years ago, are worthy of preservation:

"SEPT. 26th, Thursday.—Embarked at the usual hour, and after much labor in passing through the rapids, arrived at the foot of the Falls about three or four o'clock; unloaded my boat, and had the principal part of her cargo carried over the portage. With the other boat, however, full loaded, they were not able to get over the last shoot, and encamped about six yards below. I pitched my tent and encamped above the shoot. The rapids mentioned in this day's march, might properly be called a continuation of the Falls of St. Anthony, for they are equally entitled to this appellation, with the Falls of the Delaware and

Susquehanna. Killed one deer. Distance nine miles

SEPT. 27th, Friday. Brought over the residue of my loading this morning. Two men arrived from Mr. Frazer, on St. Peters, for my dispatches. This business, closing and sealing, appeared like a last adieu to the civilized world. Sent a large packet to the General, and a letter to Mrs. Pike, with a short note to Mr. Frazer. Two young Indians brought my flag across by land, who arrived yesterday, just as we came in sight of the Fall. I made them a present for their punctuality and expedition, and the danger they were exposed to from the journey. Carried our boats out of the river, as far as the bottom of the hill.

SEPT. 28th, Saturday.—Brought my large over, and put her in the river above the Falls. While we were engaged with her three-fourths miles from camp, seven Indians painted black, appeared on the heights. We had left our guns at the camp and were entirely defenceless. It occurred to me that they were the small party of Sioux who were obstinate, and would go to war, when the other part of the bands came in; these they proved to be; they were better armed than any I had ever seen: having guns, bows, arrows, clubs, spears, and some of them even a case of pistols. I was at that time giving my men a dram; and giving the cup of liquor to the first, he drank it off; but I was more cautious with the remainder. I sent my interpreter to camp with them, to wait my coming; wishing to purchase one of their war clubs, it being made of elk horn, and decorated with inlaid work. This and a set of bows and arrows I wished to get as a curiosity. But the liquor I had given him began to operate, he came back for me, but refusing to go till I brought my boat, he returned, and (I suppose being offended) borrowed a canoe and crossed the river. In the afternoon got the other boat near the top of the hill, when the props gave way and she slid all the way down to the bottom, but fortunately without injuring any person. It raining very hard, we left her. Killed one goose and a racoon.

SEPT. 29th, Sunday.—I killed a remarkably large racoon. Got our large boat over the portage, and put her in the river, at the upper landing; this night the men gave sufficient proof of their fatigue, by all throwing themselves down to sleep, preferring rest to supper. This day I had but fifteen men out of twenty-two; the others were sick. This voyage could have been performed with great convenience, if we had taken our departure in June. But the proper time would be to leave the Illinois as soon as the ice would permit, when the river would be of a good height.

SEPT. 30th, Monday.—Loaded my boat, moved over and encamped on the Island. The large boats loading likewise, we went over and put on board. In the mean time, I took a survey of the Falls, Portage, etc. If it be possible to pass the Falls in high water, of which I am doubtful, it must be on the East side, about thirty yards from shore; as there are three layers of rocks, one below the other. The pitch off of either, is not more than five feet; but of this I can say more on my return.

On the tenth of October, the expedition reached some large island below Sauk Rapids, where in 1797, Porlier and Joseph Renville had wintered. Six days after this, he reached the Rapids in Morrison county, which still bears his name, and he writes: "When we arose in the morning, found that snow had fallen during the night, the ground was covered and it continued to snow. This, indeed, was but poor encouragement for attacking the Rapids, in which we were certain to wade to our necks. I was determined, however, if possible to make la riviere de Corbeau, [Crow Wing River], the highest point was made by traders in their bark canoes. We embarked, and after four hours work, became so benumbed with cold that our limbs were perfectly useless. We put to shore on the opposite side of the river, about two-thirds of the way up the rapids. Built a large fire; and then discovered that our boats were nearly half full of water; both having sprung large leaks so as to oblige me to keep three hands bailing. My sergeant (Kernerman) one of the stoutest men I ever knew, broke a blood-vessel and vomited nearly two quarts of blood. One of my corporals (Bradley) also evacuated nearly a pint of blood, when he attempted to void his urine. These unhappy circumstances, in addition to the inability of four other men whom we were obliged to leave on shore, convinced me, that if I had no regard for my own health and constitution, I should have some for those poor fellows, who were killing themselves to obey my orders. After we had breakfast and refreshed ourselves, we went down to our boats on the rocks, where I was obliged to leave them. I then informed my men that we would return to the camp and there leave some of the party and our large boats. This information was pleasing, and the attempt to reach the camp soon accomplished. My reasons for this step have partly been already stated. The necessity of unloading and refitting my boats, the beauty and convenience of the spot for building huts, the fine pine trees for perogues, and the quantity of game, were additional inducements. We immediately unloaded our boats and secured their cargoes. In the evening I went out upon a small, but beautiful creek, which emptied into the Falls, for the purpose of selecting pine trees to make canoes. Saw five deer, and killed one buck weighing one hundred and thirty-seven pounds. By my leaving men at this place, and from the great quantities of game in its vicinity, I was ensured plenty of provision for my return voyage. In the party left behind was one hunter, to be continually employed, who would keep our stock of salt provisions good. Distance two hundred and thirty-three and a half miles above the Falls of St. Anthony.

Having left his large boats and some soldiers at this point, he proceeded to the vicinity of Swan River where he erected a block house, and on the thirty-first of October he writes: "Enclosed my little work completely with pickets. Hauled up my two boats and turned them over on each side of the gateways; by which means a defence was made to the river, and had it not been for various political reasons, I would have laughed at the attack of eight hundred or a thousand savages, if all my party were within. For, except accidents, it would only have afforded amusement, the Indians having no idea of taking a place by storm. Found myself powerfully attacked with the fantastics of the brain, called ennui, at the mention of which I had hitherto scoffed; but my books being packed up, I was like a person entranced, and could easily conceive why so many persons who have been confined to remote places, acquire the habit of drinking to excess, and many other vicious practices, which have been adopted merely to pass time.

During the next month he hunted the buffalo which were then in that vicinity. On the third of December he received a visit from Robert Dickson, afterwards noted in the history of the country, who was then trading about sixty miles below, on the Mississippi.

On the tenth of December with some sleds he continued his journey northward, and on the last day of the year passed Pine River. On the third of January, 1806, he reached the trading post at Red Cedar, now Cass Lake, and was quite indignant at finding the British flag floating from the staff. The night after this his tent caught on fire, and he lost some valuable and necessary thing. On the evening of the eighth he reached Sandy Lake and was hospitably received by Grant, the trader in charge. He writes.

"JAN. 9th, Thursday.—Marched the corporal early, in order that our men should receive assurance of our safety and success. He carried with him a small keg of spirits, a present from Mr. Grant. The establishment of this place was formed twelve years since, by the North-west Company, and was formerly under the charge of a Mr. Charles Brusky. It has attained at present such regularity, as to permit the superintendent to live tolerably comfortable. They have horses they procured from Red River, of the Indians; raise plenty of Irish potatoes, catch pike, suckers, pickerel, and white fish in abundance. They have also beaver, deer, and moose; but the provision they chiefly depend upon is wild oats, of which they purchase great quantities from the savages, giving at the rate of about one dollar and a half per bushel. But flour, pork, and salt, are almost interdicted to persons not principals in the trade. Flour sells at half a dollar; salt a dollar; pork eighty cents; sugar half a dollar; and tea four dollars and fifty cents per pound. The sugar is obtained from the Indians, and is made from the maple tree."

He remained at Sandy Lake ten days, and on the last day two men of the Northwest Company arrived with letters from Fon du Lac Superior, one of which was from Athapuscow, and had been since May on the route.

On the twentieth of January began his journey to Leech Lake, which he reached on the first of February, and was hospitably received by Hugh McGillis, the head of the Northwest Company at this post.

A Mr. Anderson, in the employ of Robert Dickson, was residing at the west end of the lake. While here he hoisted the American flag in the fort. The English yacht still flying at the top of the flagstaff, he directed the Indians and his soldiers to shoot at it. They soon broke the iron pin to which it was fastened, and it fell to the ground. He was informed by a venerable old Ojibway chief, called Sweet, that the Sioux dwelt there when he was a youth. On the tenth of February, at ten o'clock, he left Leech Lake with Corporal Bradley, the trader McGillis and two of his men, and at sunset arrived at Red Cedar, now Cass Lake. At this place, in 1798, Thompson, employed by the Northwest Company for three years, in topographical surveys, made some observations. He believed that a line from the Lake of the Woods would touch the sources of the Mississippi. Pike, at this point, was very kindly treated by a Canadian named Roy, and his Ojibway squaw. On his return home, he reached Clear River on the seventh of April, where he found his canoe and men, and at night was at Grand Rapids, Dickson's trading post. He talked until four o'clock the next morning with this person and another trader named Porlier. He forbade while there, the traders Greignor [Grignon] and La Jennesse, to sell any more liquor to Indians, who had become very drunken and unruly. On the tenth he again reached the Falls of Saint Anthony. He writes in his journal as follows:

APRIL 11th, Feiday.—Although it snowed very hard we brought over both boats, and descended the river to the island at the entrance of the St. Peter's. I sent to the chiefs and informed them I had something to communicate to them. The Fils de Pincho immediately waited on me, and informed me that he would provide a place for the purpose. About sundown I was sent for and introduced into the council-house, where I found a great many chiefs of the Sussitongs, Gens de Feuilles, and the Gens du Lac. The Yanetongs had not yet come down. They were all awaiting for my arrival. There were about one hundred lodges, or six hundred people; we were saluted on our crossing the river with ball as usual. The council-house was two large lodges, capable of containing three hundred men. In the upper were forty chiefs, and as many pipes set against the poles, alongside of which I had the Santeur's pipes arranged. I then informed them in short detail, of my transactions with the Santeurs; but my interpreters were not capable of making themselves understood. I was therefore obliged to omit mentioning every particular relative to the rascal who fired on my sentinel, and of the scoundrel who broke the Fols Avoins' canoes, and threatened my life; the interpreters, however, informed them that I wanted some of their principal chiefs to go to St. Louis; and that those who thought proper might descend to the prairie, where we would give them more explicit information. They all smoked out of the Santeur's pipe, excepting three, who were painted black, and were some of those who lost their relations last winter. I invited the Fils de Pinchow, and the son of the Killeur Rouge, to come over and sup with me; when Mr. Dickson and myself endeavored to explain what I intended to have said to them, could I have made myself understood; that at the prairie we would have all things explained; that I was desirous of making a better report of them than Captain Lewis could do from their treatment of him. The former of those savages was the person who remained around my post all last winter, and treated my men so well; they endeavored to excuse their people.

APRIL 12th, Saturday.—Embarked early. Although my interpreter had been frequently up the river, he could not tell me where the cave (spoken of by Carver) could be found; we carefully sought for it, but in vain. At the Indian village, a few miles below St. Peter's, we were about to pass a few lodges, but on receiving a very particular invitation to come on shore, we landed, and were received in a lodge kindly; they presented us sugar. I gave the proprietor a dram, and was about to depart when he demanded a kettle of liquor; on being refused, and after I had left the shore, he told me he did not like the arrangements, and that he would go to war this summer. I directed the interpreter to tell him that if I returned to St. Peter's with the troops, I would settle that affair with him. On our arrival at the St. Croix, I found the Pettit Corbeau with his people, and Messrs. Frazer and Wood. We had a conference, when the Pettit Corbeau made many apologies for the misconduct of his people; he represented to us the different manners in which the young warriors had been inducing him to go to war; that he had been much blamed for dismissing his party last fall; but that he was determined to adhere as far as lay in his power to our instructions; that he thought it most prudent to remain here and restrain the warriors. He then presented me with a beaver robe and pipe, and his message to the general. That he was determined to preserve peace, and make the road clear; also a remembrance of his promised medal. I made a reply, calculated to confirm him in his good intentions, and assured him that he should not be the less remembered by his father, although not present. I was informed that, notwithstanding the instruction of his license, and my particular request, Murdoch Cameron had taken liquor and sold it to the Indians on the river St. Peter's, and that his partner below had been equally imprudent. I pledged myself to prosecute them according to law; for they have been the occasion of great confusion, and of much injury to the other traders. This day met a canoe of Mr. Dickson's loaded with provisions, under the charge of Mr. Anderson, brother of the Mr. Anderson at Leech Lake. He politely offered me any provision he had on board (for which Mr. Dickson had given me an order), but not now being in want, I did not accept of any. This day, for the first time, I observed the trees beginning to bud, and indeed the climate seemed to have changed very materially since we passed the Falls of St. Anthony."

The strife of political parties growing out of the French Revolution, and the declaration of war against Great Britain in the year 1812, postponed the military occupation of the Upper Mississippi by the United States of America, for several years.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE VALLEY OF THE UPPER MISSISSIPPI DURING SECOND WAR WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Dickson and other traders hostile.—American stockade at Prairie du Chien—Fort Shelby surrenders to Lt. Col. William McKay—Loyal traders Provencalle and Faribault—Rising Moose or One-eyed Sioux—Capt. Bulger evacuates Fort McKay—Intelligence of Peace.

Notwithstanding the professions of friendship made to Pike, in the second war with Great Britain, Dickson and others were found bearing arms against the Republic.

A year after Pike left Prairie du Chien, it was evident, that under some secret influence, the Indian tribes were combining against the United States. In the year 1809, Nicholas Jarrot declared that the British traders were furnishing the savages with guns for hostile purposes. On the first of May, 1812, two Indians were apprehended at Chicago, who were on their way to meet Dickson at Green Bay. They had taken the precaution to hide letters in their moccasins, and bury them in the ground, and were allowed to proceed after a brief detention. Frazer, of Prairie du Chien, who had been with Pike at the Council at the mouth of the Minnesota River, was at the portage of the Wisconsin when the Indians delivered these letters, which stated that the British flag would soon be flying again at Mackinaw. At Green Bay, the celebrated warrior, Black Hawk, was placed in charge of the Indians who were to aid the British. The American troops at Mackinaw were obliged, on the seventeenth of July, 1812, to capitulate without firing a single gun. One who was made prisoner, writes from Detroit to the Secretary of War:

"The persons who commanded the Indians are Robert Dickson, Indian trader, and John Askin, Jr., Indian agent, and his son. The latter two were painted and dressed after the manner of the Indians. Those who commanded the Canadians are John Johnson, Crawford, Pothier, Armitinger, La Croix, Rolette, Franks, Livingston, and other traders, some of whom were lately concerned in smuggling British goods into the Indian country, and, in conjunction with others, have been using their utmost efforts, several months before the declaration of war, to excite the Indians to take up arms. The least resistance from the fort would have been attended with the destruction of all the persons who fell into the hands of the British, as I have been assured by some of the British traders."

On the first of May, 1814, Governor Clark, with two hundred men, left St. Louis, to build a fort at the junction of the Wisconsin and Mississippi. Twenty days before he arrived at Prairie du Chien, Dickson had started for Mackinaw with a band of Dakotahs and Winnebagoes. The place was left in command of Captain Deace and the Mackinaw Fencibles. The Dakotahs refusing to co-operate, when the Americans made their appearance they fled. The Americans took possession of the old Mackinaw house, in which they found nine or ten trunks of papers belonging to Dickson. From one they took the following extract:

"Arrived, from below, a few Winnebagoes with scalps. Gave them tobacco, six pounds powder and six pounds ball."

A fort was immediately commenced on the site of the old residence of the late H. L. Dousman, which was composed of two block-houses in the angles, and another on the bank of the river, with a subterranean communication. In honor of the governor of Kentucky it was named "Shelby."

The fort was in charge of Lieutenant Perkins, and sixty rank and file, and two gunboats, each of which carried a six-pounder; and several howitzers were commanded by Captains Yeiser, Sullivan, and Aid-de-camp Kennerly.

The traders at Mackinaw, learning that the Americans had built a fort at the Prairie, and knowing that as long as they held possession they would be cut off from the trade with the Dakotahs, immediately raised an expedition to capture the garrison.

The captain was an old trader by the name of McKay, and under him was a sergeant of artillery, with a brass six-pounder, and three or four volunteer companies of Canadian voyageurs, officered by Captains Grignon, Rolette and Anderson, with Lieutenants Brisbois and Duncan Graham, all dressed in red coats, with a number of Indians.

The Americans had scarcely completed their rude fortification, before the British force, guided by Joseph Rolette, Sr., descended in canoes to a point on the Wisconsin, several miles from the Prairie, to which they marched in battle array. McKay sent a flag to the Fort demanding a surrender. Lieutenant Perkins replied that he would defend it to the last.

A fierce encounter took place, in which the Americans were worsted. The officer was wounded, several men were killed and one of their boats captured, so that it became necessary to retreat to St. Louis. Fort Shelby after its capture, was called Fort McKay.

Among the traders a few remained loyal, especially Provencalle and J. B. Faribault, traders among the Sioux. Faribault was a prisoner among the British at the time Lieut. Col. Wm. McKay was preparing to attack Fort Shelby, and he refused to perform any service, Faribault's wife, who was at Prairie du Chien, not knowing that her husband was a prisoner in the hands of the advancing foe, fled with others to the Sioux village, where is now the city of Winona. Faribault was at length released on parole and returned to his trading post.

Pike writes of his flag, that "being in doubt whether it had been stolen by the Indians, or had fallen overboard and floated away, I sent for my friend the Original Leve." He also calls the Chief, Rising Moose, and gives his Sioux name Tahamie. He was one of those, who in 1805, signed the agreement, to surrender land at the junction of the Minnesota and Mississippi Rivers to the United States. He had but one eye, having lost the other when a boy, belonged to the Wapasha band of the Sioux, and proved true to the flag which had waved on the day he sat in council with Pike.

In the fall of 1814, with another of the same nation, he ascended the Missouri under the protection of the distinguished trader, Manual Lisa, as far as the Au Jacques or James River, and from thence struck across the country, enlisting the Sioux in favour of the United States, and at length arrived at Prairie du Chien. On his arrival, Dickson accosted him, and inquired from whence he came, and what was his business; at the same time rudely snatching his bundle from his shoulder, and searching for letters. The "one-eyed warrior" told him that he was from St. Louis, and that he had promised the white chiefs there that he would go to Prairie du Chien, and that he had kept his promise.

Dickson then placed him in confinement in Fort McKay, as the garrison was called by the British, and ordered him to divulge what information he possessed, or he would put him to death. But the faithful fellow said he would impart nothing, and that he was ready for death if he wished to kill him. Finding that confinement had no effect, Dickson at last liberated him. He then left, and visited the bands of Sioux on the Upper Mississippi, with which he passed the winter. When he returned in the spring, Dickson had gone to Mackinaw, and Capt. A. Bulger, of the Royal New Foundland Regiment, was in command of the fort.

On the twenty-third of May, 1815, Capt. Bulger, wrote from Fort McKay to Gov. Clark at St. Louis: "Official intelligence of peace reached me yesterday. I propose evacuating the fort, taking with me the guns captured in the fort. * * * I have not the smallest hesitation in declaring my decided opinion, that the presence of a detachment of British and United States troops at the same time, would be the means of embroiling one party or the other in a fresh rupture with the Indians, which I presume it is the wish of both governments to avoid."

The next month the "One-Eyed Sioux," with three other Indians and a squaw, visited St. Louis, and he informed Gov. Clark, that the British commander left the cannons in the fort when he evacuated, but in a day or two came back, took the cannons, and fired the fort with the American flag flying, but that he rushed in and saved it from being burned. From this time, the British flag ceased to float in the Valley of the Mississippi.

CHAPTER XIV.

LONG'S EXPEDITION, A. D. 1817, IN A SIX-OARED SKIFF, TO THE FALLS OF SAINT ANTHONY.

Carver's Grandsons.—Rogue, Sioux Interpreter.—Wapashaw's Village and its Vicinity.—A Sacred Dance.—Indian Village Below Dayton's Bluff.—Carver's Cave.—Fountain Cave.—Falls of St. Anthony Described.—Site of a Fort.

Major Stephen H. Long, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, learning that there was little or no danger to be apprehended from the Indians, determined to ascend to the Falls of Saint Anthony, in a six-oared skiff presented to him by Governor Clark, of Saint Louis. His party consisted of a Mr. Hempstead, a native of New London, Connecticut, who had been living at Prairie du Chien, seven soldiers, and a half-breed interpreter, named Rogue. A bark canoe accompanied them, containing Messrs. Gun and King, grandsons of the celebrated traveler, Jonathan Carver.

On the ninth of July, 1817, the expedition left Prairie du Chien, and on the twelfth arrived at "Trempealeau." He writes:

"When we stopped for breakfast, Mr. Hempstead and myself ascended a high peak to take a view of the country. It is known by the name of the Kettle Hill, having obtained this appellation from the circumstance of its having numerous piles of stone on its top, most of them fragments of the rocky stratifications which constitute the principal part of the hill, but some of them small piles made by the Indians. These at a distance have some similitude of kettles arranged along upon the ridge and sides of the hill. From this, or almost any other eminence in its neighborhood, the beauty and grandeur of the prospect would baffle the skill of the most ingenious pencil to depict, and that of the most accomplished pen to describe. Hills marshaled into a variety of agreeable shapes, some of them towering into lofty peaks, while others present broad summits embellished with contours and slopes in the most pleasing manner; champaigns and waving valleys; forests, lawns, and parks alternating with each other; the humble Mississippi meandering far below, and occasionally losing itself in numberless islands, give variety and beauty to the picture, while rugged cliffs and stupendous precipices here and there present themselves as if to add boldness and majesty to the scene. In the midst of this beautiful scenery is situated a village of the Sioux Indians, on an extensive lawn called the Aux Aisle Prairie; at which we lay by for a short time. On our arrival the Indians hoisted two American flags, and we returned the compliment by discharging our blunderbuss and pistols. They then fired several guns ahead of us by way of a salute, after which we landed and were received with much friendship. The name of their chief is Wapashaw, or the Leaf, commonly called by a name of the same import in French, La Feuille, or La Fye, as it is pronounced in English. He is considered one of the most honest and honorable of any of the Indians, and endeavors to inculcate into the minds of his people the sentiments and principles adopted by himself. He was not at home at the time I called, and I had no opportunity of seeing him. The Indians, as I suppose, with the expectation that I had something to communicate to them, assembled themselves at the place where I landed and seated themselves upon the grass. I inquired if their chief was at home, and was answered in the negative. I then told them I should be very glad to see him, but as he was absent I would call on him again in a few days when I should return. I further told them that our father, the new President, wished to obtain some more information relative to his red children, and that I was on a tour to acquire any intelligence he might stand in need of. With this they appeared well satisfied, and permitted Mr. Hempstead and myself to go through their village. While I was in the wigwam, one of the subordinate chiefs, whose name was Wazzecoota, or Shooter from the Pine Tree, volunteered to accompany me up the river. I accepted of his services, and he was ready to attend me on the tour in a very short time. When we have in sight the Indians were engaged in a ceremony called the Bear Dance; a ceremony which they are in the habit of performing when any young man is desirous of bringing himself into particular notice, and is considered a kind of initiation into the state of manhood. I went on to the ground where they had their performances, which were ended sooner than usual on account of our arrival. There was a kind of flag made of fawn skin dressed with the hair on, suspended on a pole. Upon the flesh side of it were drawn certain rude figures indicative of the dream which it is necessary the young man should have dreamed, before he can be considered a proper candidate for this kind of initiation; with this a pipe was suspended by way of sacrifice. Two arrows were stuck up at the foot of the pole, and fragments of painted feathers, etc., were strewed about the ground near to it. These pertained to the religious rites attending the ceremony, which consists in bewailing and self-mortification, that the Good Spirit may be induced to pity them and succor their undertaking.

"At the distance of two or three hundred yards from the flag, is an excavation which they call the bear's hole, prepared for the occasion. It is about two feet deep, and has two ditches, about one foot deep, leading across it at right angles. The young hero of the farce places himself in this hole, to be hunted by the rest of the young men, all of whom on this occasion are dressed in their best attire and painted in their neatest style. The hunters approach the hole in the direction of one of the ditches, and discharge their guns, which were previously loaded for the purpose with blank cartridges, at the one who acts the part of the bear; whereupon he leaps from his den, having a hoop in each hand, and a wooden lance; the hoops serving as forefeet to aid him in characterizing his part, and his lance to defend him from his assailants. Thus accoutred he dances round the place, exhibiting various feats of activity, while the other Indians pursue him and endeavor to trap him as he attempts to return to his den, to effect which he is privileged to use any violence he pleases with impunity against his assailants, and even to taking the life of any of them.

"This part of the ceremony is performed three times, that the bear may escape from his den and return to it again through three of the avenues communicating with it. On being hunted from the fourth or last avenue, the bear must make his escape through all his pursuers, if possible, and flee to the woods, where he is to remain through the day. This, however, is seldom or never accomplished, as all the young men exert themselves to the utmost in order to trap him. When caught, he must retire to a lodge erected for his reception in the field, where he is to be secluded from all society through the day, except one of his particular friends whom he is allowed to take with him as an attendant. Here he smokes and performs various other rites which superstition has led the Indians to believe are sacred. After this ceremony is ended, the young Indian is considered qualified to act any part as an efficient member of their community. The Indian who has the good fortune to catch the bear and overcome him when endeavoring to make his escape to the woods, is considered a candidate for preferment, and is on the first suitable occasion appointed the leader of a small war party, in order that he may further have an opportunity to test his prowess and perform more essential service in behalf of his nation. It is accordingly expected that he will kill some of their enemies and return with their scalps. I regretted very much that I had missed the opportunity of witnessing this ceremony, which is never performed except when prompted by the particular dreams of one or other of the young men, who is never complimented twice in the same manner on account of his dreams."

On the sixteenth he approached the vicinity of where is now the capital of Minnesota, and writes: "Set sail at half past four this morning with a favorable breeze. Passed an Indian burying ground on our left, the first that I have seen surrounded by a fence. In the centre a pole is erected, at the foot of which religious rites are performed at the burial of an Indian, by the particular friends and relatives of the deceased. Upon the pole a flag is suspended when any person of extraordinary merit, or one who is very much beloved, is buried. In the enclosure were two scaffolds erected also, about six feet high and six feet square. Upon one of them were two coffins containing dead bodies. Passed a Sioux village on our right containing fourteen cabins. The name of the chief is the Petit Corbeau, or Little Raven. The Indians were all absent on a hunting party up the River St. Croix, which is but a little distance across the country from the village. Of this we were very glad, as this band are said to be the most notorious beggars of all the Sioux on the Mississippi. One of their cabins is furnished with loop holes, and is situated so near the water that the opposite side of the river is within musket-shot range from the building. By this means the Petit Corbeau is enabled to exercise a command over the passage of the river and has in some instances compelled traders to land with their goods, and induced them, probably through fear of offending him, to bestow presents to a considerable amount, before he would suffer them to pass. The cabins are a kind of stockade buildings, and of a better appearance than any Indian dwellings I have before met with.

Two miles above the village, on the same side of the river, is Carver's Cave, at which we stopped to breakfast. However interesting it may have been, it does not possess that character in a very high degree at present. We descended it with lighted candles to its lower extremity. The entrance is very low and about eight feet broad, so that a man in order to enter it must be completely prostrate. The angle of descent within the cave is about 25 deg. The flooring is an inclined plane of quicksand, formed of the rock in which the cavern is formed. The distance from its entrance to its inner extremity is twenty-four paces, and the width in the broadest part about nine, and its greatest height about seven feet. In shape it resembles a baker's oven. The cavern was once probably much more extensive. My interpreter informed me that, since his remembrance, the entrance was not less than ten feet high and its length far greater than at present. The rock in which it is formed is a very white sandstone, so friable that the fragments of it will almost crumble to sand when taken into the hand. A few yards below the mouth of the cavern is a very copious spring of fine water issuing from the bottom of the cliff.

"Five miles above this is the Fountain Cave, on the same side of the river, formed in the same kind of sandstone but of a more pure and fine quality. It is far more curious and interesting than the former. The entrance of the cave is a large winding hall about one hundred and fifty feet in length, fifteen feet in width, and from eight to sixteen feet in height, finely arched overhead, and nearly perpendicular. Next succeeds a narrow passage and difficult of entrance, which opens into a most beautiful circular room, finely arched above, and about forty feet in diameter. The cavern then continues a meandering course, expanding occasionally into small rooms of a circular form. We penetrated about one hundred and fifty yards, till our candles began to fail us, when we returned. To beautify and embellish the scene, a fine crystal stream flows through the cavern, and cheers the lonesome dark retreat with its enlivening murmurs. The temperature of the water in the cave was 46 deg., and that of the air 60 deg. Entering this cold retreat from an atmosphere of 89 deg., I thought it not prudent to remain in it long enough to take its several dimensions and meander its courses; particularly as we had to wade in water to our knees in many places in order to penetrate as far as we went. The fountain supplies an abundance of water as fine as I ever drank. This cavern I was informed by my interpreter, has been discovered but a few years. That the Indians formerly living in its neighborhood knew nothing of it till within six years past. That it is not the same as that described by Carver is evident, not only from this circumstance, but also from the circumstance that instead of a stagnant pool, and only one accessible room of a very different form, this cavern has a brook running through it, and at least four rooms in succession, one after the other. Carver's Cave is fast filling up with sand, so that no water is now found in it, whereas this, from the very nature of the place, must be enlarging, as the fountain will carry along with its current all the sand that falls into it from the roof and sides of the cavern."

On the night of the sixteenth, he arrived at the Falls of Saint Anthony and encamped on the east shore just below the cataract. He writes in his journal:

"The place where we encamped last night needed no embellishment to render it romantic in the highest degree. The banks on both sides of the river are about one hundred feet high, decorated with trees and shrubbery of various kinds. The post oak, hickory, walnut, linden, sugar tree, white birch, and the American box; also various evergreens, such as the pine, cedar, juniper, etc., added their embellishments to the scene. Amongst the shrubbery were the prickly ash, plum, and cherry tree, the gooseberry, the black and red raspberry, the chokeberry, grape vine, etc. There were also various kinds of herbage and flowers, among which were the wild parsley, rue, spikenard, etc., red and white roses, morning glory and various other handsome flowers. A few yards below us was a beautiful cascade of fine spring water, pouring down from a projecting precipice about one hundred feet high. On our left was the Mississippi hurrying through its channel with great velocity, and about three quarters of a mile above us, in plain view, was the majestic cataract of the Falls of St. Anthony. The murmuring of the cascade, the roaring of the river, and the thunder of the cataract, all contributed to render the scene the most interesting and magnificent of any I ever before witnessed."

"The perpendicular fall of the water at the cataract, was stated by Pike in his journal, as sixteen and a half feet, which I found to be true by actual measurement. To this height, however, four or five feet may be added for the rapid descent which immediately succeeds to the perpendicular fall within a few yards below. Immediately at the cataract the river is divided into two parts by an island which extends considerably above and below the cataract, and is about five hundred yards long. The channel on the right side of the Island is about three times the width of that on the left. The quantity of water passes through them is not, however, in the same proportion, as about one-third part of the whole passes through the left channel. In the broadest channel, just below the cataract, is a small island also, about fifty yards in length and thirty in breadth. Both of these islands contain the same kind of rocky formation as the banks of the river, and are nearly as high. Besides these, there are immediately at the foot of the cataract, two islands of very inconsiderable size, situated in the right channel also. The rapids commence several hundred yards above the cataract and continue about eight miles below. The fall of the water, beginning at the head of the rapids, and extending two hundred and sixty rods down the river to where the portage road commences, below the cataract is, according to Pike, fifty-eight feet. If this estimate be correct the whole fall from the head to the foot of the rapids, is not probably much less than one hundred feet. But as I had no instrument sufficiently accurate to level, where the view must necessarily be pretty extensive, I took no pains to ascertain the extent of the fall. The mode I adopted to ascertain the height of a cataract, was to suspend a line and plummet from the table rock on the south side of the river, which at the same time had very little water passing over it as the river was unusually low. The rocky formations at this place were arranged in the following order, from the surface downward. A coarse kind of limestone in thin strata containing considerable silex; a kind of soft friable stone of a greenish color and slaty fracture, probably containing lime, aluminum and silex; a very beautiful stratification of shell limestone, in thin plates, extremely regular in its formation and containing a vast number of shells, all apparently of the same kind. This formation constitutes the Table Rock of the cataract. The next in order is a white or yellowish sandstone, so easily crumbled that it deserves the name of a sandbank rather than that of a rock. It is of various depths, from ten to fifty or seventy-five feet, and is of the same character with that found at the caves before described. The next in order is a soft friable sandstone, of a greenish color, similar to that resting upon the shell limestone. These stratifications occupied the whole space from the low water mark nearly to the top of the bluffs. On the east, or rather north side of the river, at the Falls, are high grounds, at the distance of half a mile from the river, considerably more elevated than the bluffs, and of a hilly aspect.

Speaking of the bluff at the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota, he writes: "A military work of considerable magnitude might be constructed on the point, and might be rendered sufficiently secure by occupying the commanding height in the rear in a suitable manner, as the latter would control not only the point, but all the neighboring heights, to the full extent of a twelve pounder's range. The work on the point would be necessary to control the navigation of the two rivers. But without the commanding work in the rear, would be liable to be greatly annoyed from a height situated directly opposite on the other side of the Mississippi, which is here no more than about two hundred and fifty yards wide. This latter height, however, would not be eligible for a permanent post, on account of the numerous ridges and ravines situated immediately in its rear."

CHAPTER XV.

THOMAS DOUGLAS, EARL OF SELKIRK, AND THE RED RIVER VALLEY.

Early travelers to Lake Winnipeg—Earliest Map by the Indian Ojibwa—Bellin's allusion to it—Verendrye's Map—De la Jemeraye's Map—Fort La Reine—Fort on Red River abandoned—Origin of name Red Lake—Earl of Selkirk—Ossiniboia described—Scotch immigrants at Pembina—Strife of trading companies—Earl of Selkirk visits America—Governor Semple Killed—Romantic life of John Tanner, and his son James—Letter relative to Selkirk's tour through Minnesota.

The valley of the Red River of the North is not only an important portion of Minnesota, but has a most interesting history.

While there is no evidence that Groselliers, the first white man who explored Minnesota, ever visited Lake Winnipeg and the Red River, yet he met the Assiniboines at the head of Lake Superior and at Lake Nepigon, while on his way by a northeasterly trail to Hudson's Bay, and learned something of this region from them.

The first person, of whom we have an account, who visited the region, was an Englishman, who came in 1692, by way of York River, to Winnipeg.

Ochagachs, or Ojibwa, an intelligent Indian, in 1728, assured Pierre Gualtier de Varenne, known in history as the Sieur Verendrye, while he was stationed at Lake Nepigon, that there was a communication, largely by water, west of Lake Superior, to the Great Sea or Pacific Ocean. The rude map, drawn by this Indian, was sent to France, and is still preserved. Upon it is marked Kamanistigouia, the fort first established by Du Luth. Pigeon River is called Manitohavagame. Lac Sasakanaga is marked, and Rainy Lake is named Tecamemouiouen. The river St. Louis, of Minnesota, is R. fond du L. Superior. The French geographer, Bellin, in his "Remarks upon the map of North America," published in 1755, at Paris, alludes to this sketch of Ochagachs, and says it is the earliest drawing of the region west of Lake Superior, in the Depot de la Marine.

After this Verendrye, in 1737, drew a map, which remains unpublished, which shows Red Lake in Northern Minnesota, and the point of the Big Woods in the Red River Valley. There is another sketch in the archives of France, drawn by De la Jemeraye. He was a nephew of Verendrye, and, under his uncle's orders, he was in 1731, the first to advance from the Grand Portage of Lake Superior, by way of the Nalao-nagan or Groselliers, now Pigeon River, to Rainy Lake. On this appears Fort Rouge, on the south bank of the Assiniboine at its junction with the Red River, and on the Assiniboine, a post established on October 3, 1738, and called Fort La Reine. Bellin describes the fort on Red River, but asserts that it was abandoned because of its vicinity to Fort La Reine, on the north side of the Assiniboine, and only about nine miles by a portage, from Swan Lake. Red Lake and Red River were so called by the early French explorers, on account of the reddish tint of the waters after a storm.

Thomas Douglas, Earl of Selkirk, a wealthy, kind-hearted but visionary Scotch nobleman, at the commencement of the present century formed the design of planting a colony of agriculturists west of Lake Superior. In the year 1811 he obtained a grant of land from the Hudson Bay Company called Ossiniboia, which it seems strange has been given up by the people of Manitoba. In the autumn of 1812 a few Scotchmen with their families arrived at Pembina, in the Red River Valley, by way of Hudson Bay, where they passed the winter. In the winter of 1813-14 they were again at Fort Daer or Pembina. The colonists of Red River were rendered very unhappy by the strife of rival trading companies.

In the spring of 1815, McKenzie and Morrison, traders of the Northwest company, at Sandy Lake, told the Ojibway chief there, that they would give him and his band all the goods and rum at Leech or Sandy Lakes, if they would annoy the Red River settlers.

The Earl of Selkirk hearing of the distressed condition of his colony, sailed for America, and in the fall of 1815, arrived at New York City. Proceeding to Montreal he found a messenger who had traveled on foot in mid-winter from the Red River by way of Red Lake and Fon du Lac, of Lake Superior. He sent back by this man, kind messages to the dispirited settlers, but one night he was way-laid near Fon du Lac, and robbed of his canoe and dispatches. An Ojibway chief at Sandy Lake, afterwards testified that a trader named Grant offered him rum and tobacco, to send persons to intercept a bearer of dispatches to Red River, and soon the messenger was brought in by a negro and some Indians.

Failing to obtain military aid from the British authorities in Canada, Selkirk made an engagement with four officers and eighty privates, of the discharged Meuron regiment, twenty of the De Watteville, and a few of the Glengary Fencibles, which had served in the late war with the United States, to accompany him to Red River. They were to receive monthly wages for navigating the boats to Red River, to have lands assigned them, and a free passage if they wished to return.

When he reached Sault St. Marie, he received the intelligence that the colony had again been destroyed, and that Semple, a mild, amiable, but not altogether judicious man, the chief governor of the factories and territories of the Hudson Bay company, residing at Red River, had been killed.

Schoolcraft, in 1832, says he saw at Leech Lake, Majegabowi, the man who had killed Gov. Semple, after he fell wounded from his horse.

Before he heard of the death of Semple, the Earl of Selkirk had made arrangements to visit his colony by way of Fon du Lac, on the St. Louis River, and Red Lake of Minnesota, but he now changed his mind, and proceeded with his force to Fort William, the chief trading post of the Northwest Company on Lake Superior; and apprehending the principal partners, warrants of commitment were issued, and they were forwarded to the Attorney-General of Upper Canada.

While Selkirk was engaged at Fort William, a party of emigrants in charge of Miles McDonnell, Governor, and Captain D'Orsomen, went forward to reinforce the colony. At Rainy Lake they obtained the guidance of a man who had all the characteristics of an Indian, and yet had a bearing which suggested a different origin. By his efficiency and temperate habits, he had secured the respect of his employers, and on the Earl of Selkirk's arrival at Red River, his attention was called to him, and in his welfare he became deeply interested. By repeated conversations with him, memories of a different kind of existence were aroused, and the light of other days began to brighten. Though he had forgotten his father's name, he furnished sufficient data for Selkirk to proceed with a search for his relatives. Visiting the United States in 1817, he published a circular in the papers of the Western States, which led to the identification of the man.

It appeared from his own statement, and those of his friends, that his name was John Tanner, the son of a minister of the gospel, who, about the year 1790, lived on the Ohio river, near the Miami. Shortly after his location there, a band of roving Indians passed near the house, and found John Tanner, then a little boy, filling his hat with walnuts from under a tree. They seized him and fled. The party was led by an Ottawa whose wife had lost a son. To compensate for his death, the mother begged that a boy of the same age might be captured.

Adopted by the band, Tanner grew up an Indian in his tastes and habits, and was noted for bravery. Selkirk was successful in finding his relatives. After twenty-eight years of separation, John Tanner in 1818, met his brother Edward near Detroit, and went with him to his home in Missouri. He soon left his brother, and went back to the Indians. For a time he was interpreter for Henry R. Schoolcraft, but became lazy and ill-natured, and in 1836, skulking behind some bushes, he shot and killed Schoolcraft's brother, and fled to the wilderness, where, in 1847, he died. His son, James, was kindly treated by the missionaries to the Ojibways of Minnesota; but he walked in the footsteps of his father. In the year 1851, he attempted to impose upon the Presbyterian minister in Saint Paul, and, when detected, called upon the Baptist minister, who, believing him a penitent, cut a hole in the ice, and received him into the church by immersion. In time, the Baptists found him out, when he became an Unitarian missionary, and, at last, it is said, met a death by violence.

Lord Selkirk was in the Red River Valley

during the summer of 1817, and on the eighteenth of July concluded a treaty with the Crees and Saulteaux, for a tract of land beginning at the mouth of the Red River, and extending along the same as far as the Great Forks (now Grand Forks) at the mouth of Red Lake River, and along the Assiniboine River as far as Musk Rat River, and extending to the distance of six miles from Fort Douglas on every side, and likewise from Fort Daer (Pembina) and also from the Great Forks, and in other parts extending to the distance of two miles from the banks of the said rivers.

Having restored order and confidence, attended by three or four persons he crossed the plains to the Minnesota River, and from thence proceeded to St. Louis. The Indian agent at Prairie du Chien was not pleased with Selkirk's trip through Minnesota; and on the sixth of February, 1818, wrote the Governor of Illinois under excitement, some groundless suspicions:

"What do you suppose, sir, has been the result of the passage through my agency of this British nobleman? Two entire bands, and part of a third, all Sioux, have deserted us and joined Dickson, who has distributed to them large quantities of Indian presents, together with flags, medals, etc. Knowing this, what must have been my feelings on hearing that his lordship had met with a favourable reception at St. Louis. The newspapers announcing his arrival, and general Scottish appearance, all tend to discompose me; believing as I do, that he is plotting with his friend Dickson our destruction—sharpening the savage scalping knife, and colonizing a tract of country, so remote as that of the Red River, for the purpose, no doubt, of monopolizing the fur and peltry trade of this river, the Missouri and their waters; a trade of the first importance to our Western States and Territories. A courier who had arrived a few days since, confirms the belief that Dickson is endeavouring to undo what I have done, and secure to the British government the affections of the Sioux, and subject the Northwest Company to his lordship. * * *

Dickson, as I have before observed, is situated near the head of the St. Peter's, to which place he transports his goods from Selkirk's Red River establishment, in carts made for the purpose. The trip is performed in five days, sometimes less. He is directed to build a fort on the highest land between Lac du Traverse and Red River, which he supposes will be the established line. This fort will be defended by twenty men, with two small pieces of artillery."

In the year 1820, at Berne, Switzerland, a circular was issued, signed, R. May D'Uzistorf, Captain, in his Britannic Majesty's service, and agent Plenipotentiary to Lord Selkirk. Like many documents to induce emigration, it was so highly colored as to prove a delusion and a snare. The climate was represented as "mild and healthy." "Wood either for building or fuel in the greatest plenty," and the country supplying "in profusion, whatever can be required for the convenience, pleasure or comfort of life." Remarkable statements considering that every green thing had been devoured the year before by grasshoppers.

Under the influence of these statements, a number were induced to embark. In the spring of 1821, about two hundred persons assembled on the banks of the Rhine to proceed to the region west of Lake Superior. Having descended the Rhine to the vicinity of Rotterdam, they went aboard the ship "Lord Wellington," and after a voyage across the Atlantic, and amid the ice-floes of Hudson's Bay, they reached York Fort. Here they debarked, and entering batteaux, ascended Nelson River for twenty days, when they came to Lake Winnipeg, and coasting along the west shore they reached the Red River of the North, to feel that they had been deluded, and to long for a milder clime. If they did not sing the Switzer's Song of Home, they appreciated its sentiments, and gradually these immigrants removed to the banks of the Mississippi River. Some settled in Minnesota, and were the first to raise cattle, and till the soil.

CHAPTER XVI.

FORT SNELLING DURING ITS OCCUPANCY BY COMPANIES OF THE FIFTH REGIMENT U. S. INFANTRY.
A. D. 1819, TO A. D. 1827.

The rumor that Lord Selkirk was founding a colony on the borders of the United States, and that the British trading companies within the boundaries of what became the territory of Minnesota, convinced the authorities at Washington of the importance of a military occupation of the valley of the Upper Mississippi.

By direction of Major General Brown, the following order, on the tenth of February, 1819, was issued:

"Major General Macomb, commander of the Fifth Military department, will without delay, concentrate at Detroit the Fifth Regiment of Infantry, excepting the recruits otherwise directed by the general order herewith transmitted. As soon as the navigation of the lakes will admit, he will cause the regiment to be transported to Fort Howard; from thence, by the way of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, to Prairie du Chien, and, after detaching a sufficient number of companies to garrison Forts Crawford and Armstrong, the remainder will proceed to the mouth of the River St. Peter's, where they will establish a post, at which the headquarters of the regiment will be located. The regiment, previous to its departure, will receive the necessary supplies of clothing, provisions, arms, and ammunition. Immediate application will be made to Brigadier General Jesup, Quartermaster General, for funds necessary to execute the movements required by this order."

On the thirteenth of April, this additional order was issued, at Detroit:

"The season having now arrived when the lakes may be navigated with safety, a detachment of the Fifth Regiment, to consist of Major Marston's and Captain Fowle's companies, under the command of Major Muhlenburg, will proceed to Green Bay. Surgeon's Mate, R. M. Byrne, of the Fifth Regiment, will accompany the detachment. The Assistant Deputy Quartermaster General will furnish the necessary transport, and will send by the same opportunity two hundred barrels of provisions, which he will draw from the contractor at this post. The provisions must be examined and inspected, and properly put up for transportation. Colonel Leavenworth will, without delay, prepare his regiment to move to the post on the Mississippi, agreeable to the Division order of the tenth of February. The Assistant Deputy Quartermaster General will furnish the necessary transportation, to be ready by the first of May next. The Colonel will make requisition for such stores, ammunition, tools and implements as may be required, and he be able to take with him on the expedition. Particular instructions will be given to the Colonel, explaining the objects of his expedition."

EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1819.

On Wednesday, the last day of June, Col. Leavenworth and troops arrived from Green Bay, at Prairie du Chien. Scarcely had they reached this point when Charlotte Seymour, the wife of Lt. Nathan Clark, a native of Hartford, Ct., gave birth to a daughter, whose first baptismal name was Charlotte, after her mother, and the second Ouisconsin, given by the officers in view of the fact that she was born at the junction of that stream with the Mississippi.

In time Charlotte Ouisconsin married a young Lieutenant, a native of Princeton, New Jersey, and a graduate of West Point, and still resides with her husband, General H. P. Van Cleave, in the city of Minneapolis, living to do good as she has opportunity.

In June, under instructions from the War Department, Major Thomas Forsyth, connected with the office of Indian affairs, left St. Louis with two thousand dollars worth of goods to be distributed among the Sioux Indians, in accordance with the agreement of 1805, already referred to, by the late General Pike.

About nine o'clock of the morning of the fifth of July, he joined Leavenworth and his command at Prairie du Chien. Some time was occupied by Leavenworth awaiting the arrival of ordnance, provisions and recruits, but on Sunday morning, the eighth of August, about eight o'clock, the expedition set out for the point now known as Mendota. The flotilla was quite imposing; there were the Colonel's barge, fourteen batteaux with ninety-eight soldiers and officers, two large canal or Mackinaw boats, filled with various stores, and Forsyth's keel boat, containing goods and presents for the Indians. On the twenty-third of August, Forsyth reached the mouth of the Minnesota with his boat, and the next morning Col. Leavenworth arrived, and selecting a place at Mendota, near the present railroad bridge, he ordered the soldiers to cut down trees and make a clearing. On the next Saturday Col. Leavenworth, Major Vose, Surgeon Purcell, Lieutenant Clark and the wife of Captain Gooding invited the Falls of Saint Anthony with Forsyth, in his keel boat.

Early in September two more boats and a batteaux, with officers and one hundred and twenty recruits, arrived.

During the winter of 1820, Laidlow and others, in behalf of Lord Selkirk's Scotch settlers at Pembina, whose crops had been destroyed by grasshoppers, passed the Cantonment, on their way to Prairie du Chien, to purchase wheat. Upon the fifteenth of April they began their return with their Mackinaw boats, each loaded with two hundred bushels of wheat, one hundred of oats, and thirty of peas, and reached the mouth of the Minnesota early in May. Ascending this stream to Big Stone Lake, the boats were drawn on rollers a mile and a half to Lake Traverse, and on the third of June arrived at Pembina and cheered the desponding and needy settlers of the Selkirk colony.

The first sutler of the post was a Mr. Devotion. He brought with him a young man named Philander Prescott, who was born in 1801, at Phelps-town, Ontario county, New York. At first they stopped at Mud Hen Island, in the Mississippi below the mouth of the St. Croix River. Coming up late in the year 1819, at the site of the present town of Hastings they found a keel-boat loaded with supplies for the cantonment, in charge of Lieut. Oliver, detained by the ice.

Amid all the changes of the troops, Mr. Prescott remained nearly all his life in the vicinity of the post, to which he came when a mere lad, and was at length killed in the Sioux Massacre.

EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1820

In the spring of 1820, Jean Baptiste Faribault brought up Leavenworth's horses from Prairie du Chien.

The first Indian Agent at the post was a former army officer, Lawrence Taliaferro, pronounced Toliver. As he had the confidence of the Government for twenty-one successive years, he is deserving of notice.

His family was of Italian origin, and among the early settlers of Virginia. He was born in 1794, in King William county in that State, and when, in 1812, war was declared against Great Britain, with four brothers, he entered the army, and was commissioned as Lieutenant of the Thirty-fifth Infantry. He behaved gallantly at Fort Erie and Sackett's Harbor, and after peace was declared, he was retained as a First Lieutenant of the Third Infantry. In 1816 he was stationed at Fort Dearborn, now the site of Chicago. While on a furlough, he called one day upon President Monroe, who told him that a fort would be built near the Falls of Saint Anthony, and an Indian Agency established, to which he offered to appoint him. His commission was dated March 27th, 1819, and he proceeded in due time to his post.

On the fifth day of May, 1820, Leavenworth left his winter quarters at Mendota, crossed the stream and made a summer camp near the present military grave yard, which in consequence of a fine spring has been called "Camp Cold Water." The Indian agency, under Taliaferro, remained for a time at the old cantonment.

The commanding officer established a fine garden in the bottom lands of the Minnesota, and on the fifteenth of June the earliest garden peas were eaten. The first distinguished visitors at the new encampment were Governor Lewis Cass, of Michigan, and Henry Schoolcraft, who arrived in July, by way of Lake Superior and Sandy Lake.

The relations between Col. Leavenworth and Indian Agent Taliaferro were not entirely harmonious, growing out of a disagreement of views relative to the treatment of the Indians, and on the day of the arrival of Governor Cass, Taliaferro writes to Leavenworth:

"As it is now understood that I am agent for Indian affairs in this country, and you are about to leave the upper Mississippi, in all probability in the course of a month or two, I beg leave to suggest, for the sake of a general understanding with the Indian tribes in this country, that any medals, you may possess, would by being turned over to me, cease to be a topic of remark among the different Indian tribes under my direction. I will pass to you any voucher that may be required, and I beg leave to observe that any progress in influence is much impeded in consequence of this frequent intercourse with the garrison."

In a few days, the disastrous effect of Indians mingling with the soldiers was exhibited. On the third of August, the agent wrote to Leavenworth:

"His Excellency Governor Cass during his visit to this post remarked to me that the Indians in this quarter were spoiled, and at the same time said they should not be permitted to enter the camp. An unpleasant affair has lately taken place; I mean the stabbing of the old chief Mahgossau by his comrade. This was caused, doubtless, by an anxiety to obtain the chief's whiskey. I beg, therefore, that no whiskey whatever be given to any Indians, unless it be through their proper agent. While an overplus of whiskey thwarts the beneficent and humane policy of the government, it entails misery upon the Indians, and endangers their lives."

A few days after this note was written Josiah Snelling, who had been recently promoted to the Colonelcy of the Fifth Regiment, arrived with his family, relieved Leavenworth, and infused new life and energy. A little while before his arrival, the daughter of Captain Gooding was married to Lieutenant Green, the Adjutant of the regiment, the first marriage of white persons in Minnesota. Mrs. Snelling, a few days after her arrival, gave birth to a daughter, the first white child born in Minnesota, and after a brief existence of thirteen months, she died and was the first interred in the military grave yard, and for years the stone which marked its resting place, was visible.

The earliest manuscript in Minnesota, written at the Cantonment, is dated October 4, 1820, and is in the handwriting of Colonel Snelling. It reads: "In justice to Lawrence Taliaferro, Esq., Indian Agent at this post, we, the undersigned, officers of the Fifth Regiment here stationed, have presented him this paper, as a token, not only of our individual respect and esteem, but as an entire approval of his conduct and deportment as a public agent in this quarter. During the summer of 1820, a party of the Sisseton Sioux killed on the Missouri, Isadore Ponpon, a half-breed, and Joseph Andrews, a Canadian engaged in the fur trade. The Indian Agent, through Colin Campbell, as interpreter, notified the Sissetons that trade would cease with them, until the murderers were delivered. At a council held at Big Stone Lake, one of the murderers, and the aged father of another, agreed to surrender themselves to the commanding officer.

On the twelfth of November, accompanied by their friends, they approached the encampment in solemn procession, and marched to the centre of the parade. First appeared a Sisseton bearing a British flag; then the murderer and the devoted father of another, their arms pinioned, and large wooden splinters thrust through the flesh above the elbows indicating their contempt for pain and death; in the rear followed friends and relatives, with them chanting the death dirge. Having arrived in front of the guard, fire was kindled, and the British flag burned; then the murderer delivered up his medal, and both prisoners were surrounded. Col. Snelling detained the old chief, while the murderer was sent to St. Louis for trial.

EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1821.

Col. Snelling built the fort in the shape of a lozenge, in view of the projection between the two rivers. The first row of barracks was of hewn logs, obtained from the pine forests of Rum River, but the other buildings were of stone. Mrs. Van Cleve, the daughter of Lieutenant, afterwards Captain Clark, writes:

"In 1821 the fort, although not complete, was fit for occupancy. My father had assigned to him the quarters next beyond the steps leading to the Commissary's stores, and during the year my little sister Juliet was born there. At a later period my father and Major Garland obtained permission to build more commodious quarters outside the walls, and the result was the two stone houses afterwards occupied by the Indian Agent and interpreter, lately destroyed."

Early in August, a young and intelligent mixed blood, Alexis Bailly, in after years a member of the legislature of Minnesota, left the cantonment with the first drove of cattle for the Selkirk Settlement, and the next winter returned with Col. Robert Dickson and Messrs. Laidlow and Mackenzie.

The next month, a party of Sissetons visited the Indian Agent, and told him that they had started with another of the murderers, to which reference has been made, but that on the way he had, through fear of being hung, killed himself.

This fall, a mill was constructed for the use of the garrison, on the west side of St. Anthony Falls, under the supervision of Lieutenant McCabe. During the fall, George Gooding, Captain by brevet, resigned, and became Sutler at Prairie du Chien. He was a native of Massachusetts, and entered the army as ensign in 1808. In 1810 he became a Second Lieutenant, and the next year was wounded at Tippecanoe.

In the middle of October, there embarked on the keel-boat "Saucy Jack," for Prairie du Chien, Col. Snelling, Lieut. Baxley, Major Taliaferro, and Mrs. Gooding.

EVENTS OF 1822 AND 1823.

Early in January, 1822, there came to the Fort from the Red River of the North, Col. Robert Dickson, Laidlow, a Scotch farmer, the superintendent of Lord Selkirk's experimental farm, and one Mackenzie, on their way to Prairie du Chien. Dickson returned with a drove of cattle, but owing to the hostility of the Sioux his cattle were scattered, and never reached Pembina.

During the winter of 1823, Agent Taliaferro was in Washington. While returning in March, he was at a hotel in Pittsburg, when he received a note signed G. C. Beltrami, who was an Italian exile, asking permission to accompany him to the Indian territory. He was tall and commanding in appearance, and gentlemanly in bearing, and Taliaferro was so forcibly impressed as to accede to the request. After reaching St. Louis they embarked on the first steamboat for the Upper Mississippi.

It was named the Virginia, and was built in Pittsburg, twenty-two feet in width, and one hundred and eighteen feet in length, in charge of a Captain Crawford. It reached the Fort on the tenth of May, and was saluted by the discharge of cannon. Among the passengers, besides the Agent and the Italian, were Major Biddle, Lieut. Russell, and others.

The arrival of the Virginia is an era in the history of the Dakotah nation, and will probably be transmitted to their posterity as long as they exist as a people. They say their sacred men, the night before, dreamed of seeing some monster of the waters, which frightened them very much.

As the boat neared the shore, men, women, and children beheld with silent astonishment, supposing that it was some enormous water-spirit, coughing, pulling out hot breath, and splashing water in every direction. When it touched the landing their fears prevailed, and they retreated some distance; but when the blowing off of steam commenced they were completely unnerved: mothers forgetting their children, with streaming hair, sought hiding-places; chiefs, renouncing their stoicism, scampered away like affrighted animals.

The peace agreement between the Ojibways and Dahkotahs, made through the influence of Governor Cass, was of brief duration, the latter being the first to violate the provisions.

On the fourth of June, Taliaferro, the Indian agent among the Dahkotahs, took advantage of the presence of a large number of Ojibways to renew the agreement for the cessation of hostilities. The council hall of the agent was a large room of logs, in which waved conspicuously the flag of the United States, surrounded by British colors and medals that had been delivered up from time to time by Indian chiefs.

Among the Dahkotah chiefs present were Wapashaw, Little Crow, and Penneshaw; of the Ojibways there were Kendouswa, Moshomene, and Pasheskonoepé. After mutual accusations and excuses concerning the infraction of the previous treaty, the Dahkotahs lighted the calumet, they having been the first to infringe upon the agreement of 1820. After smoking and passing the pipe of peace to the Ojibways, who passed through the same formalities, they all shook hands as a pledge of renewed amity.

The morning after the council, Flat Mouth, the distinguished Ojibway chief, arrived, who had left his lodge vowing that he would never be at peace with the Dahkotahs. As he stepped from his canoe, Penneshaw held out his hand, but was repulsed with scorn. The Dahkotah warrior immediately gave the alarm, and in a moment runners were on their way to the neighboring villages to raise a war party.

On the sixth of June, the Dahkotahs had assembled, stripped for a fight, and surrounded the Ojibways. The latter, fearing the worst, concealed their women and children behind the old barracks which had been used by the troops while the fort was being erected. At the solicitation of the agent and commander of the fort, the Dahkotahs desisted from an attack and retired.

On the seventh, the Ojibways left for their homes; but, in a few hours, while they were making a portage at Falls of St. Anthony, they were again approached by the Dahkotahs, who would have attacked them, if a detachment of troops had not arrived from the fort.

A rumor reaching Penneshaw's village that he had been killed at the falls, his mother seized an Ojibway maiden, who had been a captive from infancy, and, with a tomahawk, cut her in two. Upon the return of the son in safety he was much gratified at what he considered the prowess of his parent.

On the third of July, 1823, Major Long, of the engineers, arrived at the fort in command of an expedition to explore the Minnesota River, and the region along the northern boundary line of the United States. Beltrami, at the request of Col. Snelling, was permitted to be of the party, and Major Taliaferro kindly gave him a horse and equipments.

The relations of the Italian to Major Long were not pleasant, and at Pembina Beltrami left the expedition, and with a "bois brulé", and two Ojibways proceeded and discovered the northern sources of the Mississippi, and suggested where the western sources would be found; which was verified by Schoolcraft nine years later. About the second week in September Beltrami returned to the fort by way of the Mississippi, escorted by forty or fifty Ojibways, and on the 25th departed for New Orleans, where he published his discoveries in the French language.

The mill which was constructed in 1821, for sawing lumber, at the Falls of St. Anthony, stood upon the site of the Holmes and Sible Mill, in Minneapolis, and in 1823 was fitted up for grinding flour. The following extracts from correspondence addressed to Lieut. Clark, Commissary at Fort Snelling, will be read with interest.

Under the date of August 5th, 1823, General Gibson writes: "From a letter addressed by Col. Snelling to the Quartermaster General, dated the 2d of April, I learn that a large quantity of wheat would be raised this summer. The assistant Commissary of Subsistence at St. Louis has been instructed to forward siekles and a pair of millstones to St. Peters. If any flour is manufactured from the wheat raised, be pleased to let me know as early as practicable, that I may deduct the quantity manufactured at the post from the quantity advertised to be contracted for."

In another letter, General Gibson writes: "Below you will find the amount charged on the books against the garrison at Ft. St. Anthony, for certain articles, and forwarded for the use of the troops at that post, which you will deduct from the payments to be made for flour raised and turned over to you for issue :

One pair buhr millstones.....	$250	11
337 pounds plaster of Paris.....	20	22
Two dozen sickles.....	18	00

Total.....$288 33

Upon the 19th of January, 1824, the General writes: "The mode suggested by Col. Snelling, of fixing the price to be paid to the troops for the flour furnished by them is deemed equitable and just. You will accordingly pay for the flour $3.33 per barrel."

Charlotte Oniscousin Van Cleve, now the oldest person living who was connected with the cantonment in 1819, in a paper read before the Department of American History of the Minnesota Historical Society in January, 1880, wrote :

"In 1823, Mrs. Snelling and my mother established the first Sunday School in the Northwest. It was held in the basement of the commanding officer's quarters, and was productive of much good. Many of the soldiers, with their families, attended. Joe. Brown, since so well known in this country, then a drummer boy, was one of the pupils. A Bible class, for the officers and their wives, was formed, and all became so interested in the history of the patriarchs, that it furnished topics of conversation for the week. One day after the Sunday School lesson on the death of Moses, a member of the class meeting my mother on the parade, after exchanging the usual greetings, said, in saddened tones, 'But don't you feel sorry that Moses is dead?'

Early in the spring of 1824, the Tully boys were rescued from the Sioux and brought to the fort. They were children of one of the settlers of Lord Selkirk's colony, and with their parents and others, were on their way from Red River Valley to settle near Fort Snelling.

The party was attacked by Indians, and the parents of these children murdered, and the boys captured. Through the influence of Col. Snelling the children were ransomed and brought to the fort. Col. Snelling took John and my father Andrew, the younger of the two. Everyone became interested in the orphans, and we loved Andrew as if he had been our own little brother. John died some two years after his arrival at the fort, and Mrs. Snelling asked me when I last saw her if a tomb stone had been placed at his grave, she as requested, during a visit to the old home some years ago. She said she received a promise that it should be done, and seemed quite disappointed when I told her it had not been attended to."

Andrew Tully, after being educated at an Orphan Asylum in New York City, became a carriage maker, and died a few years ago in that vicinity.

EVENTS OF THE YEAR A. D. 1824.

In the year 1824 the Fort was visited by Gen. Scott, on a tour of inspection, and at his suggestion, its name was changed from Fort St. Anthony to Fort Snelling. The following is an extract from his report to the War Department :

"This work, of which the War Department is in possession of a plan, reflects the highest credit on Col. Snelling, his officers and men. The defenses, and for the most part, the public storehouses, shops and quarters being constructed of stone, the whole is likely to endure as long as the post shall remain a frontier one. The cost of erection to the government has been the amount paid for tools and iron, and the per diem paid to soldiers employed as mechanics. I wish to suggest to the General in Chief, and through him to the War Department, the propriety of calling this work Fort Snelling, as a just compliment to the meritorious officer under whom it has been erected. The present name, (Fort St. Anthony), is foreign to all our associations, and is, besides, geographically incorrect, as the work stands at the junction of the Mississippi and St. Peter's [Minnesota] Rivers, eight miles below the great falls of the Mississippi, called after St. Anthony."

In 1824, Major Taliaferro proceeded to Washington with a delegation of Chippewas and Dakotahs, headed by Little Crow, the grand father of the chief of the same name, who was engaged in the late horrible massacre of defenceless women and children. The object of the visit, was to secure a convocation of all the tribes of the Upper Mississippi, at Prairie du Chein, to define their boundary lines and establish friendly relations. When they reached Prairie du Chein, Walmatah, a Yankton chief, and also Wapashaw, by the whisperings of mean traders, became disaffected, and wished to turn back. Little Crow, perceiving this, stopped all hesitancy by the following speech: "My friends, you can do as you please. I am no coward, nor can my ears be pulled about by evil counsels. We are here and should go on, and do some good for our nation. I have taken our Father here (Taliaferro) by the coat tail, and will follow him until I take by the hand, our great American Father."

While on board of a steamer on the Ohio River, Marepee or the Cloud, in consequence of a bad dream, jumped from the stern of the boat, and was supposed to be drowned, but he swam ashore and made his way to St. Charles, Mo., there to be murdered by some Saes. The remainder safely arrived in Washington and accomplished the object of the visit. The Dakotahs returned by way of New York, and while there were anxious to pay a visit to certain parties with Wm. Dickson, a half-breed son of Col. Robert Dickson, the trader, who in the war of 1812-15 led the Indians of the Northwest against the United States.

After this visit Little Crow carried a new double-barreled gun, and said that a medicine man by the name of Peters gave it to him for signing a certain paper, and that he also promised he would send a keel-boat full of goods to them. The medicine man referred to was the Rev. Samuel Peters, an Episcopal clergyman, who had made himself obnoxious during the Revolution by his tory sentiments, and was subsequently nominated as Bishop of Vermont.

Peters asserted that in 1806 he had purchased of the heirs of Jonathan Carver the right to a tract of land on the upper Mississippi, embracing St. Paul, alleged to have been given to Carver by the Dakotahs, in 1767.

The next year there arrived, in one of the keel-boats from Prairie du Chien, at Fort Snelling a box marked Col. Robert Dickson. On opening, it was found to contain a few presents from Peters to Dickson's Indian wife, a long letter, and a copy of Carver's alleged grant, written on parchment.

EVENTS OF THE YEARS 1825 AND 1826.

On the 30th of October, 1825, seven Indian women in canoes, were drawn into the rapids above the Falls of St. Anthony. All were saved but a lame girl, who was dashed over the cataract, and a month later her body was found at Pike's Island in front of the fort.

Forty years ago, the means of communication between Fort Snelling and the civilized world were very limited. The mail in winter was usually carried by soldiers to Prairie du Chien. On the 26th of January, 1826, there was great joy in the fort, caused by the return from furlough of Lieutenants Baxley and Russell, who brought with them the first mail received for five months. About this period there was also another excitement, caused by the seizure of liquors in the trading house of Alexis Bailey, at New Hope, now Mendota.

During the months of February and March, in this year, snow fell to the depth of two or three feet, and there was great suffering among the Indians. On one occasion, thirty lodges of Sisseton and other Sioux were overtaken by a snow storm on a large prairie. The storm continued for three days, and provisions grew scarce, for the party were seventy in number. At last, the stronger men, with the few pairs of snow-shoes in their possession, started for a trading post one hundred miles distant. They reached their destination half alive, and the traders sympathizing sent four Canadians with supplies for those left behind. After great toil they reached the scene of distress, and found many dead, and, what was more horrible, the living feeding on the corpses of their relatives. A mother had eaten her dead child and a portion of her own father's arms. The shock to her nervous system was so great that she lost her reason. Her name was Pashuno-ta, and she was both young and good looking. One day in September, while at Fort Snelling, she asked Captain Jonett if he knew which was the best portion of a man to eat, at the same time taking him by the collar of his coat. He replied with great astonishment, "No!" and she then said, "The arms." She then asked for a piece of his servant to eat, as she was nice and fat. A few days after this she dashed herself from the bluffs near Fort Snelling, into the river. Her body was found just above the mouth of the Minnesota, and decently interred by the agent.

The spring of 1826 was very backward. On the 20th of March snow fell to the depth of one or one and a half feet on a level, and drifted in heaps from six to fifteen feet in height. On the 5th of April, early in the day, there was a violent storm, and the ice was still thick in the river. During the storm flashes of lightning were seen and thunder heard. On the 10th, the thermometer was four degrees above zero. On the 14th there was rain, and on the next day the St. Peter river broke up, but the ice on the Mississippi remained firm. On the 21st, at noon, the ice began to move, and carried away Mr. Faribault's houses on the east side of the river. For several days the river was twenty feet above low water mark, and all the houses on low lands were swept off. On the second of May, the steamboat Lawrence, Captain Reeder, arrived.

Major Taliaferro had inherited several slaves, which he used to hire to officers of the garrison. On the 31st of March, his negro boy, William, was employed by Col. Snelling, the latter agreeing to clothe him. About this time, William attempted to shoot a hawk, but instead shot a small boy, named Henry Cullum, and nearly killed him. In May, Captain Plympton, of the Fifth Infantry, wished to purchase his negro woman, Eliza, but he refused, as it was his intention, ultimately, to free his slaves. Another of his negro girls, Harriet, was married at the fort, the Major performing the ceremony, to the now historic Dred Scott, who was then a slave of Surgeon Emerson. The only person that ever purchased a slave, to retain in slavery, was Alexis Bailly, who bought a man of Major Garland. The Sioux, at first, had no prejudices against negroes. They called them "Black Frenchmen," and placing their hands on their woolly heads would laugh heartily.

The following is a list of the steamboats that had arrived at Fort Snelling, up to May 26, 1826:

1 Virginia, May 10, 1823; 2 Neville; 3 Putnam, April 2, 1825; 3 Mandan; 5 Indiana; 6 Lawrence, May 2, 1826; 7 Sciota; 8 Eclipse; 9 Josephine; 10 Fulton; 11 Red Rover; 12 Black Rover; 13 Warrior; 14 Enterprise; 15 Volant.

Life within the walls of a fort is sometimes the exact contrast of a paradise. In the year 1826 a Pandora box was opened, among the officers, and dissensions began to prevail. One young officer, a graduate of West Point, whose father had been a professor in Princeton College, fought a duel with, and slightly wounded, William Joseph, the talented son of Colonel Snelling, who was then twenty-two years of age, and had been three years at West Point. At a Court Martial convened to try the officer for violating the Articles of War, the accused objected to the testimony of Lieut. William Alexander, a Tennessean, not a graduate of the Military Academy, on the ground that he was an infidel. Alexander, hurt by this allusion, challenged the objector, and another duel was fought, resulting only in slight injuries to the clothing of the combatants. Inspector General E. P. Gaines, after this, visited the fort, and in his report of the inspection he wrote: "A defect in the discipline of this regiment has appeared in the character of certain personal controversies, between the Colonel and several of his young officers, the particulars of which I forbear to enter into, assured as I am that they will be developed in the proceedings of a general court martial ordered for the trial of Lieutenant Hunter and other officers at Jefferson Barracks."

"From a conversation with the Colonel I can have no doubt that he has erred in the course pursued by him in reference to some of the controversies, inasmuch as he has intimated to his officers his willingness to sanction in certain cases, and even to participate in personal conflicts, contrary to the twenty-fifth, Article of War."

The Colonel's son, William Joseph, after this passed several years among traders and Indians, and became distinguished as a poet and brilliant author.

His "Tales of the Northwest," published in Boston in 1820, by Hilliard, Gray, Little & Wilkins, is a work of great literary ability, and Catlin thought the book was the most faithful picture of Indian life he had read. Some of his poems were also of a high order. One of his pieces, deficient in dignity, was a caustic satire upon modern American poets, and was published under the title of "Truth, a Gift for Scribblers."

Nathaniel P. Willis, who had winced under the last, wrote the following lampoon:

"Oh, smelling Joseph! Thou art like a cur.
I'm told thou once did live by hunting fur:
Of bigger dogs thou smellest, and, in sooth,
Of one extreme, perhaps, can tell the truth.
'Tis a wise shift, and shows thou know'st thy powers,
To leave the 'North West tales,' and take to smelling ours."

In 1832 a second edition of "Truth" appeared with additions and emendations. In this appeared the following pasquinade upon Willis:

"I live by hunting fur, thou say'st, so let it be,
But tell me, Natty! Had I hunted thee,
Had not my time been thrown away, young sir,
And eke my powder? Puppies have no fur.

Our tails? Thou ownest thee to a tail,
I've scanned thee o'er and o'er
But, though I guessed the species right,
I was not sure before.

Our savages, authentic travelers say,
To natural fools, religious homage pay, Hadst thou been born in wigwam's smoke, and died in,
Natty! thine apotheosis had been certain."

Snelling died at Chelsea, Mass., December sixteenth, 1848, a victim to the appetite which enslaved Robert Burns.

In the year 1826, a small party of Ojibways (Chippeways) came to see the Indian Agent, and three of them ventured to visit the Columbia Fur Company's trading house, two miles from the Fort. While there, they became aware of their danger, and desired two of the white men attached to the establishment to accompany them back, thinking that their presence might be some protection. They were in error. As they passed a little copse, three Dahkotahs sprang from behind a log with the speed of light, fired their pieces into the face of the foremost, and then fled. The guns must have been double loaded, for the man's head was literally blown from his shoulders, and his white companions were spattered with brains and blood. The survivors gained the Fort without further molestation. Their comrade was buried on the spot where he fell. A staff was set up on his grave, which became a landmark, and received the name of The Murder Pole. The murderers boasted of their achievement and with impunity. They and their tribe thought that they had struck a fair blow on their ancient enemies, in a becoming manner. It was only said, that Toopunkah Zeze of the village of the Batture aux Fierres, and two others, had each acquired a right to wear skunk skins on their heels and war-eagles' feathers on their heads.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1827.

On the twenty-eighth of May, 1827, the Ojibway chief at Sandy Lake, Kee-wee-zais-hish called by the English, Flat Mouth with seven warriors and some women and children, in all amounting to twenty-four, arrived about sunrise at Fort Snelling. Walking to the gates of the prison, they asked the protection of Colonel Snelling and Talliaferro, the Indian agent. They were told, that as long as they remained under the United States flag, they were secure, and were ordered to encamp within musket shot of the high stone walls of the fort.

During the afternoon, a Dahkotah, Toopunkah Zeze, from a village near the first rapids of the Minnesota, visited the Ojibway camp. They were cordially received, and a feast of meat and corn and sugar, was soon made ready. The wooden plates emptied of their contents, they engaged in conversation, and whiffed the peace pipe.

That night, some officers and their friends were spending a pleasant evening at the head-quarters of Captain Clark, which was in one of the stone houses which used to stand outside of the walls of the fort. As Captain Cruger was walking on the porch, a bullet whizzed by, and rapid firing was heard.

As the Dahkotahs, or Sioux, left the Ojibway camp, notwithstanding their friendly talk, they turned and discharged their guns with deadly aim upon their entertainers, and ran off with a shout of satisfaction. The report was heard by the sentinel of the fort, and he cried, repeatedly, "Corporal of the guard!" and soon at the gates, were the Ojibways, with their women and the wounded, telling their tale of woe in wild and incoherent language. Two had been killed and six wounded. Among others, was a little girl about seven years old, who was pierced through both thighs with a bullet. Surgeon McMahon made every effort to save her life, but without avail.

Flat Mouth, the chief, reminded Colonel Snelling that he had been attacked while under the protection of the United States flag, and early the next morning, Captain Clark, with one hundred soldiers, proceeded towards Land's End, a trading-post of the Columbia Fur Company, on the Minnesota, a mile above the former residence of Franklin Steele, where the Dahkotahs were supposed to be. The soldiers had just left the large gate of the fort, when a party of Dahkotahs, in battle array, appeared on one of the prairie hills. After some parleying they turned their backs, and being pursued, thirty-two were captured near the trading-post.

Colonel Snelling ordered the prisoners to be brought before the Ojibways, and two being pointed out as participants in the slaughter of the preceding night, they were delivered to the aggrieved party to deal with in accordance with their customs. They were led out to the plain in front of the gate of the fort, and when placed nearly without the range of the Ojibway guns, they were told to run for their lives. With the rapidity of deer they bounded away, but the Ojibway bullet flew faster, and after a few steps, they fell gasping on the ground, and were soon lifeless. Then the savage nature displayed itself in all its hideousness. Women and children danced for joy, and placing their fingers in the bullet holes, from which the blood oozed, they licked them with delight. The men tore the scalps from the dead, and seemed to luxuriate in the privilege of plunging their knives through the corpses. After the execution, the Ojibways returned to the fort, and were met by the Colonel. He had prevented all over whom his authority extended from witnessing the scene, and had done his best to confine the excitement to the Indians. The same day a deputation of Dahkotah warriors received audience, regretting the violence that had been done by their young men, and agreeing to deliver up the ringleaders.

At the time appointed, a son of Flat Mouth, with those of the Ojibwa party that were not wounded, escorted by United States troops, marched forth to meet the Dahkotah deputation, on the prairie just beyond the old residence of the Indian agent. With much solemnity two more of the guilty were handed over to the assaulted. One was fearless, and with firmness stripped himself of his clothing and ornaments, and distributed them. The other could not face death with composure. He was noted for a hideous hare-lip, and had a bad reputation among his fellows. In the spirit of a coward he prayed for life, to the mortification of his tribe. The same opportunity was presented to them as to the first, of running for their lives. At the first fire the coward fell a corpse; but his brave companion, though wounded, ran on, and had nearly reached the goal of safety, when a second bullet killed him. The body of the coward now became a common object of loathing for both Dahkotahs and Ojibways.

Colonel Snelling told the Ojibways that the bodies must be removed, and then they took the scalped Dahkotahs, and dragging them by the heels, threw them off the bluff into the river, a hundred and fifty feet beneath. The dreadful scene was now over; and a detachment of troops was sent with the old chief Flat Mouth, to escort him out of the reach of Dahkotah vengeance.

An eyewitness wrote: "After this catastrophe, all the Dahkotahs quitted the vicinity of Fort Snelling, and did not return to it for some months. It was said that they formed a conspiracy to demand a council, and kill the Indian Agent and the commanding officer. If this was a fact, they had no opportunity, or wanted the spirit, to execute their purpose.

"The Flat Mouth's hand lingered in the fort till their wounded comrade died. He was sensible of his condition, and bore his pains with great fortitude. When he felt his end approach, he desired that his horse might be gaily caparisoned, and brought to the hospital window, so that he might touch the animal. He then took from his medicine bag a large cake of maple sugar, and held it forth. It may seem strange, but it is true, that the beast ate it from his hand. His features were radiant with delight as he fell back on the pillow exhausted. His horse had eaten the sugar, he said, and he was sure of a favorable reception and comfortable quarters in the other world. Half an hour after, he breathed his last. We tried to discover the details of his superstition, but could not succeed. It is a subject on which Indians unwillingly discourse."

In the fall of 1826, all the troops at Prairie du Chien had been removed to Fort Snelling, the commander taking with him two Winnebagoes that had been confined in Fort Crawford. After the soldiers left the Prairie, the Indians in the vicinity were quite insolent.

In June, 1827, two keel-boats passed Prairie du Chien on the way to Fort Snelling with provisions. When they reached Wapashaw village, on the site of the present town of Winona, the crew were ordered to come ashore by the Dakotahs. Complying, they found themselves surrounded by Indians with hostile intentions. The boatmen had no fire-arms, but assuming a bold mien and a defiant voice, the captain of the keel-boats ordered the savages to leave the decks; which was successful. The boats pushed on, and at Red Wing and Kaposia the Indians showed that they were not friendly, though they did not molest the boats. Before they started on their return from Fort Snelling, the men on board, amounting to thirty-two, were all provided with muskets and a barrel of ball cartridges.

When the descending keel-boats passed Wapashaw, the Dakotas were engaged in the war dance, and menaced them, but made no attack. Below this point one of the boats moved in advance of the other, and when near the mouth of the Bad Axe, the half-breeds on board descried hostile Indians on the banks. As the channel neared the shore, the sixteen men on the first boat were greeted with the war whoop and a volley of rifle balls from the excited Winnebagoes, killing two of the crew. Rushing into their canoes, the Indians made the attempt to board the boat, and two were successful. One of these stationed himself at the bow of the boat, and fired with killing effect on the men below deck. An old soldier of the last war with Great Britain, called Saucy Jack, at last despatched him, and began to rally the fainting spirits on board. During the fight the boat had stuck on a sand-bar. With four companions, amid a shower of balls from the savages, he plunged into the water and pushed off the boat, and thus moved out of reach of the galling shots of the Winnebagoes. As they floated down the river during the night, they heard a wail in a canoe behind them, the voice of a father mourning the death of the son who had sealed the deck, and was now a corpse in possession of the white men. The rear boat passed the Bad Axe river late in the night, and escaped an attack.

The first keel-boat arrived at Prairie du Chein, with two of their crew dead, four wounded, and the Indian that had been killed on the boat. The two dead men had been residents of the Prairie, and now the panic was increased. On the morning of the twenty-eighth of June the second keel-boat appeared, and among her passengers was Joseph Snelling, the talented son of the colonel, who wrote a story of deep interest, based on the facts narrated.

At a meeting of the citizens it was resolved to repair old Fort Crawford, and Thomas McNair was appointed captain. Dirt was thrown around the bottom logs of the fortification to prevent its being fired, and young Snelling was put in command of one of the block-houses. On the next day a voyageur named Loyer, and the well-known trader Duncan Graham, started through the interior, west of the Mississippi, with intelligence of the murders, to Fort Snelling. Intelligence of this attack was received at the fort, on the evening of the ninth of July, and Col. Snelling started in keel boats with four companies to Fort Crawford, and on the seventeenth four more companies left under Major Fowle. After an absence of six weeks, the soldiers, without firing a gun at the enemy, returned.

A few weeks after the attack upon the keel boats General Gaines inspected the Fort, and, subsequently in a communication to the War Department wrote as follows;

"The main points of defence against an enemy appear to have been in some respects sacrificed, in the effort to secure the comfort and convenience of troops in peace. These are important considerations, but on an exposed frontier the primary object ought to be security against the attack of an enemy.

"The buildings are too large, too numerous, and extending over a space entirely too great, enclosing a large parade, five times greater than is at all desirable in that climate. The buildings for the most part seem well constructed, of good stone and other materials, and they contain every desirable convenience, comfort and security as barracks and store houses.

"The work may be rendered very strong and adapted to a garrison of two hundred men by removing one-half the buildings, and with the materials of which they are constructed, building a tower sufficiently high to command the hill between the Mississippi and St. Peter's [Minnesota], and by a block house on the extreme point, or brow of the cliff, near the commandant's quarters, to secure most effectually the banks of the river, and the boats at the landing.

"Much credit is due to Colonel Snelling, his officers and men, for their immense labors and excellent workmanship exhibited in the construction of these barracks and store houses, but this has been effected too much at the expense of the discipline of the regiment."

From reports made from 1823 to 1826, the health of the troops was good. In the year ending September thirty, 1823, there were but two deaths; in 1824 only six, and in 1825 but seven.

In 1823 there were three desertions, in 1824 twenty-two, and in 1825 twenty-nine. Most of the deserters were fresh recruits and natives of America. Ten of the deserters were foreigners, and five of these were born in Ireland. In 1826 there were eight companies numbering two hundred and fourteen soldiers quartered in the Fort.

During the fall of 1827 the Fifth Regiment was relieved by a part of the First, and the next year Colonel Snelling proceeded to Washington on business, where he died with inflammation of the brain. Major General Macomb announcing his death in an order, wrote :

"Colonel Snelling joined the army in early youth. In the battle of Tippecanoe, he was distinguished for gallantry and good conduct. Subsequently and during the whole late war with Great Britain, from the battle of Brownstown to the termination of the contest, he was actively employed in the field, with credit to himself, and honor to his country."

CHAPTER XVII.

Arrival of J. N. Nicollet—Marriage of James Wells—Nicollet's letter from Falls of St. Anthony—Perils of Martin McLeod—Chippeway treachery—Sioux Revenge—Ruin River and Stillwater battles—Grog shops near the Fort.

On the second of July 1836, the steamboat Saint Peter landed supplies, and among its passengers was the distinguished French astronomer, Jean N. Nicollet (Nicolay). Major Taliaferro on the twelfth of July, wrote: "Mr. Nicollet, on a visit to the post for scientific research, and at present in my family, has shown me the late work of Henry R. Schoolcraft on the discovery of the source of the Mississippi; which claim is ridiculous in the extreme." On the twenty-seventh, Nicollet ascended the Mississippi on a tour of observation.

James Wells, a trader, who afterwards was a member of the legislature, at the house of Oliver Crotte, near the fort, was married on the twelfth of September, by Agent Taliaferro, to Jane, a daughter of Duncan Graham. Wells was killed in 1862, by the Sioux, at the time of the massacre in the Minnesota Valley.

Nicollet in September returned from his trip to Leech Lake, and on the twenty-seventh wrote the following to Major Taliaferro the Indian Agent at the fort, which is supposed to be the earliest letter extant written from the site of the city of Minneapolis. As the principal hotel and one of the finest avenues of that city bears his name it is worthy of preservation. He spelled his name sometimes Nicoley, and the pronunciation in English, would be Nicolay, the same as if written Nicollet in French. The letter shows that he had not mastered the English language: "ST. ANTHONY'S FALLS, 27th September, 1836.

DEAR FRIEND:—I arrived last evening about dark; all well, nothing lost, nothing broken, happy and a very successful journey. But I done exhausted, and nothing can relieve me, but the pleasure of meeting you again under your hospitable roof, and to see all the friends of the garrison who have been so kind to me.

"This letter is more particularly to give you a very extraordinary tide. Flat Mouth, the chief of Leech Lake and suite, ten in number are with me. The day before yesterday I met them again at Swan river where they detained me one day. I had to hear a new harangue and gave answer. All terminated by their own resolution that they ought to give you the hand, as well as to the Guinas of the Fort (Colonel Davenport.) I thought it my duty to acquaint you with it beforehand. Peace or war are at stake of the visit they pay you. Please give them a good welcome until I have reported to you and Colonel Davenport all that has taken place during my stay among the Pillagers. But be assured I have not trespassed and that I have behaved as would have done a good citizen of the U. S. As to Schoolcraft's statement alluding to you, you will have full and complete satisfaction from Flat Mouth himself. In haste, your friend, J. N. NICOLEY."

EVENTS OF A. D. 1837.

On the seventeenth of March, 1837, there arrived Martin McLeod, who became a prominent citizen of Minnesota, and the legislature has given his name to a county.

He left the Red River country on snow shoes, with two companions, one a Polander and the other an Irishman named Hays, and Pierre Bottineau as interpreter. Being lost in a violent snow storm the Pole and Irishman perished. He and his guide, Bottineau, lived for a time on the flesh of one of their dogs. After being twenty-six days without seeing any one, the survivors reached the trading post of Joseph R. Brown, at Lake Traverse, and from thence they came to the fort.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1838.

In the month of April, eleven Sioux were slain in a dastardly manner, by a party of Ojibways, under the noted and elder Hole-in-the-Day. The Chippeways feigned the warmest friendship, and at dark lay down in the tents by the side of the Sioux, and in the night silently arose and killed them. The occurrence took place at the Chippeway River, about thirty miles from Lac qui Parle, and the next day the Rev. G. H. Pond, the Indian missionary, accompanied by a Sioux, went out and buried the mutilated and scalpless bodies.

On the second of August old Hole-in-the-Day, and some Ojibways, came to the fort. They stopped first at the cabin of Peter Quinn, whose wife was a half-breed Chippeway, about a mile from the fort.

The missionary, Samuel W. Pond, told the agent that the Sioux, of Lake Calhoun were aroused, and on their way to attack the Chippeways. The agent quieted them for a time, but two of the relatives of those slain at Lac qui Parle in April, hid themselves near Quinn's house, and as Hole-in-the-Day and his associates were passing, they fired and killed one Chippeway and wounded another. Obequette, a Chippeway from Red Lake, succeeded, however, in shooting a Sioux while he was in the act of scalping his comrade. The Chippeways were brought within the fort as soon as possible, and at nine o'clock a Sioux was confined in the guard-house as a hostage.

Notwithstanding the murdered Chippeway had been buried in the graveyard of the fort for safety, an attempt was made on the part of some of the Sioux, to dig it up. On the evening of the sixth, Major Plympton sent the Chippeways across the river to the east side, and ordered them to go home as soon as possible.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1839.

On the twentieth day of June the elder Hole-in-the-Day arrived from the Upper Mississippi with several hundred Chippeways. Upon their return homeward the Mississippi and Mille Laes band encamped the first night at the Falls of Saint Anthony, and some of the Sioux visited them and smoked the pipe of peace.

On the second of July, about sunrise, a son-in-law of the chief of the Sioux band, at Lake Calhoun, named Meekaw or Badger, was killed and scalped by two Chippeways of the Pillager band, relatives of him who lost his life near Patrick Quinn's the year before. The excitement was intense among the Sioux, and immediately war parties started in pursuit. Hole-in-the-Day's band was not sought, but the Mille Laes and Saint Croix Chippeways. The Lake Calhoun Sioux, with those from the villages on the Minnesota, assembled at the Falls of Saint Anthony, and on the morning of the fourth of July, came up with the Mille Laes Chippeways on Rum River, before sunrise. Not long after the war whoop was raised and the Sioux attacked, killing and wounding ninety.

The Kaposia band of Sioux pursued the Saint Croix Chippeways, and on the third of July found them in the Penitentiary ravine at Stillwater, under the influence of whisky. Aitkin, the old trader, was with them. The sight of the Sioux tended to make them sober, but in the fight twenty-one were killed and twenty-nine were wounded.

Whisky, during the year 1839, was freely introduced, in the face of the law prohibiting it. The first boat of the season, the Ariel, came to the fort on the fourteenth of April, and brought twenty barrels of whisky for Joseph R. Brown, and on the twenty-first of May, the Glaucus brought six barrels of liquor for David Faribault. On the thirtieth of June, some soldiers went to Joseph R. Brown's groggery on the opposite side of the Mississippi, and that night forty-seven were in the guard-house for drunkenness. The demoralization then existing, led to a letter by Surgeon Emerson, on duty at the fort, to the Surgeon General of the United States army, in which he writes:

"The whisky is brought here by citizens who are pouring in upon us and settling themselves on the opposite shore of the Mississippi river, in defiance of our worthy commanding officer, Major J. Plympton, whose authority they set at naught. At this moment there is a citizen named Brown, once a soldier in the Fifth Infantry, who was discharged at this post, while Colonel Snelling commanded, and who has been since employed by the American Fur Company, actually building on the land marked out by the land officers as the reserve, and within gunshot distance of the fort, a very expensive whisky shop."

CHAPTER XVIII.

INDIAN TRIBES IN MINNESOTA AT THE TIME OF ITS ORGANIZATION.

Sioux or Dahkotchah people—Meaning of words Sioux and Dahkotchah—Early villages—Residence of Sioux in 1849—The Winnebagoes—The Ojibways or Chippeways.

The three Indian nations who dwelt in this region after the organization of Minnesota, were the Sioux or Dahkotchahs; the Ojibways or Chippeways; and the Ho-tchum-graws or Winnebagoes.

SIOUX OR DAHKOTAHs.

They are an entirely different group from the Algonquin and Iroquois, who were found by the early settlers of the Atlantic States, on the banks of the Connecticut, Mohawk, and Susquehanna Rivers.

When the Dahkotchahs were first noticed by the European adventurers, large numbers were occupying the Mille Laes region of country, and appropriately called by the voyageur, "People of the Lake," "Gens du Lac." And tradition asserts that here was the ancient centre of this tribe. Though we have traces of their warring and hunting on the shores of Lake Superior, there is no satisfactory evidence of their residence, east of the Mille Laes region, as they have no name for Lake Superior.

The word Dahkotchah, by which they love to be designated, signifies allied or joined together in friendly compact, and is equivalent to "E pluribus unum," the motto on the seal of the United States.

In the history of the mission at La Pointe, Wisconsin, published nearly two centuries ago, a writer, referring to the Dahkotchahs, remarks:

"For sixty leagues from the extremity of the Upper Lake, toward sunset; and, as it were in the centre of the western nations, they have all united their force by a general league."

The Dahkotchahs in the earliest documents, and even until the present day, are called Sioux, Scioux, or Soos. The name originated with the early voyageurs. For centuries the Ojibways of Lake Superior waged war against the Dahkotchahs; and, whenever they spoke of them, called them Nado-waysioux, which signifies enemies.

The French traders, to avoid exciting the attention of Indians, while conversing in their presence, were accustomed to designate them by names, which would not be recognized.

The Dahkotchahs were nicknamed Sioux, a word composed of the two last syllables of the Ojibway word for foes

Under the influence of the French traders, the eastern Sioux began to wander from the Mille Laes region. A trading post at O-ton-we-kpa-dan, or Rice Creek, above the Falls of Saint Anthony, induced some to erect their summer dwellings and plant corn there, which took the place of wild rice. Those who dwelt here were called Wa-kpa-a-ton-we-dan. Those who dwell on the creek. Another division was known as the Ma-tan-ton-wan.

Less than a hundred years ago, it is said that the eastern Sioux, pressed by the Chippeways, and influenced by traders, moved seven miles above Fort Snelling on the Minnesota River.

MED-DAY-WAH-KAWN-TWAWNS.

In 1849 there were seven villages of Med-day-wah-kawn-twawn Sioux. (1) Below Lake Pepin, where the city of Winona is, was the village of Wapashaw. This band was called Kee-yu-ksa, because with them blood relations intermarried. Bounding or Whipping Wind was the chief. (2) At the head of Lake Pepin, under a lofty bluff, was the Red Wing village, called Ghay-mni-chan Hill, wood and water. Shooter was the name of the chief. (3) Opposite, and a little below the Pig's Eye Marsh, was the Kaposia band. The word, Kaposia means light, given because these people are quick travelers. His Scarlet People, better known as Little Crow, was the chief, and is notorious as the leader in the massacre of 1862.

On the Minnesota River, on the south side, a few miles above Fort Snelling, was Black Dog village. The inhabitants were called, Ma-ga-yu-tay-shnee. People who do not a geese, because they found it profitable to sell game at Fort Snelling. Grey Iron was the chief, also known as Pa-ma-ya-yaw, My head aches.

At Oak Grove, on the north side of the river, eight miles above the fort, was (5) Hay-ya-ta-o-ton-wan, or Inland Village, so called because they formerly lived at Lake Calkoun. Contiguous was (6) O-ya-tay-shee-ka, or Bad People. Known as Good Roads Band and (7) the largest village was Tin-ta-ton-wan, Prairie Village; Shokpay, or Six, was the chief, and is now the site of the town of Shakopee.

West of this division of the Sioux were—

WAR-PAY-KU-TAY.

The War-pay-ku-tay, or leaf shooters, who occupied the country south of the Minnesota around the sources of the Cannon and Blue Earth Rivers.

WAR-PAY-TWAWNS.

North and west of the last were the War-pay-twawns, or People of the Leaf, and their principal village was Lac qui Parle. They numbered about fifteen hundred.

SE-SEE-TWAWNS.

To the west and southwest of these bands of Sioux were the Se-see-twawns (Sissetoans), or Swamp Dwellers. This band claimed the land west of the Blue Earth to the James River, and the guardianship of the Sacred Red Pipestone Quarry. Their principal village was at Traverse, and the number of the band was estimated at thirty-eight hundred.

HO-TCHUN-GRAWS, OR WINNEBAGOES.

The Ho-tchun-graws, or Winnebagoes, belong to the Dahkotah family of aborigines. Champlain, although he never visited them, mentions them. Nicollet, who had been in his employ, visited Green Bay about the year 1635, and an early Relation mentions that he saw the Ouinipegous, a people called so, because they came from a distant sea, which some French erroneously called Puants. Another writer speaking of these people says: "This people are called 'Les Puants' not because of any bad odor peculiar to them, but because they claim to have come from the shores of a far distant lake, towards the north, whose waters are salt. They call themselves the people 'de l'eau puants,' of the putrid or bad water."

By the treaty of 1837 they were removed to Iowa, and by another treaty in October, 1846, they came to Minnesota in the spring of 1848, to the country between the Long Prairie, and Crow Wing Rivers. The agency was located on Long Prairie River, forty miles from the Mississippi, and in 1849 the tribe numbered about twenty-five hundred souls.

In February 1855, another treaty was made with them, and that spring they removed to lands on the Blue Earth River. Owing to the panic caused by the outbreak of the Sioux in 1862, Congress, by a special act, without consulting them, in 1863, removed them from their fields in Minnesota to the Missouri River, and in the words of a missionary, "they were, like the Sioux, dumped in the desert, one hundred miles above Fort Randall"

OJIBWAY OR CHIPPEWAY NATION.

The Ojibways or Leapers, when the French came to Lake Superior, had their chief settlement at Sault St. Marie, and were called by the French Saulteurs, and by the Sioux, Hah-ha-tonwan, Dwellers at the Falls or Leaping Waters.

When Du Luth erected his trading post at the western extremity of Lake Superior, they had not obtained any foothold in Minnesota, and were constantly at war with their hereditary enemies, the Nadouaysioux. By the middle of the eighteenth century, they had pushed in and occupied Sandy, Leech, Mille Lacs and other points between Lake Superior and the Mississippi, which had been dwelling places of the Sioux. In 1820 the principal villages of Ojibways in Minnesota were at Fond du Lac, Leech Lake and Sandy Lake. In 1837 they ceded most of their lands. Since then, other treaties have been made, until in the year 1881, they are confined to a few reservations, in northern Minnesota and vicinity.

CHAPTER XIX.

EARLY MISSIONS AMONG THE OJIBWAYS AND DAKOTAHS OF MINNESOTA.

Jesuit Missions not permanent—Presbyterian Mission at Mackinaw—Visit of Rev. A. Coe and J. D. Stevens to Fort Snelling—Notice of Ayers, Hall, and Boutwell—Formation of the Word Itasca—The Brothers Pond—Arrival of Dr. Williamson—Presbyterian Church at Fort Snelling—Mission at Lake Harriet—Mourning for the Dead—Church at Lac-du-parle—Father Ravoux—Mission at Lake Pokegama—Attack by the Sioux—Chippeway attack at Pig's Eye—Death of Rev. Sherman Hall—Methodist Missions—Rev. S. W. Pond prepares a Sioux Grammar and Dictionary—Swiss Presbyterian Mission.

Bancroft the distinguished historian, catching the enthusiasm of the narratives of the early Jesuits, depicts, in language which glows, their missions to the Northwest; yet it is erroneous to suppose that the Jesuits exercised any permanent influence on the Aborigines.

Shea, a devoted member of the Roman Catholic Church, in his History of American Catholic Missions writes: "In 1680 Father Engalran was apparently alone at Green Bay, and Pierson at Mackinaw. Of the other missions neither LeClerc nor Hennepin, the Recollect writers of the West at this time, make any mention, or in any way allude to their existence." He also says that "Father Menard had projected a Sioux mission; Marquette, Allouez, Duilletes, all entertained hopes of realizing it, and had some intercourse with that nation, but none of them ever succeeded in establishing a mission."

Father Hennepin wrote: "Can it be possible, that, that pretended prodigious amount of savage converts could escape the sight of a multitude of French Canadians who travel every year?" * * * * How comes it to pass that these churches so devout and so numerous, should be invisible, when I passed through so many countries and nations?"

After the American Fur Company was formed, the island of Mackinaw became the residence of the principal agent for the Northwest, Robert Stuart a Scotchman, and devoted Presbyterian.

In the month of June, 1820, the Rev. Dr. Morse, father of the distinguished inventor of the telegraph, visited and preached at Mackinaw, and in consequence of statements published by him, upon his return, a Presbyterian Missionary Society in the state of New York sent a graduate of Union College, the Rev. W. M. Ferry, father of the present United States Senator from Michigan, to explore the field. In 1823 he had established a large boarding school composed of children of various tribes, and here some were educated who became wives of men of intelligence and influence at the capital of Minnesota. After a few years, it was determined by the Mission Board to modify its plans, and in the place of a great central station, to send missionaries among the several tribes to teach and to preach.

In pursuance of this policy, the Rev. Alvan Coe, and J. D. Stevens, then a licentiate who had been engaged in the Mackinaw Mission, made a tour of exploration, and arrived on September 1, 1829, at Fort Snelling. In the journal of Major Lawrence Taliaferro, which is in possession of the Minnesota Historical Society, is the following entry: "The Rev. Mr. Coe and Stevens reported to be on their way to this post, members of the Presbyterian church looking out for suitable places to make missionary establishment for the Sioux and Chippeways, found schools, and instruct in the arts and agriculture."

The agent, although not at that time a communicant of the Church, welcomed these visitors, and afforded them every facility in visiting the Indians. On Sunday, the 6th of September, the Rev. Mr. Coe preached twice in the fort, and the next night held a prayer meeting at the quarters of the commanding officer. On the next Sunday he preached again, and on the 14th, with Mr. Stevens and a hired guide, returned to Mackinaw by way of the St. Croix river. During this visit the agent offered for a Presbyterian mission the mill which then stood on the site of Minneapolis, and had been erected by the government, as well as the farm at Lake Calhoun, which was begun to teach the Sioux agriculture.

CHIPPEWAY MISSIONS.

In 1830, F. Ayer, one of the teachers at Mackinaw, made an exploration as far as La Pointe, and returned.

Upon the 30th day of August, 1831, a Mackinaw boat about forty feet long arrived at La Pointe, bringing from Mackinaw the principal trader, Mr. Warren, Rev. Sherman Hall and wife, and Mr. Frederick Ayer, a catechist and teacher.

Mrs. Hall attracted great attention, as she was the first white woman who had visited that region. Sherman Hall was born on April 30, 1801, at Wethersfield, Vermont, and in 1828 graduated at Dartmouth College, and completed his theological studies at Andover, Massachusetts, a few weeks before he journeyed to the Indian country.

His classmate at Dartmouth and Andover, the Rev. W. T. Boutwell still living near Stillwater, became his yoke-fellow, but remained for a time at Mackinaw, which they reached about the middle of July. In June, 1832, Henry R. Schoolcraft, the head of an exploring expedition, invited Mr. Boutwell to accompany him to the sources of the Mississippi.

When the expedition reached Lac la Biche or Elk Lake, on July 13, 1832, Mr. Schoolcraft, who was not a Latin scholar, asked the Latin word for truth, and was told "veritas." He then wanted the word which signified head, and was told "caput." To the astonishment of many, Schoolcraft struck off the first syllable, of the word ver-i-tas and the last syllable of ca-put, and thus coined the word Itasca, which he gave to the lake, and which some modern writers, with all gravity, tell us was the name of a maiden who once dwelt on its banks. Upon Mr. Boutwell's return from this expedition he was at first associated with Mr. Hall in the mission at La Pointe.

In 1833 the mission band which had centered at La Pointe diffused their influence. In October Rev. Mr. Boutwell went to Leech Lake, Mr. Ayer opened a school at Yellow Lake, Wisconsin, and Mr. E. F. Ely, now in California, became a teacher at Aitkin's trading post at Sandy Lake.

SIoux MISSIONARIES.

Mr. Boutwell, of Leech Lake Station, on the sixth of May, 1834, happened to be on a visit to Fort Snelling. While there a steamboat arrived, and among the passengers were two young men, brothers, natives of Washington, Connecticut, Samuel W. and Gideon H. Pond, who had come, constrained by the love of Christ, and without conferring with flesh and blood, to try to improve the Sioux.

Samuel, the older brother, the year before, had talked with a liquor seller in Galena, Illinois, who had come from the Red River country, and the desire was awakened to help the Sioux; and he wrote to his brother to go with him.

The Rev. Samuel W. Pond still lives at Shakopee, in the old mission house, the first building of sawed lumber erected in the valley of the Minnesota, above Fort Snelling.

MISSIONS AMONG THE SIOUX A. D. 1835.

About this period, a native of South Carolina, a graduate of Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, the Rev. T. S. Williamson, M. D., who previous to his ordination had been a respectable physician in Ohio, was appointed by the American Board of Foreign Missions to visit the Dakotahs with the view of ascertaining what could be done to introduce Christian instruction. Having made inquiries at Prairie du Chien and Fort Snelling, he reported the field was favorable.

The Presbyterian and Congregational Churches, through their joint Missionary Society, appointed the following persons to labor in Minnesota: Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, M. D., missionary and physician; Rev. J. D. Stevens, missionary; Alexander Huggins, farmer; and their wives; Miss Sarah Poage, and Lucy Stevens, teachers; who were prevented during the year 1834, by the state of navigation, from entering upon their work.

During the winter of 1834-35, a pious officer of the army exercised a good influence on his fellow officers and soldiers under his command. In the absence of a chaplain of ordained minister, he, like General Havelock, of the British army in India, was accustomed not only to drill the soldiers, but to meet them in his own quarters, and reason with them "of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come."

In the month of May, 1835, Dr. Williamson and mission band arrived at Fort Snelling, and were hospitably received by the officers of the garrison, the Indian Agent, and Mr. Sibley, Agent of the Company at Mendota, who had been in the country a few months.

On the twenty-seventh of this month the Rev. Dr. Williamson united in marriage at the Fort Lieutenant Edward A. Ogden to Eliza Edna, the daughter of Captain G. A. Loomis, the first marriage service in which a clergyman officiated in the present State of Minnesota.

On the eleventh of June a meeting was held at the Fort to organize a Presbyterian Church, sixteen persons who had been communicants, and six who made a profession of faith, one of whom was Lieutenant Ogden, were enrolled as members.

Four elders were elected, among whom were Capt. Gustavus Loomis and Samuel W. Pond. The next day a lecture preparatory to administering the communion, was delivered, and on Sunday, the 14th, the first organized church in the Valley of the Upper Mississippi assembled for the first time in one of the Company rooms of the Fort. The services in the morning were conducted by Dr. Williamson. The afternoon service commenced at 2 o'clock. The sermon of Mr. Stevens was upon a most appropriate text, 1st Peter, ii:25: "For ye were as sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." After the discourse, the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered.

At a meeting of the Session on the thirty-first of July, Rev. J. D. Stevens, missionary, was invited to preach to the church, "so long as the duties of his mission will permit, and also to preside at all the meetings of the Session." Captain Gustavus Loomis was elected Stated Clerk of the Session, and they resolved to observe the monthly concert of prayer on the first Monday of each month, for the conversion of the world.

Two points were selected by the missionaries as proper spheres of labor. Mr. Stevens and family proceeded to Lake Harriet, and Dr. Williamson and family, in June, proceeded to Lac qui Parle.

As there had never been a chaplain at Fort Snelling, the Rev. J. D. Stevens, the missionary at Lake Harriet, preached on Sundays to the Presbyterian church, there, recently organized.

Writing on January twenty-seventh, 1836, he says, in relation to his field of labor:

"Yesterday a portion of this band of Indians, who had been some time absent from this village, returned. One of the number (a woman) was informed that a brother of hers had died during her absence. He was not at this village, but with another band, and the information had just reached here. In the evening they set up a most piteous crying, or rather wailing, which continued, with some little cessations, during the night. The sister of the deceased brother would repeat, times without number, words which may be thus translated into English: 'Come, my brother, I shall see you no more for ever.' The night was extremely cold, the thermometer standing from ten to twenty below zero. About sunrise, next morning, preparation was made for performing the ceremony of cutting their flesh, in order to give relief to their grief of mind. The snow was removed from the frozen ground over about as large a space as would be required to place a small Indian lodge or wigwam. In the centre a very small fire was kindled up, not to give warmth, apparently, but to cause a smoke. The sister of the deceased, who was the chief mourner, came out of her lodge followed by three other women, who repaired to the place prepared. They were all barefooted, and nearly naked. Here they set up a most bitter lamentation and crying, mingling their wailings with the words before mentioned. The principal mourner commenced gashing or cutting her ankles and legs up to the knees with a sharp stone, until her legs were covered with gore and flowing blood; then in like manner her arms, shoulders, and breast. The others cut themselves in the same way, but not so severely. On this poor infatuated woman I presume there were more than a hundred long deep gashes in the flesh. I saw the operation, and the blood instantly followed the instrument, and flowed down upon the flesh. She appeared frantic with grief. Through the pain of her wounds, the loss of blood, exhaustion of strength by fasting, loud and long-continued and bitter groans, or the extreme cold upon her almost naked and lacerated body, she soon sunk upon the frozen ground, shaking as with a violent fit of the ague, and writhing in apparent agony. 'Surely,' I exclaimed, as I beheld the bloody scene, 'the tender mercies of the heathen are cruelty!'

"The little church at the fort begins to manifest something of a missionary spirit. Their contributions are considerable for so small a number. I hope they will not only be willing to contribute liberally of their substance, but will give themselves, at least some of them, to the missionary work.

"The surgeon of the military post, Dr. Jarvis, has been very assiduous in his attentions to us in our sickness, and has very generously made a donation to our board of twenty-five dollars, being the amount of his medical services in our family.

"On the nineteenth instant we commenced a school with six full Indian children, at least so in all their habits, dress, etc.; not one could speak a word of any language but Sioux. The school has since increased to the number of twenty-five. I am now collecting and arranging words for a dictionary. Mr. Pond is assiduously employed in preparing a small spelling-book, which we may forward next mail for printing.

On the fifteenth of September, 1836, a Presbyterian church was organized at Lac-qui-Parle, a branch of that in and near Fort Snelling, and Joseph Renville, a mixed blood of great influence, became a communicant. He had been trained in Canada by a Roman Catholic priest, but claimed the right of private judgment. Mr. Renville's wife was the first pure Dahkotchah of whom we have any record that ever joined the Church of Christ. This church has never become extinct, although its members have been necessarily nomadic. After the treaty of Traverse des Sioux, it was removed to Hazlewood. Driven from thence by the outbreak of 1862, it has become the parent of other churches, in the valley of the upper Missouri, over one of which John Renville, a descendant of the elder at Lac-qui-Parle, is the pastor.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSION ATTEMPTED.

Father Ravoux, recently from France, a sincere and earnest priest of the Church of Rome, came to Mendota in the autumn of 1841, and after a brief sojourn with the Rev. L. Galtier, who had erected Saint Paul's chapel, which has given the name of Saint Paul to the capital of Minnesota, he ascended the Minnesota River, and visited Lac-qui-Parle.

Bishop Loras, of Dubuque, wrote the next year of his visit as follows: "Our young missionary, M. Ravoux, passed the winter on the banks of Lac-qui-Parle, without any other support than Providence, without any other means of conversion than a burning zeal, he has wrought in the space of six months, a happy revolution among the Sioux. From the time of his arrival he has been occupied night and day in the study of their language. * * * * * When he instructs the savages, he speaks to them with so much fire whilst showing them a large copper crucifix which he carries on his breast, that he makes the strongest impression upon them."

The impression, however was evanescent, and he soon retired from the field, and no more efforts were made in this direction by the Church of Rome. This young Mr. Ravoux is now the highly respected vicar of the Roman Catholic diocese of Minnesota, and justly esteemed for his simplicity and unobtrusiveness.

CHIPPEWAY MISSIONS AT POKEGUMA.

Pokeguma is one of the "Mille Lacs," or thousand beautiful lakes for which Minnesota is remarkable. It is about four or five miles in extent, and a mile or more in width.

This lake is situated on Snake River, about twenty miles above the junction of that stream with the St. Croix.

In the year 1836, missionaries came to reside among the Ojibways and Pokeguma, to promote their temporal and spiritual welfare. Their mission house was built on the east side of the lake; but the Indian village was on an island not far from the shore.

In a letter written in 1837, we find the following: "The young women and girls now make, mend, wash, and iron after our manner. The men have learned to build log houses, drive team, plough, hoe, and handle an American axe with some skill in cutting large trees, the size of which, two years ago, would have afforded them a sufficient reason why they should not meddle with them."

In May, 1841, Jeremiah Russell, who was Indian farmer, sent two Chippeways, accompanied by Elam Greeley, of Stillwater, to the Falls of Saint Croix for supplies. On Saturday, the fifteenth of the month they arrived there, and the next day a steamboat came up with the goods. The captain said a war party of Sioux, headed by Little Crow, was advancing, and the two Chippeways prepared to go back and were their friends.

They had hardly left the Falls, on their return, before they saw a party of Dakotahs. The sentinel of the enemy had not noticed the approach of the young men. In the twinkling of an eye, these two young Ojibways raised their guns, fired, and killed two of Little Crow's sons. The discharge of the guns revealed to a sentinel, that an enemy was near, and as the Ojibways were retreating, he fired, and mortally wounded one of the two.

According to custom, the corpses of the chief's sons were dressed, and then set up with their faces towards the country of their ancient enemies. The wounded Ojibway was horribly mangled by the infuriated party, and his limbs strewn about in every direction. His scalped head was placed in a kettle, and suspended in front of the two Dakotah corpses.

Little Crow, disheartened by the loss of his two boys, returned with his party to Kaposia. But other parties were in the field.

It was not till Friday, the twenty-first of May, that the death of one of the young Ojibways sent by Mr. Russell, to the Falls of Saint Croix, was known at Pokegama.

Mr. Russell on the next Sunday, accompanied by Captain William Holcomb and a half-breed, went to the mission station to attend a religious service, and while crossing the lake in returning, the half-breed said that it was rumored that the Sioux were approaching. On Monday, the twenty-fourth, three young men left in a canoe to go to the west shore of the lake, and from thence to Mille Lacs, to give intelligence to the Ojibways there, of the skirmish that had already occurred. They took with them two Indian girls, about twelve years of age, who were pupils of the mission school, for the purpose of bringing the canoe back to the island. Just as the three were landing, twenty or thirty Dakotah warriors, with a war whoop emerged from their concealment behind the trees, and fired into the canoe. The young men instantly sprang into the water, which was shallow, returned the fire, and ran into the woods, escaping without material injury.

The little girls, in their fright, waded into the lake; but were pursued. Their parents upon the island, heard the death cries of their children. Some of the Indians around the mission-house jumped into their canoes and gained the island. Others went into some fortified log huts. The attack upon the canoe, it was afterwards learned, was premature. The party upon that side of the lake were ordered not to fire, until the party stationed in the woods near the mission began.

There were in all one hundred and eleven Dakotah warriors, and all the fight was in the vicinity of the mission-house, and the Ojibways mostly engaged in it were those who had been under religious instruction. The rest were upon the island.

The fathers of the murdered girls, burning for revenge, left the island in a canoe, and drawing it up on the shore, hid behind it, and fired upon the Dakotahs and killed one. The Dakotahs advancing upon them, they were obliged to escape. The canoe was now launched. One lay on his back in the bottom; the other plunged into the water, and, holding the canoe with one hand, and swimming with the other, he towed his friend out of danger. The Dakotahs, infuriated at their escape, fired volley after volley at the swimmer, but he escaped the balls by putting his head under water whenever he saw them take aim, and waiting till he heard the discharge, he would then look up and breathe.

After a fight of two hours, the Dakotahs retreated, with a loss of two men. At the request of the parents, Mr. E. F. Ely, from whose notes the writer has obtained these facts, being at that time a teacher at the mission, went across the lake, with two of his friends, to gather the remains of his murdered pupils. He found the corpses on the shore. The heads cut off and scalped, with a tomahawk buried in the brains of each, were set up in the sand near the bodies. The bodies were pierced in the breast, and the right arm of one was taken away. Removing the tomahawks, the bodies were brought back to the island, and in the afternoon were buried in accordance with the simple but solemn rites of the Church of Christ, by members of the mission.

The sequel to this story is soon told. The Indians of Pokegama, after the fight, deserted their village, and went to reside with their countrymen near Lake Superior.

In July of the following year, 1842, a war party was formed at Fond du Lac, about forty in number, and proceeded towards the Dakotah country. Sneaking, as none but Indians can, they arrived unnoticed at the little settlement below Saint Paul, commonly called "Pig's Eye," which is opposite to what was Kaposia, or Little Crow's village. Finding an Indian woman at work in the garden of her husband, a Canadian, by the name of Gamelle, they killed her; also another woman, with her infant, whose head was cut off. The Dakotahs, on the opposite side, were mostly intoxicated; and, flying across in their canoes but half prepared, they were worsted in the encounter. They lost thirteen warriors, and one of their number, known as the Dancer, the Ojibways are said to have skinned.

Soon after this the Chippeway missions of the St. Croix Valley were abandoned.

In a little while Rev. Mr. Boutwell removed to the vicinity of Stillwater, and the missionaries, Ayer and Spencer, went to Red Lake and other points in Minnesota.

In 1853 the Rev. Sherman Hall left the Indians and became pastor of a Congregational church at Sauk Rapids, where he recently died.

METHODIST MISSIONS.

In 1837 the Rev. A. Brunson commenced a Methodist mission at Kaposia, about four miles below, and opposite Saint Paul. It was afterwards removed across the river to Red Rock. He was assisted by the Rev. Thomas W. Pope, and the latter was succeeded by the Rev. J. Holton.

The Rev. Mr. Spates and others also labored for a brief period among the Ojibways.

At the stations the Dakotah language was diligently studied. Rev. S. W. Pond had prepared a dictionary of three thousand words, and also a small grammar. The Rev. S. R. Riggs, who joined the mission in 1837, in a letter dated February 24, 1841, writes: "Last summer, after returning from Fort Snelling, I spent five weeks in copying again the Sioux vocabulary which we had collected and arranged at this station. It contained then about 5500 words, not including the various forms of the verbs. Since that time, the words collected by Dr. Williamson and myself, have, I presume, increased the number to six thousand. * * * * * In this connection, I may mention that during the winter of 1839-40, Mrs. Riggs, with some assistance, wrote an English and Sioux vocabulary containing about three thousand words. One of Mr. Renville's sons and three of his daughters are engaged in copying. In committing the grammatical principles of the language to writing, we have done something at this station, but more has been done by Mr. S. W. Pond."

Steadily the number of Indian missionaries increased, and in 1851, before the lands of the Dakotahs west of the Mississippi were ceded to the whites, they were disposed as follows by the Dakotah Presbytery.

Lac-qui-parle, Rev. S. R. Riggs, Rev. M. N. Adams, Missionaries, Jonas Pettijohn, Mrs. Fanny Pettijohn, Mrs. Mary Ann Riggs, Mrs. Mary A. M. Adams, Miss Sarah Rankin, Assistants.

Traverse des Sioux, Rev. Robert Hopkins, Missionary; Mrs. Agnes Hopkins, Alexander G. Huggins, Mrs. Lydia P. Huggins, Assistants.

Shakpay, or Shokpay, Rev. Samuel W. Pond, Missionary; Mrs. Sarah P. Pond, Assistant.

Oak Grove, Rev. Gideon H. Pond and wife, Kaposia, Rev. Thomas Williamson, M. D., Missionary and Physician; Mrs. Margaret P. Williamson, Miss Jane S. Williamson, Assistants.

Red Wing, Rev. John F. Aiton, Rev. Joseph W. Hancock, Missionaries; Mrs. Nancy H. Aiton, Mrs. Hancock, Assistants.

The Rev. Daniel Gavin, the Swiss Presbyterian Missionary, spent the winter of 1839 in Lac-qui-Parle and was afterwards married to a niece of the Rev. J. D. Stevens, of the Lake Harriet Mission. Mr. Stevens became the farmer and teacher of the Wapashaw band, and the first white man who lived where the city of Winona has been built. Another missionary from Switzerland, the Rev. Mr. Denton, married a Miss Skinner, formerly of the Mackinaw mission. During a portion of the year 1839 these Swiss missionaries lived with the American missionaries at camp Cold Water near Fort Snelling, but their chief field of labor was at Red Wing.

CHAPTER XX.

TREAD OF PIONEERS IN THE SAINT CROIX VALLEY AND ELSEWHERE.

Origin of the name Saint Croix.—Du Luth, first Explorer.—French Post on the St. Croix.—Pitt, an early pioneer.—Early settlers at Saint Croix Falls.—First women there.—Narine Settlement.—Joseph R. Brown's town site.—Saint Croix County organized.—Proprietors of Stillwater.—A dead Negro woman.—Pig's Eye, origin of name.—Lise of Saint Paul.—Dr. Williamson secures first school teacher for Saint Paul.—Description of first school room.—Saint Croix County re-organized.—Rev. W. T. Boutwell, pioneer clergyman.

The Saint Croix river, according to Le Sueur, named after a Frenchman who was drowned at its mouth, was one of the earliest throughfares from Lake Superior to the Mississippi. The first white man who directed canoes upon its waters was Du Luth, who had in 1679 explored Minnesota. He thus describes his tour in a letter, first published by Harris: "In June, 1680, not being satisfied, with having made my discovery by land, I took two canoes, with an Indian who was my interpreter, and four Frenchmen, to seek means to make it by water. With this view I entered a river which empties eight leagues from the extremity of Lake Superior, on the south side, where, after having cut some trees and broken about a hundred beaver dams, I reached the upper waters of the said river, and then I made a portage of half a league to reach a lake, the outlet of which fell into a very fine river, which took me down into the Mississippi. There I learned from eight cabins of Nadouécieux that the Rev. Father Louis Hennepin, Recollect, now at the convent of Saint Germain, with two other Frenchmen had been robbed, and carried off as slaves for more than three hundred leagues by the Nadouécieux themselves."

He then relates how he left two Frenchmen with his goods, and went with his interpreter and two Frenchmen in a canoe down the Mississippi, and after two days and two nights, found Hennepin, Aécault and Angelle. He told Hennepin that he must return with him through the country of the Fox tribe, and writes: "I preferred to retrace my steps, manifesting to them [the Sioux] the just indignation I felt against them, rather than to remain after the violence they had done to the Rev. Father and the other two Frenchmen with him, whom I put in my canoes and brought them to Michilimackinack."

After this, the Saint Croix river became a channel for commerce, and Bellin writes, that before 1755, the French had erected a fort forty leagues from its mouth and twenty from Lake Superior.

The pine forests between the Saint Croix and Minnesota had been for several years a temptation to energetic men. As early as November, 1836, a Mr. Pitt went with a boat and a party of men to the Falls of Saint Croix to cut pine timber, with the consent of the Chippeways but the dissent of the United States authorities.

In 1837 while the treaty was being made by Commissioners Dodge and Smith at Fort Snelling, on one Sunday Franklin Steele, Dr. Fitch, Jeremiah Russell, and a Mr. Maginnis left Fort Snelling for the Falls of Saint Croix in a birch bark canoe paddled by eight men, and reached that point about noon on Monday and commenced a log cabin. Steele and Maginnis remained here, while the others, dividing into two parties, one under Fitch, and the other under Russell, searched for pine land. The first stopped at Sun Rise, while Russel went on to the Snake River. About the same time Robbinet and Jesse B. Taylor came to the Falls in the interest of B. F. Baker who had a stone trading house near Fort Snelling, since destroyed by fire. On the fifteenth of July, 1838, the Palmyra, Capt. Holland, arrived at the Fort, with the official notice of the ratification of the treaties ceding the lands between the Saint Croix and Mississippi.

She had on board C. A. Tuttle, L. W. Stratton and others, with the machinery for the projected mills of the Northwest Lumber Company at the Falls of Saint Croix, and reached that point on the seventeenth, the first steamboat to disturb the waters above Lake Saint Croix. The steamer Gypsy came to the fort on the twenty-first of October, with goods for the Chippeways, and was chartered for four hundred and fifty dollars, to carry them up to the Falls of Saint Croix. In passing through the lake, the boat grounded near a projected town called Stambaughville, after S. C. Stambaugh, the sutler at the fort. On the afternoon of the 26th, the goods were landed, as stipulated.

The agent of the Improvement Company at the falls was Washington Libbey, who left in the fall of 1838, and was succeeded by Jeremiah Russell, Stratton acting as millwright in place of Calvin Tuttle. On the twelfth of December, Russell and Stratton walked down the river, cut the first tree and built a cabin at Marine, and sold their claim.

The first women at the Falls of Saint Croix were a Mrs. Orr, Mrs. Sackett, and the daughter of a Mr. Young. During the winter of 1838-9, Jeremiah Russell married a daughter of a respectable and gentlemanly trader, Charles H. Oakes.

Among the first preachers were the Rev. W. T. Boutwell and Mr. Seymour, of the Chippeway Mission at Pokegama. The Rev. A. Brunson, of Prairie du Chien, who visited this region in 1838, wrote that at the mouth of Snake River he found Franklin Steele, with twenty-five or thirty men, cutting timber for a mill, and when he offered to preach Mr. Steele gave a cordial assent.

On the sixteenth of August, Mr. Steele, Livingston, and others, left the Falls of Saint Croix in a barge, and went around to Fort Snelling.

The steamboat Fayette about the middle of May, 1839, landed sutlers' stores at Fort Snelling and then proceeded with several persons of intelligence to the Saint Croix river, who settled at Marine.

The place was called after Marine in Madison county, Illinois, where the company, consisting of Judd, Hone and others, was formed to build a saw mill in the Saint Croix Valley. The mill at Marine commenced to saw lumber, on August 24, 1839, the first in Minnesota.

Joseph R. Brown, who since 1838, had lived at Chan Wakan, on the west side of Grey Cloud Island, this year made a claim near the upper end of the city of Stillwater, which he called Dakkotoh, and was the first to raft lumber down the Saint Croix, as well as the first to represent the citizens of the valley in the legislature of Wisconsin.

Until the year 1841, the jurisdiction of Crawford county, Wisconsin, extended over the delta of country between the Saint Croix and Mississippi. Joseph R. Brown having been elected as representative of the county, in the territorial legislature of Wisconsin, succeeded in obtaining the passage of an act on November twentieth, 1841, organizing the county of Saint Croix, with Dakkotoh designated as the county seat.

At the time prescribed for holding a court in the new county, it is said that the judge of the district arrived, and to his surprise, found a claim cabin occupied by a Frenchman. Speedily retreating, he never came again, and judicial proceedings for Saint Croix county ended for several years. Phineas Lawrence was the first sheriff of this county.

On the tenth of October, 1843, was commenced a settlement which has become the town of Stillwater. The names of the proprietors were John McKusick from Maine, Calvin Leach from Vermont, Elam Greeley from Maine, and Elias McKean from Pennsylvania. They immediately commenced the erection of a sawmill.

John H. Fonda, elected on the twenty-second of September, as coroner of Crawford county, Wisconsin, asserts that he was once notified that a dead body was lying in the water opposite Pig's Eye slough, and immediately proceeded to the spot, and on taking it out, recognized it as the body of a negro woman belonging to a certain captain of the United States army then at Fort Crawford. The body was cruelly cut and bruised, but no one appearing to recognise it, a verdict of "Found dead," was rendered, and the corpse was buried. Soon after, it came to light that the woman was whipped to death, and thrown into the river during the night.

The year that the Dakkotohs ceded their lands east of the Mississippi, a Canadian Frenchman by the name of Parrant, the ideal of an Indian whisky seller, erected a shanty in what is now the city of Saint Paul. Ignorant and overbearing he loved money more than his own soul. Destitute of one eye, and the other resembling that of a pig, he was a good representative of Caliban. Some one writing from his groggery designated it as "Pig's Eye." The reply to the letter was directed in good faith to "Pig's Eye"

Some years ago the editor of the Saint Paul Press described the occasion in these words:

"Edmund Brisette, a clerkly Frenchman for those days, who lives, or did live a little while ago, on Lake Harriet, was one day seated at a table in Parrant's cabin, with pen and paper about to write a letter for Parrant (for Parrant, like Charlemagne, could not write) to a friend of the latter in Canada. The question of geography puzzled Brisette at the outset of the epistle; where should he date a letter from a place without a name? He looked up inquiringly to Parrant, and met the dead, cold glare of the Pig's Eye fixed upon him, with an irresistible suggestiveness that was inspiration to Brisette."

In 1812, the late Henry Jackson, of Mahkaho, settled at the same spot, and erected the first store on the height just above the lower landing. Roberts and Simpson followed, and opened small Indian trading shops. In 1846, the site of Saint Paul was chiefly occupied by a few shanties owned by "certain lewd fellows of the baser sort," who sold rum to the soldier and Indian. It was despised by all decent white men, and known to the Dakotahs by an expression in their tongue which means, the place where they sell minne-wakan [supernatural water].

The chief of the Kaposia band in 1846, was shot by his own brother in a drunken revel, but surviving the wound, and apparently alarmed at the deterioration under the influence of the modern harpies at Saint Paul, went to Mr. Bruce, Indian Agent, at Fort Snelling, and requested a missionary. The Indian Agent in his report to government, says:

"The chief of the Little Crow's band, who resides below this place (Fort Snelling) about nine miles, in the immediate neighbourhood of the whiskey dealers, has requested to have a school established at his village. He says they are determined to reform, and for the future, will try to do better. I wrote to Doctor Williamson soon after the request was made, desiring him to take charge of the school. He has had charge of the mission school at Lac qui Parle for some years; is well qualified, and is an excellent physician."

In November, 1846, Dr. Williamson came from Lac qui Parle, as requested, and became a resident of Kaposia. While disapproving of their practices, he felt a kindly interest in the whites of Pig's Eye, which place was now beginning to be called, after a little log chapel which had been erected at the suggestion of Rev. L. Galtier, and called Saint Paul's. Though a missionary among the Dakotahs, he was the first to take steps to promote the education of the whites and half-breeds of Minnesota. In the year 1847, he wrote to ex-Governor Slade, President of the National Popular Education Society, in relation to the condition of what has subsequently become the capital of the state.

In accordance with his request, Miss H. E. Bishop came to his mission-house at Kaposia, and, after a short time, was introduced by him to the citizens of Saint Paul. The first school-house in Minnesota besides those connected with the Indian missions, stood near the site of the old Brick Presbyterian church, corner of Saint Peter and Third street, and is thus described by the teacher:

"The school was commenced in a little log hovel, covered with bark, and chinked with mud, previously used as a blacksmith shop. On three sides of the interior of this humble log cabin, pegs were driven into the logs, upon which boards were laid for seats. Another seat was made by placing one end of a plank between the cracks of the logs, and the other upon a chair. This was for visitors. A rickety cross-legged table in the centre, and a hen's nest in one corner, completed the furniture."

Saint Croix county, in the year 1847, was detached from Crawford county, Wisconsin, and reorganized for judicial purposes, and Stillwater made the county seat. In the month of June the United States District Court held its session in the store-room of Mr. John McKusick; Judge Charles Dunn presiding. A large number of lumbermen had been attracted by the pineries in the upper portion of the valley of Saint Croix, and Stillwater was looked upon as the center of the lumbering interest.

The Rev. Mr. Bortwell, feeling that he could be more useful, left the Ojibways, and took up his residence near Stillwater, preaching to the lumbermen at the Falls of Saint Croix, Marine Mills, Stillwater, and Cottage Grove. In a letter speaking of Stillwater, he says, "Here is a little village sprung up like a gourd, but whether it is to perish as soon, God only knows."

CHAPTER XXI.

EVENTS PRELIMINARY TO THE ORGANIZATION OF THE MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

Wisconsin State Boundaries—First Bill for the Organization of Minnesota Territory, A. D. 1846—Change of Wisconsin Boundary—Memorial of Saint Croix Valley citizens—Various names proposed for the New Territory—Convention at Stillwater—H. H. Sibley elected Delegate to Congress.—Derivation of word Minnesota.

Three years elapsed from the time that the territory of Minnesota was proposed in Congress, to the final passage of the organic act. On the sixth of August, 1846, an act was passed by Congress authorizing the citizens of Wisconsin Territory to frame a constitution and form a state government. The act fixed the Saint Louis river to the rapids, from thence south to the Saint Croix, and thence down that river to its junction with the Mississippi, as the western boundary.

On the twenty-third of December, 1846, the delegate from Wisconsin, Morgan L. Martin, introduced a bill in Congress for the organization of a territory of Minnesota. This bill made its western boundary the Sioux and Red River of the North. On the third of March, 1847, permission was granted to Wisconsin to change her boundary, so that the western limit would proceed due south from the first rapids of the Saint Louis river, and fifteen miles east of the most easterly point of Lake Saint Croix, thence to the Mississippi.

A number in the constitutional convention of Wisconsin, were anxious that Rum river should be a part of her western boundary, while citizens of the valley of the Saint Croix were desirous that the Chippeway river should be the limit of Wisconsin. The citizens of Wisconsin Territory, in the valley of the Saint Croix, and about Fort Snelling, wished to be included in the projected new territory, and on the twenty-eighth of March, 1848, a memorial signed by H. H. Sibley, Henry M. Rice, Franklin Steele, William R. Marshall, and others, was presented to Congress, remonstrating against the proposition before the convention to make Rum river a part of the boundary line of the contemplated state of Wisconsin.

On the twenty-ninth of May, 1848, the act to admit Wisconsin changed the boundary line to the present, and as first defined in the enabling act of 1846. After the bill of Mr. Martin was introduced into the House of Representatives in 1846 it was referred to the Committee on Territories, of which Mr. Douglas was chairman. On the twentieth of January, 1847, he reported in favor of the proposed territory with the name of Itasca. On the seventeenth of February, before the bill passed the House, a discussion arose in relation to the proposed name. Mr. Winthrop of Massachusetts proposed Chippewa as a substitute, alleging that this tribe was the principal in the proposed territory, which was not correct. Mr. J. Thompson of Mississippi disliked all Indian names, and hoped the territory would be called Jackson. Mr. Houston of Delaware thought that there ought to be one territory named after the "Father of his country," and proposed Washington. All of the names proposed were rejected, and the name in the original bill inserted. On the last day of the session, March third, the bill was called up in the Senate and laid on the table.

When Wisconsin became a state the query arose whether the old territorial government did not continue in force west of the Saint Croix river. The first meeting on the subject of claiming territorial privileges was held in the building at Saint Paul, known as Jackson's store, near the corner of Bench and Jackson streets, on the bluff. This meeting was held in July, and a convention was proposed to consider their position. The first public meeting was held at Stillwater on August fourth, and Messrs. Steele and Sibley were the only persons present from the west side of the Mississippi. This meeting issued a call for a general convention to take steps to secure an early territorial organization, to assemble on the twenty-sixth of the month at the same place. Sixty-two delegates answered the call, and among those present, were W. D. Phillips, J. W. Bass, A. Larpenteur, J. M. Boal, and others from Saint Paul. To the convention a letter was presented from Mr. Catlin, who claimed to be acting governor, giving his opinion that the Wisconsin territorial organization was still in force. The meeting also appointed Mr. Sibley to visit Washington and represent their views; but the Hon. John H. Tweedy having resigned his office of delegate to Congress on September eighteenth, 1848, Mr. Catlin, who had made Stillwater a temporary residence, on the ninth of October issued a proclamation ordering a special election at Stillwater on the thirtieth, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation. At this election Henry H. Sibley was elected as delegate of the citizens of the remaining portion of Wisconsin Territory. His credentials were presented to the House of Representatives, and the committee to whom the matter was referred presented a majority and minority report; but the resolution introduced by the majority passed and Mr. Sibley took his seat as a delegate from Wisconsin Territory on the fifteenth of January, 1849.

Mr. H. M. Rice, and other gentlemen, visited Washington during the winter, and, uniting with Mr. Sibley, used all their energies to obtain the organization of a new territory.

Mr. Sibley, in an interesting communication to the Minnesota Historical Society, writes: "When my credentials as Delegate, were presented by Hon. James Wilson, of New Hampshire, to the House of Representatives, there was some curiosity manifested among the members, to see what kind of a person had been elected to represent the distant and wild territory claiming representation in Congress. I was told by a New England member with whom I became subsequently quite intimate, that there was some disappointment when I made my appearance, for it was expected that the delegate from this remote region would make his debut, if not in full Indian costume, at least, with some peculiarities of dress and manners, characteristic of the rude and semi-civilized people who had sent him to the Capitol."

The territory of Minnesota was named after the largest tributary of the Mississippi within its limits. The Sioux call the Missouri Minnesho-shay, muddy water, but the stream after which this region is named, Minne-sota. Some say that Sota means clear; others, turbid; Schoolcraft, bluish green. Nicollet wrote, "The adjective Sota is of difficult translation. The Canadians translated it by a pretty equivalent word, brouille, perhaps more properly rendered into English by blear. I have entered upon this explanation because the word really means neither clear nor turbid, as some authors have asserted, its true meaning being found in the Sioux expression Ishtah-sota, blear-eyed." From the fact that the word signifies neither blue nor white, but the peculiar appearance of the sky at certain times, by some, Minnesota has been defined to mean the sky tinted water, which is certainly poetic, and the late Rev. Gideon H. Pond thought quite correct.

CHAPTER XXII.

MINNESOTA FROM ITS ORGANIZATION AS A TERRITORY, A. D. 1849, TO A. D. 1854.

Appearance of the Country, A. D. 1849—Arrival of first Editor—Governor Ramsey arrives—Guest of H. H. Sibley—Proclamation issued—Governor Ramsey and H. M. Rice move to Saint Paul—Fourth of July Celebration—First election—Early newspapers—First Courts—First Legislature—Pioneer News Carrier's Address—Wedding at Fort Snelling—Territorial Seal—Scalp Dance at Stillwater—First Steamboat at Falls of Saint Anthony—Presbyterian Chapel burned—Indian council at Fort Snelling—First Steamboat above Saint Anthony—First boat at the Blue Earth River—Congressional election—Visit of Fredrika Bremer—Indian newspaper—Other newspapers—Second Legislature—University of Minnesota—Teamster killed by Indians—Sioux Treaties—Third Legislature—Land slide at Stillwater—Death of first Editor—Fourth Legislature Baldwin School, now Macalester College—Indian fight in Saint Paul.

On the third of March, 1849, the bill was passed by Congress for organizing the territory of Minnesota, whose boundary on the west, extended to the Missouri River. At this time, the region was little more than a wilderness. The west bank of the Mississippi, from the Iowa line to Lake Itasca, was unceded by the Indians.

At Wapashaw, was a trading post in charge of Alexis Bailly, and here also resided the ancient voyageur, of fourscore years, A. Rocque.

At the foot of Lake Pepin was a store house kept by Mr. F. S. Richards. On the west shore of the lake lived the eccentric Wells, whose wife was a bois brule, a daughter of the deceased trader, Duncan Graham.

The two unfinished buildings of stone, on the beautiful bank opposite the renowned Maiden's Rock, and the surrounding skin lodges of his wife's relatives and friends, presented a rude but picturesque scene. Above the lake was a cluster of bark wigwams, the Dahkotah village of Raymneecha, now Red Wing, at which was a Presbyterian mission house.

The next settlement was Kaposia, also an Indian village, and the residence of a Presbyterian missionary, the Rev. T. S. Williamson, M. D. On the east side of the Mississippi, the first settlement, at the mouth of the St. Croix, was Point Douglas, then as now, a small hamlet.

At Red Rock, the site of a former Methodist mission station, there were a few farmers. Saint Paul was just emerging from a collection of Indian whisky shops and birch roofed cabins of half-breed voyageurs. Here and there a frame tenement was erected, and, under the auspices of the Hon. H. M. Rice, who had obtained an interest in the town, some warehouses were constructed, and the foundations of the American House, a frame hotel, which stood at Third and Exchange street, were laid. In 1849, the population had increased to two hundred and fifty or three hundred inhabitants, for rumors had gone abroad that it might be mentioned in the act, creating the territory, as the capital of Minnesota. More than a month after the adjournment of Congress, just at eve, on the ninth of April, amid terrific peals of thunder and torrents of rain, the weekly steam packet, the first to force its way through the icy barrier of Lake Pepin, rounded the rocky point whistling loud and long, as if the bearer of glad tidings. Before she was safely moored to the landing, the shouts of the excited villagers were heard announcing that there was a territory of Minnesota, and that Saint Paul was the seat of government.

Every successive steamboat arrival poured out on the landing men big with hope, and anxious to do something to mould the future of the new state.

Nine days after the news of the existence of the territory of Minnesota was received, there arrived James M. Goodhue with press, type, and printing apparatus. A graduate of Amherst college, and a lawyer by profession, he wielded a sharp pen, and wrote editorials, which, more than anything else, perhaps, induced immigration. Though a man of some faults, one of the counties properly bears his name. On the twenty-eighth of April, he issued from his press the first number of the Pioneer.

On the twenty-seventh of May, Alexander Ramsey, the Governor, and family, arrived at Saint Paul, but owing to the crowded state of public houses, immediately proceeded in the steamer to the establishment of the Fur Company, known as Mendota, at the junction of the Minnesota and Mississippi, and became the guest of the Hon. H. H. Sibley.

On the first of June, Governor Ramsey, by proclamation, declared the territory duly organized, with the following officers: Alexander Ramsey, of Pennsylvania, Governor; C. K. Smith, of Ohio, Secretary; A. Goodrich, of Tennessee, Chief Justice; D. Cooper, of Pennsylvania, and B. B. Meeker, of Kentucky, Associate Judges; Joshua L. Taylor, Marshal; H. L. Moss, attorney of the United States.

On the eleventh of June, a second proclamation was issued, dividing the territory into three temporary judicial districts. The first comprised the county of St. Croix; the county of La Pointe and the region north and west of the Mississippi, and north of the Minnesota and of a line running due west from the headwaters of the Minnesota to the Missouri river, constituted the second; and the country west of the Mississippi and south of the Minnesota, formed the third district. Judge Goodrich was assigned to the first, Meeker to the second, and Cooper to the third. A court was ordered to be held at Stillwater on the second Monday, at the Falls of St. Anthony on the third, and at Mendota on the fourth Monday of August.

Until the twenty-sixth of June, Governor Ramsey and family had been guests of Hon. H. H. Sibley, at Mendota. On the afternoon of that day they arrived at St. Paul, in a birch-bark canoe, and became permanent residents at the capital. The house first occupied as a gubernatorial mansion, was a small frame building that stood on Third, between Robert and Jackson streets, formerly known as the New England House.

A few days after, the Hon. H. M. Rice and family moved from Mendota to St. Paul, and occupied the house he had erected on St. Anthony street, near the corner of Market.

On the first of July, a land office was established at Stillwater, and A. Van Vorhes, after a few weeks, became the register.

The anniversary of our National Independence was celebrated in a becoming manner at the capital. The place selected for the address, was a grove that stood on the sites of the City Hall and the Baldwin School building, and the late Franklin Steele was the marshal of the day.

On the seventh of July, a proclamation was issued, dividing the territory into seven conneil districts, and ordering an election to be held on the first day of August, for one delegate to represent the people in the House of Representatives of the United States, for nine councillors and eighteen representatives, to constitute the Legislative Assembly of Minnesota.

In this month, the Hon. H. M. Rice despatched a boat laded with Indian goods from the the Falls of St. Anthony to Crow Wing, which was towed by horses after the manner of a canal boat.

The election on the first of August, passed off with little excitement, Hon. H. H. Sibley being elected delegate to Congress without opposition. David Lambert, on what might, perhaps, be termed the old settlers' ticket, was defeated in St. Paul, by James M. Boal. The latter, on the night of the election, was honored with a ride through town on the axle and fore-wheels of an old wagon, which was drawn by his admiring but somewhat undisciplined friends.

J. L. Taylor having declined the office of United States Marshal; A. M. Mitchell, of Ohio, a graduate of West Point, and colonel of a regiment of Ohio volunteers in the Mexican war, was appointed and arrived at the capital early in August.

There were three papers published in the territory soon after its organization. The first was the Pioneer, issued on April twenty-eighth, 1849, under most discouraging circumstances. It was at first the intention of the witty and reckless editor to have called his paper "The Epistle of St. Paul." About the same time there was issued in Cincinnati, under the auspices of the late Dr. A. Randall, of California, the first number of the Register. The second number of the paper was printed at St. Paul, in July, and the office was on St. Anthony, between Washington and Market Streets. About the first of June, James Hughes, afterward of Hudson, Wisconsin, arrived with a press and materials, and established the Minnesota Chronicle. After an existence of a few weeks two papers were discontinued; and, in their place, was issued the "Chronicle and Register," edited by Nathaniel McLean and John P. Owens.

The first courts, pursuant to proclamation of the governor, were held in the month of August. At Stillwater, the court was organized on the thirteenth of the month, Judge Goodrich presiding, and Judge Cooper by courtesy, sitting on the bench. On the twentieth, the second judicial district held a court. The room used was the old government mill at Minneapolis. The presiding judge was B. B. Meeker; the foreman of the grand jury, Franklin Steele. On the last Monday of the month, the court for the third judicial district was organized in the large stone warehouse of the fur company at Mendota. The presiding judge was David Cooper. Governor Ramsey sat on the right, and Judge Goodrich on the left. Hon. H. H. Sibley was the foreman of the grand jury. As some of the jurors could not speak the English language, W. H. Forbes acted as interpreter. The charge of Judge Cooper was lucid, scholarly, and dignified. At the request of the grand jury it was afterwards published.

On Monday, the third of September, the first Legislative Assembly convened in the "Central House," in Saint Paul, a building at the corner of Minnesota and Bench streets, facing the Mississippi river which answered the double purpose of capitol and hotel. On the first floor of the main building was the Secretary's office and Representative chamber, and in the second story was the library and Council chamber. As the flag was run up the staff in front of the house, a number of Indians sat on a rocky bluff in the vicinity, and gazed at what to them was a novel and perhaps saddening scene; for if the tide of immigration sweeps in from the Pacific as it has from the Atlantic coast, they must soon dwindle.

The legislature having organized, elected the following permanent officers: David Ohmsted, President of Council; Joseph R. Brown, Secretary; H. A. Lambert, Assistant. In the House of Representatives, Joseph W. Furber was elected Speaker; W. D. Phillips, Clerk; L. B. Wait, Assistant.

On Tuesday afternoon, both houses assembled in the dining hall of the hotel, and after prayer was offered by Rev. E. D. Neill, Governor Ramsey delivered his message. The message was ably written, and its perusal afforded satisfaction at home and abroad.

The first session of the legislature adjourned on the first of November. Among other proceedings of interest, was the creation of the following counties: Itasca, Wapashaw, Dahkotah, Wahnahtah, Mahkahto, Pembina, Washington, Ramsey and Benton. The three latter counties comprised the country that up to that time had been ceded by the Indians on the east side of the Mississippi. Stillwater was declared the county seat of Washington, Saint Paul, of Ramsey, and "the seat of justice of the county of Benton was to be within one-quarter of a mile of a point on the east side of the Mississippi, directly opposite the mouth of Sauk river."

EVENTS OF A. D. 1850.

By the active exertions of the secretary of the territory, C. K. Smith, Esq., the Historical Society of Minnesota was incorporated at the first session of the legislature. The opening annual address was delivered in the then Methodist (now Swedenborgian) church at Saint Paul, on the first of January, 1850.

The following account of the proceedings is from the Chronicle and Register. "The first public exercises of the Minnesota Historical Society, took place at the Methodist church, Saint Paul, on the first inst., and passed off highly creditable to all concerned. The day was pleasant and the attendance large. At the appointed hour, the President and both Vice-Presidents of the society being absent; on motion of Hon. C. K. Smith, Hon. Chief Justice Goodrich was called to the chair. The same gentleman then moved that a committee, consisting of Messrs. Parsons K. Johnson, John A. Wakefield, and B. W. Brunson, be appointed to wait upon the Orator of the day, Rev. Mr. Neill, and inform him that the audience was waiting to hear his address.

"Mr. Neill was shortly conducted to the pulpit; and after an eloquent and appropriate prayer by the Rev. Mr. Parsons, and music by the band, he proceeded to deliver his discourse upon the early French missionaries and Voyageurs into Minnesota. We hope the society will provide for its publication at an early day.

"After some brief remarks by Rev. Mr.

Hobart, upon the objects and ends of history, the ceremonies were concluded with a prayer by that gentleman. The audience dispersed highly delighted with all that occurred.

At this early period the Minnesota Pioneer issued a Carrier's New Year's Address, which was amusing doggerel. The reference to the future greatness and ignoble origin of the capital of Minnesota was as follows:—

The cities on this river must be three,
Two that are built and one that is to be.
One, is the mart of all the tropics yield,
The cane, the orange, and the cotton-field,
And sends her ships abroad and boasts
Her trade extended to a thousand coasts:
The other, central for the temperate zone,
Garners the stores that on the plains are grown.
A place where steamboats from all quarters,
range,

To meet and speculate, as 'twere on 'change.
The third will be, where rivers confluent flow
From the wide spreading north through plains of snow;

The mart of all that boundless forests give
To make mankind more comfortably live,
The land of manufacturing industry,
The workshop of the nation it shall be.
Propelled by this wide stream, you'll see
A thousand factories at Saint Anthony;
And the Saint Croix a hundred mills shall drive,
And all its smiling villages shall thrive;
But then my town—remember that high bench
With cabins scattered over it, of French?
A man named Henry Jackson's living there,
Also a man—why every one knows L. Robair,
Below Fort Snelling, seven miles or so,
And three above the village of Old Crow?
Pig's Eye? Yes; Pig's Eye! That's the spot!
A very funny name; isn't not?
Pig's Eye's the spot, to plant my city on,
To be remembered by, when I am gone,
Pig's Eye converted thou shalt be, like Saul:
Thy name henceforth shall be Saint Paul.

On the evening of New Year's day, at Fort Snelling, there was an assemblage which is only seen on the outposts of civilization. In one of the stone edifices, outside of the wall, belonging to the United States, there resided a gentleman who had dwelt in Minnesota since the year 1819, and for many years had been in the employ of the government, as Indian interpreter. In youth he had been a member of the Columbia Fur Company, and conforming to the habits of traders, had purchased a Dahkotali wife who was wholly ignorant of the English language. As a family of children gathered around him he recognised the relation of husband and father, and conscientiously discharged his duties as a parent. His daughter at a proper age was sent to a boarding school of some celebrity, and on the night referred to was married to an intelligent young American farmer. Among the guests present were the officers of the garrison in full uniform, with their wives, the United States Agent for the Dahkotais, and family, the bois brules of the neighborhood, and the Indian relatives of the mother. The mother did not make her appearance, but, as the minister proceeded with the ceremony, the Dahkotali relatives, wrapped in their blankets, gathered in the hall and looked in through the door.

The marriage feast was worthy of the occasion. In consequence of the numbers, the officers and those of European extraction partook first; then the bois brules of Ojibway and Dahkotali descent; and, finally, the native Americans, who did ample justice to the plentiful supply spread before them.

Governor Ramsey, Hon. H. H. Sibley, and the delegate to Congress devised at Washington, this winter, the territorial seal. The design was Falls of St. Anthony in the distance. An immigrant ploughing the land on the borders of the Indian country, full of hope, and looking forward to the possession of the hunting grounds beyond. An Indian, amazed at the sight of the plough, and fleeing on horseback towards the setting sun.

The motto of the Earl of Dunraven, "Quæ sursum volo videre" (I wish to see what is above) was most appropriately selected by Mr. Sibley, but by the blunder of an engraver it appeared on the territorial seal, "Quo sursum volo videre," which no scholar could translate. At length was substituted, "L'Étoile du Nord," "Star of the North," while the device of the setting sun remained, and this is objectionable, as the State of Maine had already placed the North Star on her escutcheon, with the motto "Dirigo," "I guide." Perhaps some future legislature may direct the first motto to be restored and correctly engraved.

In the month of April, there was a renewal of hostilities between the Dahkotahs and Ojibways, on lands that had been ceded to the United States. A war prophet at Red Wing, dreamed that he ought to raise a war party. . Announcing the fact, a number expressed their willingness to go on such an expedition. Several from the Kaposia village also joined the party, under the leadership of a worthless Indian, who had been confined in the guard-house at Fort Snelling, the year previous, for scalping his wife.

Passing up the valley of the St. Croix, a few miles above Stillwater the party discovered on the snow the marks of a keg and footprints. These told them that a man and woman of the Ojibways had been to some whisky dealer's, and were returning. Following their trail, they found on Apple river, about twenty miles from Stillwater, a band of Ojibways encamped in one lodge. Waiting till daybreak of Wednesday, April second, the Dahkotahs commenced firing on the unsuspecting inmates, some of whom were drinking from the contents of the whisky keg. The camp was composed of fifteen, and all were murdered and scalped, with the exception of a lad, who was made a captive.

On Thursday, the victors came to Stillwater, and danced the scalp dance around the captive boy, in the heat of excitement, striking him in the face with the scarcely cold and bloody scalps of his relatives. The child was then taken to Kaposia, and adopted by the chief. Governor Ramsey immediately took measures to send the boy to his friends. At a conference held at the Governor's mansion, the boy was delivered up, and, on being led out to the kitchen by a little son of the Governor, since deceased, to receive refreshments, he cried bitterly, seemingly more alarmed at being left with the whites than he had been while a captive at Kaposia.

From the first of April the waters of the Mississippi began to rise, and on the thirteenth, the lower floor of the warehouse, then occupied by William Constans, at the foot of Jackson street, St. Paul, was submerged. Taking advantage of the freshet, the steamboat Anthony Wayne, for a purse of two hundred dollars, ventured through the swift current above Fort Snelling, and reached the Falls of St. Anthony. The boat left the fort after dinner, with Governor Ramsey and other guests, also the band of the Sixth Regiment on board, and reached the falls between three and four o'clock in the afternoon. The whole town, men, women and children, lined the shore as the boat approached, and welcomed this first arrival, with shouts and waving handkerchiefs.

On the afternoon of May fifteenth, there might have been seen, hurrying through the streets of Saint Paul, a number of naked and painted braves of the Kaposia band of Dahkotahs, ornamented with all the attire of war, and panting for the scalps of their enemies. A few hours before, the warlike head chief of the Ojibways, young Hole-in-the-Day, having secreted his canoe in the retired gorge which leads to the cave in the upper suburbs, with two or three associates had crossed the river, and, almost in sight of the citizens of the town, had attacked a small party of Dahkotahs, and murdered and scalped one man. On receipt of the news, Governor Ramsey granted a parole to the thirteen Dahkotahs confined in Fort Snelling, for participating in the Apple river massacre.

On the morning of the sixteenth of May, the first Protestant church edifice completed in the white settlements, a small frame building, built for the Presbyterian church, at Saint Paul, was destroyed by fire, it being the first conflagration that had occurred since the organization of the territory.

One of the most interesting events of the year 1850, was the Indian council, at Fort Snelling. Governor Ramsey had sent runners to the different bands of the Ojibways and Dahkotahs, to meet him at the fort, for the purpose of endeavouring to adjust their difficulties.

On Wednesday, the twelfth of June, after much talking, as is customary at Indian councils, the two tribes agreed as they had frequently done before, to be friendly, and Governor Ramsey presenting to each party an ox, the council was dissolved.

On Thursday, the Ojibways visited St. Paul for the first time, young Hole-in-the-Day being dressed in a coat of a captain of United States infantry, which had been presented to him at the fort. On Friday, they left in the steamer Governor Ramsey, which had been built at St. Anthony, and just commenced running between that point and Sauk Rapids, for their homes in the wilderness of the Upper Mississippi.

The summer of 1850 was the commencement of the navigation of the Minnesota River by steamboats. With the exception of a steamer that made a pleasure excursion as far as Shokpay, in 1841, no large vessels had ever disturbed the waters of this stream. In June, the "Anthony Wayne," which a few weeks before had ascended to the Falls of St. Anthony, made a trip. On the eighteenth of July she made a second trip, going almost to Mahkahto. The "Nominee" also navigated the stream for some distance.

On the twenty-second of July the officers of the "Yankee," taking advantage of the high water, determined to navigate the stream as far as possible. The boat ascended to near the Cottonwood river.

As the time for the general election in September approached, considerable excitement was manifested. As there were no political issues before the people, parties were formed based on personal preferences. Among those nominated for delegate to Congress, by various meetings, were H. H. Sibley, the former delegate to Congress, David Olmsted, at that time engaged in the Indian trade, and A. M. Mitchell, the United States marshal. Mr. Olmsted withdrew his name before election day, and the contest was between those interested in Sibley and Mitchell. The friends of each betrayed the greatest zeal, and neither pains nor money were spared to insure success. Mr. Sibley was elected by a small majority. For the first time in the territory, soldiers at the garrisons voted at this election, and there was considerable discussion as to the propriety of such a course.

Miss Fredrika Bremer, the well known Swedish novelist, visited Minnesota in the month of October, and was the guest of Governor Ramsey.

During November, the Dahkotah Tawaxitku Kin, or the Dahkotah Friend, a monthly paper, was commenced, one-half in the Dahkotah and one-half in the English language. Its editor was the Rev. Gideon H. Pond, a Presbyterian missionary, and its place of publication at Saint Paul. It was published for nearly two years, and, though it failed to attract the attention of the Indian mind, it conveyed to the English reader much correct information in relation to the habits, the belief, and superstitions, of the Dahkotahs.

On the tenth of December, a new paper, owned and edited by Daniel A. Robertson, late United States marshal, of Ohio, and called the Minnesota Democrat, made its appearance.

During the summer there had been changes in the editorial supervision of the "Chronicle and Register." For a brief period it was edited by L. A. Babcock, Esq., who was succeeded by W. G. Le Duc.

About the time of the issuing of the Democrat, C. J. Henniss, formerly reporter for the United States Gazette, Philadelphia, became the editor of the Chronicle.

The first proclamation for a thanksgiving day was issued in 1850 by the governor, and the twenty-sixth of December was the time appointed and it was generally observed.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1851.

On Wednesday, January first, 1851, the second Legislative Assembly assembled in a three-story brick building, since destroyed by fire, that stood on St. Anthony street, between Washington and Franklin. D. B. Loomis was chosen Speaker of the Council, and M. E. Ames Speaker of the House. This assembly was characterized by more bitterness of feeling than any that has since convened. The preceding delegate election had been based on personal preferences, and cliques and factions manifested themselves at an early period of the session.

The locating of the penitentiary at Stillwater, and the capitol building at St. Paul gave some dissatisfaction. By the efforts of J. W. North, Esq., a bill creating the University of Minnesota at or near the Falls of St. Anthony, was passed, and signed by the Governor. This institution, by the State Constitution, is now the State University.

During the session of this Legislature, the publication of the "Chronicle and Register" ceased.

About the middle of May, a war party of Dahkotahs discovered near Swan River, an Ojibway with a keg of whisky. The latter escaped, with the loss of his keg. The war party, drinking the contents, became intoxicated, and, firing upon some teamsters they met driving their wagons with goods to the Indian Agency, killed one of them, Andrew Swartz, a resident of St. Paul. The news was conveyed to Fort Ripley, and a party of soldiers, with Hole-in-the-Day as a guide, started in pursuit of the murderers, but did not succeed in capturing them. Through the influence of Little Six the Dahkotah chief, whose village was at (and named after him) Shokpay, five of the offenders were arrested and placed in the guard-house at Fort Snelling. On Monday, June ninth, they left the fort in a wagon, guarded by twenty-five dragoons, destined for Sauk Rapids for trial. As they departed they all sang their death song, and the coarse soldiers amused themselves by making signs that they were going to be hung. On the first evening of the journey the five culprits encamped with the twenty-five dragoons. Handcuffed, they were placed in the tent, and yet at midnight they all escaped, only one being wounded by the guard. What was more remarkable, the wounded man was the first to bring the news to St. Paul. Proceeding to Kaposia, his wound was examined by the missionary and physician, Dr. Williamson; and then, fearing an arrest, he took a canoe and paddled up the Minnesota. The excuse offered by the dragoons was, that all the guard but one fell asleep.

The first paper published in Minnesota, beyond the capital, was the St. Anthony Express, which made its appearance during the last week of April or May.

The most important event of the year 1851 was the treaty with the Dahkotahs, by which the west side of the Mississippi and the valley of the Minnesota River were opened to the hardy immigrant. The commissioners on the part of the United States were Luke Lea, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and Governor Ramsey. The place of meeting for the upper bands was Traverse des Sioux. The commission arrived there on the last of June, but were obliged to wait many days for the assembling of the various bands of Dahkotahs.

On the eighteenth of July, all those expected having arrived, the Sissetoans and Wahpaytoan Dahkotahs assembled in grand council with the United States commissioners. After the usual feastings and speeches, a treaty was concluded on Wednesday, July twenty-third. The pipe having been smoked by the commissioners, Lea and Ramsey, it was passed to the chiefs. The paper containing the treaty was then read in English and translated into the Dahkotah by the Rev. S. R. Riggs, Presbyterian Missionary among this people. This finished, the chiefs came up to the secretary's table and touched the pen; the white men present then witnessed the document, and nothing remained but the ratification of the United States Senate to open that vast country for the residence of the hardy immigrant.

During the first week in August, a treaty was also concluded beneath an oak bower, on Pilot Knob, Mendota, with the M'dewakantonwan and Wahpaykootay bands of Dahkotahs. About sixty of the chiefs and principal men touched the pen, and Little Crow, who had been in the mission-school at Lac qui Parle, signed his own name. Before they separated, Colonel Lea and Governor Ramsey gave them a few words of advice on various subjects connected with their future well-being, but particularly on the subject of education and temperance. The treaty was interpreted to them by the Rev. G. H. Pond, a gentleman who was conceded to be a most correct speaker of the Dahkotah tongue.

The day after the treaty these lower bands received thirty thousand dollars, which, by the treaty of 1837, was set apart for education; but, by the misrepresentations of interested half-breeds, the Indians were made to believe that it ought to be given to them to be employed as they pleased.

The next week, with their sacks filled with money, they thronged the streets of St. Paul, purchasing whatever pleased their fancy.

On the seventeenth of September, a new paper was commenced in St. Paul, under the auspices of the "Whigs," and John P. Owens became editor, which relation he sustained until the fall of 1857.

The election for members of the legislature and county officers occurred on the fourteenth of October; and, for the first time, a regular Democratic ticket was placed before the people. The parties called themselves Democratic and Anti-organization, or Coalition.

In the month of November Jerome Fuller arrived, and took the place of Judge Goodrich as Chief Justice of Minnesota, who was removed; and, about the same time, Alexander Wilkin was appointed secretary of the territory in place of C. K. Smith.

The eighteenth of December, pursuant to proclamation, was observed as a day of Thanksgiving.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1852.

The third Legislative Assembly commenced its sessions in one of the edifices on Third below Jackson street, which became a portion of the Merchants' Hotel, on the seventh of January, 1852.

This session, compared with the previous, formed a contrast as great as that between a boisterous day in March and a calm June morning. The minds of the population were more deeply interested in the ratification of the treaties made with the Dakotahs, than in political discussions. Among other legislation of interest was the creation of Hennepin county.

On Saturday, the fourteenth of February, a dog-train arrived at St. Paul from the north, with the distinguished Arctic explorer, Dr. Rae. He had been in search of the long-missing Sir John Franklin, by way of the Mackenzie river, and was now on his way to Europe.

On the fourteenth of May, an interesting lusus nature occurred at Stillwater. On the prairies, beyond the elevated bluffs which encircle the business portion of the town, there is a lake which discharges its waters through a ravine, and supplied McKusick's mill. Owing to heavy rains, the hills became saturated with water, and the lake very full. Before daylight the citizens heard the "voice of many waters," and looking out, saw rushing down through the ravine, trees, gravel and diluvium. Nothing impeded its course, and as it issued from the ravine it spread over the town site, covering up barns and small tenements, and, continuing to the lake shore, it materially improved the landing, by a deposit of many tons of earth. One of the editors of the day, alluding to the fact, quaintly remarked, that "it was a very extraordinary movement of real estate."

During the summer, Elijah Terry, a young man who had left St. Paul the previous March, and went to Pembina, to act as teacher to the mixed bloods in that vicinity, was murdered under distressing circumstances. With a bois brule he had started to the woods on the morning of his death, to hew timber. While there he was fired upon by a small party of Dakotahs; a ball broke his arm, and he was pierced with arrows. His scalp was wrenched from his head, and was afterwards seen among Sisseton Dakotahs, near Big Stone Lake.

About the last of August, the pioneer editor of Minnesota, James M. Goodhue, died.

At the November Term of the United States District Court, of Ramsey county, a Dakotah, named Yu-ha-zee, was tried for the murder of a German woman. With others she was traveling above Shokpay, when a party of Indians, of whom the prisoner was one, met them; and, gathering about the wagon, were much excited. The prisoner punched the woman first with his gun, and, being threatened by one of the party, loaded and fired, killing the woman and wounding one of the men.

On the day of his trial he was escorted from Fort Snelling by a company of mounted dragoons in full dress. It was an impressive scene to witness the poor Indian half hid in his blanket, in a buggy with the civil officer, surrounded with all the pomp and circumstance of war. The jury found him guilty. On being asked if he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed, he replied, through the interpreter, that the band to which he belonged would remit their annuities if he could be released. To this Judge Hayner, the successor of Judge Fuller, replied, that he had no authority to release him; and, ordering him to rise, after some appropriate and impressive remarks, he pronounced the first sentence of death ever pronounced by a judicial officer in Minnesota. The prisoner trembled while the judge spoke, and was a piteous spectacle. By the statute of Minnesota, then, one convicted of murder could not be executed until twelve months had elapsed, and he was confined until the governor of the territory should by warrant order his execution.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1853.

The fourth Legislative Assembly convened on the fifth of January, 1853, in the two story brick edifice at the corner of Third and Minnesota streets. The Council chose Martin McLeod as presiding officer, and the House Dr. David Day, Speaker. Governor Ramsey's message was an interesting document.

The Baldwin school, now known as Macalester College, was incorporated at this session of the legislature, and was opened the following June.

On the ninth of April, a party of Ojibways killed a Dahkotoh, at the village of Shokpay. A war party, from Kaposia, then proceeded up the valley of the St. Croix, and killed an Ojibway. On the morning of the twenty-seventh, a band of Ojibway warriors, naked, decked, and fiercely gesticulating, might have been seen in the busiest street of the capital, in search of their enemies. Just at that time a small party of women, and one man, who had lost a leg in the battle of Stillwater, arrived in a canoe from Kaposia, at the Jackson street landing. Perceiving the Ojibways, they retreated to the building then known as the "Pioneer" office, and the Ojibways discharging a volley through the windows, wounded a Dahkotoh woman who soon died. For a short time, the infant capital presented a sight similar to that witnessed in ancient days in Hadley or Deerfield, the then frontier towns of Massachusetts. Messengers were despatched to Fort Snelling for the dragoons, and a party of citizens mounted on horseback, were quickly in pursuit of those who with so much boldness had sought the streets of St. Paul, as a place to avenge their wrongs. The dragoons soon followed, with Indian guides scenting the track of the Ojibways, like bloodhounds. The next day they discovered the transgressors, near the Falls of St. Croix. The Ojibways manifesting what was supposed to be an insolent spirit, the order was given by the lieutenant in command, to fire, and he whose scalp was afterwards daguerreotyped, and which was engraved for Graham's Magazine, wallowed in gore.

During the summer, the passenger, as he stood on the hurricane deck of any of the steamboats, might have seen, on a scaffold on the bluffs in the rear of Kaposia, a square box covered with a coarsely fringed red cloth. Above it was suspended a piece of the Ojibway's scalp, whose death had caused the affray in the streets of St. Paul. Within, was the body of the woman who had been shot in the "Pioneer" building, while seeking refuge. A scalp suspended over the corpse is supposed to be a consolation to the soul, and a great protection in the journey to the spirit land.

On the accession of Pierce to the presidency of the United States, the officers appointed under the Taylor and Fillmore administrations were removed, and the following gentlemen substituted: Governor, W. A. Gorman, of Indiana; Secretary, J. T. Rosser, of Virginia; Chief Justice, W. H. Welch, of Minnesota; Associates, Moses Sherburne, of Maine, and A. G. Chatfield, of Wisconsin. One of the first official acts of the second Governor, was the making of a treaty with the Winnebago Indians at Watwab, Benton county, for an exchange of country.

On the twenty-ninth of June, D. A. Robertson, who by his enthusiasm and earnest advocacy of its principles had done much to organize the Democratic party of Minnesota, retired from the editorial chair and was succeeded by David Olmsted.

At the election held in October, Henry M. Rice and Alexander Wilkin were candidates for delegate to Congress. The former was elected by a decisive majority.

CHAPTER XXIII.

EVENTS FROM A. D. 1854 TO THE ADMISSION OF MINNESOTA TO THE UNION.

Fifth Legislature—Execution of Yuhazee—Sixth Legislature—First bridge over the Mississippi—Arctic Explorer—Seventh Legislature—Indian girl killed near Bloomington Ferry—Eighth Legislature—Attempt to Remove the Capital—Special Session of the Legislature—Convention to frame a State Constitution—Admission of Minnesota to the Union.

The fifth session of the legislature was commenced in the building just completed as the Capitol, on January fourth, 1854. The President of the Council was S. B. Olmstead, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives was N. C. D. Taylor.

Governor Gorman delivered his first annual message on the tenth, and as his predecessor, urged the importance of railway communications, and dwelt upon the necessity of fostering the interests of education, and of the lumbermen.

The exciting bill of the session was the act incorporating the Minnesota and Northwestern Railroad Company, introduced by Joseph R. Brown. It was passed after the hour of midnight on the last day of the session. Contrary to the expectation of his friends, the Governor signed the bill.

On the afternoon of December twenty-seventh, the first public execution in Minnesota, in accordance with the forms of law, took place. Yu-hazee, the Dakotah who had been convicted in November, 1852, for the murder of a German woman, above Shokpay, was the individual. The scaffold was erected on the open space between an inn called the Franklin House and the rear of the late Mr. J. W. Selby's enclosure in St. Paul. About two o'clock, the prisoner, dressed in a white shroud, left the old log prison, near the court house, and entered a carriage with the officers of the law. Being assisted up the steps that led to the scaffold, he made a few remarks in his own language, and was then executed. Numerous ladies sent in a petition to the governor, asking the pardon of the Indian, to which that officer in declining made an appropriate reply.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1855.

The sixth session of the legislature convened on the third of January, 1855. W. P. Murray was elected President of the Council, and James S. Norris Speaker of the House.

About the last of January, the two houses adjourned one day, to attend the exercises occasioned by the opening of the first bridge of any kind, over the mighty Mississippi, from Lake Itasca to the Gulf of Mexico. It was at Falls of Saint Anthony, and made of wire, and at the time of its opening, the patent for the land on which the west piers were built, had not been issued from the Land Office, a striking evidence of the rapidity with which the city of Minneapolis, which now surrounds the Falls, has developed.

On the twenty-ninth of March, a convention was held at Saint Anthony, which led to the formation of the Republican party of Minnesota. This body took measures for the holding of a territorial convention at St. Paul, which convened on the twenty-fifth of July, and William R. Marshall was nominated as delegate to Congress. Shortly after the friends of Mr. Sibley nominated David Olmsted and Henry M. Rice, the former delegate was also a candidate. The contest was animated, and resulted in the election of Mr. Rice.

About noon of December twelfth, 1855, a four-horse vehicle was seen driving rapidly through St. Paul, and deep was the interest when it was announced that one of the Arctic exploring party, Mr. James Stewart, was on his way to Canada with relics of the world-renowned and world-mourned Sir John Franklin. Gathering together the precious fragments found on Montreal Island and vicinity, the party had left the region of icebergs on the ninth of August, and after a continued land journey from that time, had reached Saint Paul on that day, en route to the Hudson Bay Company's quarters in Canada.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1856.

The seventh session of the Legislative Assembly was begun on the second of January, 1856, and again the exciting question was the Minnesota and Northwestern Railroad Company.

John B. Brislin was elected President of the Council, and Charles Gardner, Speaker of the House.

This year was comparatively devoid of interest. The citizens of the territory were busily engaged in making claims in newly organized counties, and in enlarging the area of civilization.

On the twelfth of June, several Ojibways entered the farm house of Mr. Whallon, who resided in Hennepin county, on the banks of the Minnesota, a mile below the Bloomington ferry. The wife of the farmer, a friend, and three children, besides a little Dakotah girl, who had been brought up in the mission-house at Kaposia, and so changed in manners that her origin was scarcely perceptible, were sitting in the room when the Indians came in. Instantly seizing the little Indian maiden, they threw her out of the door, killed and scalped her, and fled before the men who were near by, in the field, could reach the house.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1857.

The procurement of a state organization, and a grant of lands for railroad purposes, were the topics of political interest during the year 1857.

The eighth Legislative Assembly convened at the capitol on the seventh of January, and J. B. Brislin was elected President of the Council, and J. W. Furber, Speaker of the House.

A bill changing the seat of government to Saint Peter, on the Minnesota River, caused much discussion.

On Saturday, February twenty-eighth, Mr. Balcombe offered a resolution to report the bill for the removal of the seat of government, and should Mr. Rolette, chairman of the committee, fail, that W. W. Wales, of said committee, report a copy of said bill.

Mr. Setzer, after the reading of the resolution, moved a call of the Council, and Mr. Rolette was found to be absent. The chair ordered the sergeant at arms to report Mr Rolette in his seat.

Mr. Balcombe moved that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with; which did not prevail. From that time until the next Thursday afternoon, March the fifth, a period of one hundred and twenty-three hours, the Council remained in their chamber without recess. At that time a motion to adjourn prevailed. On Friday another motion was made to dispense with the call of the Council, which did not prevail. On Saturday, the Council met, the president declared the call still pending. At seven and a half p. m., a committee of the House was announced. The chair ruled, that no communication from the House could be received while a call of the Council was pending, and the committee withdrew. A motion was again made during the last night of the session, to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, which prevailed, with one vote only in the negative.

Mr. Ludden then moved that a committee be appointed to wait on the Governor, and inquire if he had any further communication to make to the Council.

Mr. Lowry moved a call of the Council, which was ordered, and the roll being called, Messrs. Rolette, Thompson and Tillotson were absent.

At twelve o'clock at night the president resumed the chair, and announced that the time limited by law for the continuation of the session of the territorial legislature had expired, and he therefore declared the Council adjourned and the seat of government remained at Saint Paul.

The excitement on the capital question was intense, and it was a strange scene to see members of the Council, eating and sleeping in the hall of legislation for days, waiting for the sergeant-at-arms to report an absent member in his seat.

On the twenty-third of February, 1857, an act passed the United States Senate, to authorize the people of Minnesota to form a constitution, preparatory to their admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original states.

Governor Gorman called a special session of the legislature, to take into consideration measures that would give efficiency to the act. The extra session convened on April twenty-seventh, and a message was transmitted by Samuel Medary, who had been appointed governor in place of W. A. Gorman, whose term of office had expired. The extra session adjourned on the twenty-third of May; and in accordance with the provisions of the enabling act of Congress, an election was held on the first Monday in June, for delegates to a convention which was to assemble at the capitol on the second Monday in July. The election resulted, as was thought, in giving a majority of delegates to the Republican party.

At midnight previous to the day fixed for the meeting of the convention, the Republicans proceeded to the capitol, because the enabling act had not fixed at what hour on the second Monday the convention should assemble, and fearing that the Democratic delegates might anticipate them, and elect the officers of the body. A little before twelve, A. M., on Monday, the secretary of the territory entered the speaker's rostrum, and began to call the body to order; and at the same time a delegate, J. W. North, who had in his possession a written request from the majority of the delegates present, proceeded to do the same thing. The secretary of the territory put a motion to adjourn, and the Democratic members present voting in the affirmative, they left the hall. The Republicans, feeling that they were in the majority, remained, and in due time organized, and proceeded with the business specified in the enabling act, to form a constitution, and take all necessary steps for the establishment of a state government, in conformity with the Federal Constitution, subject to the approval and ratification of the people of the proposed state.

After several days the Democratic wing also organized in the Senate chamber at the capitol, and, claiming to be the true body, also proceeded to form a constitution. Both parties were remarkably orderly and intelligent, and everything was marked by perfect decorum. After they had been in session some weeks, moderate counsels prevailed, and a committee of conference was appointed from each body, which resulted in both adopting the constitution framed by the Democratic wing, on the twenty-ninth of August. According to the provision of the constitution, an election was held for state officers and the adoption of the constitution, on the second Tuesday, the thirteenth of October. The constitution was adopted by almost a unanimous vote. It provided that the territorial officers should retain their offices until the state was admitted into the Union, not anticipating the long delay which was experienced.

The first session of the state legislature commenced on the first Wednesday of December, at the capitol, in the city of Saint Paul; and during the month elected Henry M. Rice and James Shields as their Representatives in the United States Senate.

EVENTS OF A. D. 1858.

On the twenty-ninth of January, 1858, Mr. Douglas submitted a bill to the United States Senate, for the admission of Minnesota into the Union. On the first of February, a discussion arose on the bill, in which Senators Douglas, Wilson, Gwin, Hale, Mason, Green, Brown, and Crittenden participated. Brown, of Mississippi, was opposed to the admission of Minnesota, until the Kansas question was settled. Mr. Crittenden, as a Southern man, could not endorse all that was said by the Senator from Mississippi; and his words of wisdom and moderation during this day's discussion, were worthy of remembrance. On April the seventh, the bill passed the Senate with only three dissenting votes; and in a short time the House of Representatives concurred, and on May the eleventh, the President approved, and Minnesota was fully recognized as one of the United States of America.

OUTLINES

HISTORY OF MINNESOTA FROM 1858 TO 1881.

CHAPTER XXIV.

ADMISSION AND ORGANIZATION OF THE STATE.

Admission of the State.—Its want of Resources.—The Hard Times.—Commencement of Railroad Building.—The State Railroad Bonds Discredited.—"Wild-Cat" Banking Scheme.—The Wright County War.—Failure of the State Loan Scheme.—Attempted Adjustment of the Dilemma.—Partial return of Good Times.—The Political Campaign of 1860.—Secession Movement.—Prospect of War, &c., &c.

On May 11th, 1858, the act of Congress admitting Minnesota to the Union, became a law, and our State took her place among the sisterhood of republics, the thirty-second in the order of admission, and had thenceforth a voice in the national councils. On the 24th of May, the State officers elect were quietly sworn in, in the Executive Rooms in the Capitol, and the machinery of the State government was put in motion. The outlook for the little commonwealth at this time, was far from propitious.⁺ The terrible financial revulsion of the previous year had prostrated all business, destroyed values, undermined confidence, depressed the energies and ambition of the people, and almost entirely checked immigration. ⁺ There was but limited agriculture (a large portion of the bread-stuffs used being imported), little accumulated wealth, and that mostly based on real estate, now unsaleable, money commanding two per cent. a month; no established industries or manufactures, not a mile of railroad, no sound banks or currency, no system for raising revenue, and not a cent of money in the State treasury. In fact the State was considerably in debt. The loan of $250,000 authorized by the Legislature the winter previous, was not yet realized on. Meantime, denominational treasury warrants, bearing interest, were used as currency, while town and county "scrip" were generally circulated among the people as money. It was under such gloomy circumstances as these, that the State began its career.

An adjourned session of the Legislature was held in July, but little or nothing could be done for the relief of the people from the financial stringency or other troubles surrounding them. Some relief was hoped for from the building of the land grant railroads, which were generally got under way during the summer, but there was not as much money disbursed by the companies or contractors, as had been anticipated. The directors of the roads hurried their first ten mile sections of grading to completion as rapidly as possible, and as soon as they were entitled to bonds, according to the terms of the constitutional amendment, applied to Gov. Sibley for the same. He declined to issue them unless the roads would give the State first mortgage bonds in equal amounts, giving it a priority of lien. This the land grant companies refused to accede to, and applied to the Supreme Court of the State, for a writ of mandamus, to compel Gov. Sibley to issue the bonds, as demanded by them. The writ was issued on November 12th, and left the Executive no alternative in the premises, so the bonds were issued. Efforts were at once made to negotiate them in the New York market.

The harvest this year, although a greatly increased area was sown, was almost a failure, and bread-stuffs were still largely imported. Everybody was in the most desperate straits financially. A winter of gloom and depression set in, such as has never been experienced in the history of the Northwest, and, it is scarcely probable, ever will be again. The price of labor, for such as could get employment at all, touched an unprecedentedly low figure, though, fortunately, the cost of living had declined in the same ratio. Meantime, the negotiation of the bonds in New York, proceeded very slowly. Capitalists were very unwilling to invest in them, as already some journals in the State had predicted the failure and break-down of the whole scheme, added to pretty clearly expressed threats that the bonds would be repudiated. Anxious to save the credit of the State, and prevent a disastrous ending of the measure, Gov. Sibley went to New York in person, about the close of the year (1858) and gave his best endeavors to aid the pending negotiation of the bonds; but the capitalists there, alarmed at the hostile tone of newspapers in the State, finally refused to touch them at all. The only recourse now left for the holders of the bonds, and those interested in the railroad scheme, was to use them as a security for the issue of bank notes, under the recently enacted general banking law. Purported sales at ninety-five cents on the dollar having been certified to the State Auditor, he received a large number at this figure, and procured for the owners currency in like amount. Meantime, work was progressing on the four land grant roads.

No session of the legislature was held in the winter of 1858-9. The stringency increased with each month. The newspapers of the state which survived, were crowded with mortgage foreclosure advertisements. Taxes were scarcely paid at all, and the warrants, or scrip, of both State and counties, depreciated, in some instances, to forty or fifty cents on the dollar. These were soon replaced by the issues of the new banks based on the state railroad bonds which now began to flood the State, until the names "Glencoe," "Owatonna," "La Crosse and La Crescent," &c., were familiar words. These issues were regarded with considerable distrust from the outset. Bankers in the state received them with much disrelish, and generally at a discount, while outside the state, they scarcely circulated at all. The Chicago papers, and some financial journals in New York, classed them as "wild-cat." Their issue was pushed for a few weeks, however, until in the spring of 1859 over $200,000 of the currency was in circulation. There were, in addition to these "railroad banks," several based on Minnesota 8 per cents, which were actually worth par.

During the summer of 1859 the reported discovery of gold on Frazer River, and other points in British North America, called the attention of the people of Minnesota to the importance of an over-land route to the Pacific, which might ultimately lead the way for a northern railroad route. Meetings were held, and money was subscribed, to equip a train to open a wagon road via the northern bend of the Missouri River. Col. Wm. H. Nobles was placed in command of the expedition, which left St. Paul on June 11, and proceeded safely through. Another important step towards settling the regions beyond us, was the successful navigation of Red River, by a steamer launched this season. The Minnesota Stage Company also established a line to the Red River.

The "Wright county war," as it has been facetiously termed, occurred this summer. In the fall of 1858, one H. A. Wallace was murdered in Wright county, and a neighbor, named Oscar F. Jackson, was tried for the offense in the spring of 1859, and acquitted. On April 25, a crowd of men assembled, and hung Jackson to the gable end of Wallace's cabin. Gov. Sibley offered a reward for the conviction of any of the lynchers. Not long afterwards one Emory Moore was arrested on charge of being concerned in the outrage, and was taken to Wright County for trial, but was rescued by a mob. Gov. Sibley at once decided to take vigorous steps to maintain the majesty of the law. A military force was called out, and three companies dispatched (Aug. 5) to Monticello to arrest the rioters. The troops proceeded to Monticello, reinforced the civil authorities, arrested eleven lynchers and rescuers, and turned them over to the civil authorities. Having vindicated the supremacy of law and order, the bloodless expedition returned.

The financial condition had meantime been growing worse. Early in June, the brokers of the state had combined to depreciate the "Glencoe money," as the railroad currency was called, and as several sums which had been presented at the banks for redemption, were not redeemed, they were protested, and the state auditor was compelled to advertise the securities for sale. This caused a still further depreciation of the money, until shortly it was scarcely current on any terms. Meantime all work on the land grant lines had been finally and completely suspended, and $2,275,000 of the state bonds had been issued. In October, it was stated that the bonds had been sold as low as ten cents on the dollar. The coupons due on Dec. 1, 1859, were unpaid, and the companies holding the bonds declared in default. The whole scheme had thus been brought to a complete failure, and was now practically abandoned, while not a mile of road had been completed.

The hard times, and the failure of the real estate speculative era, had one good result, however, which was, to turn increased attention to agriculture. A greatly enlarged area was sown, and the agricultural resources of the State began to be known as the true source of its wealth. For the first time, breadstuffs were exported, and immigration began again.

The fall of this year witnessed a bitter political fight. Two years before, the parties had been pretty evenly divided. This campaign each one spent its full force and energy, and had nominated for state officers their most popular men. The election took place on Oct. 11. Hon. Alex. Ramsey was chosen governor, by a vote of 21,335, over Hon. George L. Becker, who received 17,532. The legislature which met on Dec. 7, was largely republican.

The most important work which came before this session was some adjustment of the dilemma into which the state had fallen, through the adoption of the loan amendment. Nearly the entire session was consumed in debating various plans of extrication without much fruit. The loan amendment was expunged, however, and a new amendment was framed for submission to the people, providing that there should be no further issue of bonds to the companies; also, that no law levying a tax to pay either principal or interest on the bonds already issued, should be of any force or effect, until ratified by a popular vote. These constitutional amendments were adopted by a large majority of votes, in the fall of the same year. The governor was also directed to foreclose the deeds of trust given to secure interest on the bonds loaned, and bid off and purchase the property sold, in the name of the state. This was done, the following summer, and the state again secured the forfeited rights, franchises and land grants.

The Federal census taken this year (1860), showed that the state had a population of 172,123. The harvest was a good one, and business was considerably revived. Immigration was beginning to become brisk, and building in the towns and cities was perceptibly increasing, while the tilled area was receiving great additions. It seemed that the "hard times" had about ceased, and the hope of prosperous days was beginning to enliven all. But this gleam of sunshine was of short duration. The memorable presidential contest of that year, the first in which Minnesota had a voice, was a period of unprecedented heat and excitement. The electoral vote of Minnesota was cast for Abraham Lincoln by a very large majority, he receiving 22,069, Douglas, 11,920, Breckenridge 748, and Bell 62. It was not long before the disunion cloud arose in the slave states, and the mutterings of rebellion began to be heard. It was a period of doubt and forebodings. The currency used generally in the state, being largely based on the bonds of seceding states, became greatly depreciated. All classes suffered much loss, business became depressed, real estate unsalable, and soon a condition of distress ensued, almost equal to the darkest days of the panic, three years before.

The legislature of 1861 considered the railroad question at length, and passed acts designed to facilitate the construction of the land grant roads by turning over the forfeited franchises of the old companies to new organizations, believed to be able to complete them. The Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Company was also chartered.

The secession movement progressed steadily during the winter, and it soon became apparent to all that war was inevitable. Lincoln was inaugurated, but his address promised only coercion, and coercion war. The feeble and unreal movements for compromise and conciliation all failed. Meantime business in this state was daily growing worse. Large numbers were out of employment, and anticipating still further disaster.

Saturday, April 13, 1861, was a dark day in the annals of our state. The telegraph brought the unwelcome news of the attack on Fort Sumter, and it was seen that war was inevitable. The bulletin boards of the newspaper offices were surrounded all day with an excited and anxious crowd, but courage and determination were everywhere visible. The next day was the Sabbath, bright and balmy. The churches had but meagre audiences that day. All day knots of angry and excited men gathered on the streets, conversing on the startling events of the time.

On Monday, the proclamation of President Lincoln was received, calling for 75,000 volunteers for three months' service, and assigning to Minnesota one regiment. Gov. Ramsey, who was in Washington, had already tendered to the President, in person, a like force. Lt. Gov. Donnelly at once issued a proclamation calling on the citizens of Minnesota to enlist, and Adj. Gen. Acker issued a general order giving the needed instructions. In all the principal towns and cities of the state, public meetings were at once held, and enlistment stations opened. A fervid patriotism pervaded all ranks. "The war" was the sole topic of conversation. Everything else, even business, to a large extent, was suspended for the time. Never, and in no other state, was a people so imbued with warlike zeal. In four or five days ten companies, in various localities, had been raised and accepted by Adj. General Sanborn (Gen. Acker having resigned to recruit a company.) Fort Snelling having been designated by the war department as a school of instruction, the companies were rendezvoused there, and by the 25th were all in their quarters, and busily engaged in drilling. The regimental officers were announced on the 29th, and on that day, two weeks from the time when the president's call was received, the "Immortal First," over one thousand strong, was mustered into service, for three months, with Ex-Gov. Gorman as Colonel.

Scarcely was this accomplished, when the War Department decided that it could only be received as a three years' regiment, and it became necessary to at once renew the enlistments on that basis. After a few days delay, enough recruits were received, and mustered in, to fill a three years' regiment, and it was accepted on that basis. The War Department, contrary to the hopes of the men, at first ordered the companies to garrison the various posts in and near the state, relieving the regulars stationed there, and some detachments had already left for their posts, when the need of more troops for the Virginia campaign became imminent, and the order was countermanded and the First Regiment directed to proceed at once to Washington. The companies were quickly reassembled at Fort Snelling, and, on June 22d, left that post by boat, arriving in Washington on June 26th. In the various cities through which the First passed, they were received with patriotic demonstrations of respect, and it was noticed by the press as a remarkable fact that a young commonwealth, unknown and almost without population a dozen years before, could now send to the defense of the Union a regiment of such stalwart and brave soldiers.

Meantime, the war spirit which had been aroused in the State, was not content with sending one regiment. There were numbers, in fact several almost full companies, who had tried to get admission into the First, but were too late, and were anxious to go. This fact being made known by Gov. Ramsey on May 3d, to the Secretary of War, he at once authorized the raising of a second regiment, and the recruiting for the same was proceeded with, with alacrity. The regiment was filled to the minimum, and mustered in on June 26th, with the gallant Van Cleve as Colonel, and rendezvoused at Fort Snelling, for the time being, some of the companies, meantime, garrisoning the forts in and near Minnesota.

The First Regiment on reaching Washington, was, after a few days of camp life at Alexandria, pushed to the front, and took an active part with Heintzelman's Division, in McDowell's campaign against Manassas, acquitting itself well. On July 21st, scarcely more than three weeks after its arrival in the field, it took part in the memorable battle of Bull Run, in which disastrous engagement it lost 174 men, of whom 44 were killed, 107 wounded, and 23 taken prisoners. The gallantry of the men, and their fine conduct in the heat of battle, gained the regiment as well as our State, great praise; but the sad news of the loss it suffered, filled our citizens with gloom. The magnitude and solemnity of the great struggle in which the nation had engaged, began to be realized, while the sympathy and benevolence of the citizens of the State, especially the ladies, was aroused by the wants of the wounded and sick soldiers in the hospitals, and a general movement made for such contributions of money and clothing and delicacies suitable for invalids. Nearly $2,000 in money alone, was promptly contributed, and sent to the Chaplain of the First. This was the commencement of a splendid stream of gifts towards the same object, which continued to flow during the whole four years of the war. the Sanitary and Christian Commissions being soon after organized as a means of collecting and distributing relief. In no State, during the struggle for the Union, was found a more patriotic, liberal, actively generous people, than in Minnesota.

Not long after the battle of Bull Run, the First Regiment went into camp between Poolesville and Edwards Ferry, Maryland, for winter quarters, remaining there several months.

While these events were occurring, the material progress of our State was receiving an impulse. Capitalists from Ohio were induced, under the legislation of the last winter, to embark in the completion of the "Minnesota and Pacific Railroad," from St. Paul to St. Anthony. This line had been partially graded three years before, and with little labor was made ready for the superstructure. Ties and rails for several miles were provided, and track-laying commenced. A locomotive and cars arrived, and the first wheel turned by a locomotive in this State, was on September 19th. At this juncture, unfortunately, a disagreement sprang up between the contractors and the officers of the road, and resulted in a suspension of the work for several months.

Business remained very much depressed all the season, a result, in part, of the miserable currency used in trade.

Recruiting for the second regiment did not cease until September, by which time all the companies were filled to the maximum, and the battalion was ready for service on southern fields. Meantime a company of Sharp-Shooters had been recruited by Capt. Peteler, and having been accepted (Sept. 3d), left on Oct. 6th for Virginia, where they were attached to Berdan's U. S. sharpshooters.

Congress, at its special session, commencing July 4th, had authorized the raising of 500,000 troops. Under this call Minnesota was called on for two more regiments, on Sept 17th. There were already some partially completed companies, and recruiting commenced vigorously in all parts of the state. Up to this time all the troops recruited had been for the infantry service, but in order to give all who wished to enlist, their preference for the different arms of service, cavalry, and artillery organizations were commenced. Three companies of cavalry were authorized, and began to receive recruits, while a battery of light artillery was gotten under way.

On Oct. 3d, Capt. N. J. T. Dana, formerly of the regular army, was commissioned as Colonel of the First, vice Gorman, who had been promoted to Brigadier General.

On Oct. 14, the Second Regiment left for Virginia, but at Pittsburgh was ordered to Louisville, Ky., and soon after went into camp at Lebanon Junction, where they remained some weeks, guarding bridges. On Oct. 29th, the Third Regiment was announced as organized, and Henry C. Lester appointed Colonel. On Nov. 16th the Third left for Kentucky, and were employed in the same service as the Second, near which they were encamped for some weeks. The Fourth Regiment was filled nearly at the same time, and Adjt. Gen. John B. Sanborn appointed Colonel. It was retained in the state, doing garrison duty, until spring.

On Oct. 19th the First Regiment participated in the action at Edwards Ferry, suffering small loss, but making a noble record for gallantry.

The state election occurred on Oct. 9th. Partisan politics were not much noticeable in this contest. Alex. Ramsey was re-elected for governor, by a vote of 16,274 over E. O. Hamlin, who had 10,448.

The three cavalry companies, commanded respectively by Capts. Von Minden, Brackett, and West, were ordered to Benton Barracks, Mo., in December, and incorporated into an Iowa troop called Curtis Horse, and subsequently Third Iowa Cavalry.

The First Battery Light Artillery, Capt. Munch, also left for St. Louis Dec. 1st, and was soon after ordered to Pittsburgh Landing. During this month a Fifth Regiment was authorized, and considerable progress made in filling it.

On January 19th, 1862, occurred the memorable battle of Mill Springs, in which our Second Regiment won a national reputation. Early on that day, the enemy, under Gen. Zollicoffer, attacked the union forces. Col. Van Cleve says in his official report: "After proceeding about half a mile, we came upon the enemy, who were posted behind a fence along the road, beyond which was an open field, broken by ravines. The enemy, opening upon us a galling fire, fought desperately, and a hand to hand fight ensued which lasted about thirty minutes. * * * The enemy gave way, leaving a large number of their dead and wounded on the field. * * * We joined in the pursuit, which continued till near sunset, when we arrived within a mile of their intrenchments, where we rested upon our arms during the night. * * * Six hundred of our regiment were in the engagement, twelve of whom were killed and thirty-three wounded." Gen. Zollicoffer himself was among the enemy slain. Private George G. Strong, of Company D, is thought to have killed Baillie Peyton, a prominent rebel officer.

The news of the victory at Mill Springs, occur-ing, as it did, during a period of depression, was like a gleam of sunshine, and our Second Regiment won bright laurels for their gallantry. For meritorious service in this engagement, Col. Van Cleve was soon after promoted to Brigadier General.

On Feb. 21th Capt. Alfred Sully was commissioned colonel of the First Regiment, vice Dana, promoted to Brigadier General.

The legislature of 1862 had many important questions under consideration, prominent among which were those measures providing for military necessities, and putting the state on a "war footing." The work of releasing the land grant railroads from the entanglements resulting from the old five-million loan, and bestowing the franchises on real capitalists, who would undertake to build in good faith, was another of the important measures of the session. The latter work was successfully accomplished in most cases. On the line of the Minnesota & Pacific, between St. Paul and St. Anthony, work was recommenced and pushed vigorously.

On April 6th the battle of Pittsburg Landing occurred. The only Minnesota troops engaged in this conflict was the First Battery, which was in the heat of the action at several points. Several cannoneers were wounded (Capt. Munch severely) two killed, and also a number of horses. The battery did splendid service, and "mowed the enemy down with canister." Capt. (formerly adjutant general) Wm. H. Acker, of the Sixteenth Regulars, was killed during this engagement.

On March 20th, the Fifth Regiment was declared organized, and the field officers were commissioned. Rudolph Borgesrode was appointed Colonel. The Second Sharpshooters, Captain Russell, which had been recruited during the winter, soon after left for Washington, arriving there April 26th. On April 21th, the Fourth Regiment, and Second Battery of Light Artillery, Captain Hotchkiss, left for Benton Barracks, and were soon pushed to the front in Mississippi. On May 13th, the Fifth Regiment also left for the same destination, excepting companies B, C, and D, who remained behind to garrison forts, and a few weeks subsequently took a conspicuous part in the Sioux war.

On May 26th, the call for a sixth regiment was made, and recruiting was commenced very actively, several skeleton companies, partially filled for the Fifth Regiment, being already in the field.

Congress, at its extra session, commencing July 4th, 1861, had authorized the issue of "legal tender" notes, which were by this date, in large circulation. The result of this was to greatly enliven business and enhance prices. While government was expending in our State but a small fraction of the enormous sums it was paying out in eastern States for materials of war, the results were unmistakably felt here. One effect was the gradual and almost complete withdrawal of coin, especially small coin, from circulation. This occasioned great inconvenience in "making change," and various devices were used to overcome the trouble. Postage stamps came into general use for fractional sums, and soon became a decided nuisance. Then many of the cities and towns, as well as business firms and banks, issued fractional "shin-plasters" as currency. The country was soon flooded with these, and it proved an intolerable nuisance. The issue by the Treasury Department, soon after, of "postage currency," somewhat relieved the dearth of small change. A steady enhancement in the price of goods, labor, the cost of living, &c., commenced from this date, an inflation which lasted for two or three years.

The material development of the State progressed during this period, notwithstanding the burdens and waste of war and the fact that over six thousand of our young men were withdrawn from productive industry. An increased area was sown. Immigration was becoming large, especially of Scandinavians. Further efforts were also made to open and extend our area of trade towards the northwest. The reported discovery of rich gold fields in the region now known as Idaho and Montana, led to the formation of a company of citizens to proceed thither overland. On May 14th, the expedition left St. Paul, and arrived safely at the diggings. Congress had, meantime, been appealed to for some protection to this emigration movement, and a small appropriation was made for this purpose, and Captain James L. Fisk appointed to organize and command any party that might wish to go over. Another expedition was organized and equipped, leaving on June 16th, and made a successful journey to the gold fields. These expeditions did much towards preparing the way for the opening and settlement of the Northwest, and were repeated in 1863 and 1864.

Another important event was the completion of the Minnesota and Pacific Railroad from St. Paul to St. Anthony, which was opened for traffic on June 28—the first line operated in our state. From that date on, railroad building was rapidly carried on, on several of the lines.

While these encouraging events were in progress in our state, her brave troops, in Virginia and Mississippi, were contending against great odds. The Fourth and Fifth Regiments and the Second Battery, whose departure for "Dixie" was noted a few lines back, had been pushed rapidly to the front, and, being a part of the "Army of the Mississippi," were soon face to face with the enemy, in the great Corinth campaign. On May 28th the Fifth Regiment had a sharp action with the enemy, in which several were killed, and a number wounded, and won much praise for gallantry. On July 12th, near Murfreesboro, Tenn., the Third Regiment was attacked by a greatly superior force, and after a brave resistance, losing twelve men, its ammunition became exhausted, and it was compelled to surrender. The men were paroled a few weeks later.

Meantime the First Regiment had taken an active part in a campaign of great danger and hardship. It had remained in its winter quarters, near Edward's Ferry, until March, when (attached to Sedgwick's Division) it proceeded to Winchester, from whence they were ordered to join the Army of the Potomac near Fortress Monroe. In April they took part in the siege of Yorktown. From thence they participated in McClellan's great Richmond campaign, and the "seven days fight." At Seven Pines, or Fair Oaks, on May 31st and June 1st; at Peach Orchard, June 29th; Savage's Station, June 29th; Glendale and White Oak Swamp, June 30th; Nelson's Farm, June 30th; Malvern Hills, July 1st, the brave First took an active part, and suffered severe losses, with great hardship and continual fighting. In all these engagements, it lost ninety men. At the Battle of Fair Oaks, the Second Sharp-Shooters was united with the First Regiment, and continued with them during the rest of the campaign.

The disastrous termination of the operations by McClellan, and the heavy losses of the army, produced a feeling of great discouragement and doubt throughout the North. On July 2, the president called for 300,000 more troops. Still this heavy draft was met cheerfully, and in this State vigorous steps were taken to fill our quota. On July 24th, a rousing war meeting was held at the Capital, which lighted anew the fires of patriotism, roused the despondent, and infused new hopes into all. Recruiting commenced vigorously. But scarcely was the work under way, when the call of August 4th, for 300,000 more troops, was issued. It now became evident that special exertions would be needed to fill our quota by the 18th, at which time the Secretary of War had ordered a draft to be made, if not filled. Public meetings were held at various places, and large sums of money were subscribed by individuals, in addition to local bounties, to stimulate enlistments. Great excitement prevailed throughout the State for some days—fully equal to the patriotic war spirit following the fall of Sumpter, and business seemed to be almost suspended; in fact, in many instances, actually was, as the entire employees of many establishments enlisted. To some extent, martial law was enforced in the State. The Adjutant General, in a published proclamation, forbade citizens (males of military age) from leaving the State without a pass from him, nor were they allowed to go from one county to another without a permit from the Sheriff. The Sixth Regiment, which was partially filled when the call of July 2d was issued, was quickly filled and organized. A seventh regiment was authorized on August 5th. On August 10th the eighth was called for; on August 13th, the ninth; and soon after even a tenth. Recruiting for the old regiments was also brisk. Four companies were received at Fort Snelling in one day. The Press of August 19th, says: "On Sunday and yesterday, large bodies of men were continually pouring in." Over three thousand men were then at the fort. The work of receiving, mustering in, clothing and equipping these troops, laid on the authorities a heavy task.

THE SIOUX MASSACRE.

The Sioux Massacre.—The Events Which Probably led to It.—Discontent of the Indians.—The Murders at Acton.—Commencement of the Carnage at Red Wood.—Awful Scenes.—Narrow Escape of Whites.—The Battle of Red Wood Ferry.—Fiendish Cruelties of the Savages.—Panic and Flight of the Settlers.—Condition of Affairs at Fort Ridgely.—The Alarm Reaches St. Peter.—Reinforcements Set Out from There.—The first Attack on New Ulm.—The Savages Repulsed.—They Besiege Fort Ridgely.—But Fail to Capture It.—And Again Fall on New Ulm.—Desperate Fighting.—The Town Nearly Burned Down.—The Savages Withdraw, Unsuccessful.—The Town Evacuated.—End of the first "Week of Blood."—Its Results to the State.

While these exciting events were occurring, and attracting the attention of our citizens, a fearful storm was gathering in an unexpected quarter, and soon burst upon our state with appalling fury. The Sioux Indians, of whom several thousand were living on reservations in the western portions of Minnesota, had been for several weeks (i. e. since about June 14th) collected at the Yellow Medicine agency, to receive their annual payment. This would have been made to them by the proper officer, at that time and place, promptly, had not the necessities of the government just at that juncture, prevented the prompt transmission of the $70,000 in gold coin, which was to pay the Indians their annuities. As soon as it could be got ready, it was sent, and hurried forward by special messengers, night and day, arriving just one day too late. Meantime the Indians were waiting impatiently for their money, and for the provisions and other supplies which were to be given them when the payment was made. They were almost destitute of food, and some were really suffering from hunger. In this discontented condition, they were ready to listen to bad counsel. Malicious parties had whispered to them that the war had destroyed most of the young men of the whites; that only old men and boys were left; and if so disposed they could repossess themselves of the land; that they were to be cheated out of their money by the traders, whom they had before accused of defrauding them; and other wrongs, real or fancied, were recited to inflame them. As was usual, a small detachment of troops had been sent to the agency when the Indians first assembled, to preserve order. This consisted of fifty men from Fort Ridgely, under Capt. Jno. S. Marsh, and fifty from Fort Ripley, commanded by Lieut. T. J. Sheehan. Yet, notwithstanding the presence of these soldiers, guarding the warehouses, on Aug. 4th, several hundred Indians attacked and broke into one of the buildings, and took about one hundred sacks of flour before they could be stopped. The missionaries, with Major Galbraith, the agent, at length quieted this outbreak. The agent issued some ammunition and goods to them, and persuaded them to disperse, and he would send them word when the money was ready for them. To this they appeared to agree, and apparently left the agency and went to their hunting-grounds. It was now supposed that the trouble was over, and the troops were allowed, on Aug. 16th, to depart for their posts. But it was only the calm before the storm. All this time bad blood was brewing, and the storm gathering, unnoticed, or at least unheeded by the whites. Only a spark was needed to explode this magazine of savage fury, and that, at length came. There is good evidence to believe that during this interval the Indians were holding councils and "soldier's lodges," and had concluded that as the forts were manned by but a handful of soldiers, it would be a good time to rise and sweep away the white race from their old hunting-grounds.

On Sunday, Aug. 17, a party of four Indians, belonging to a band noted for insubordination, were in the neighborhood of Acton, Meeker County, where they had been for several days hunting. They were angry and quarrelsome. They came to the house of a Mr. Howard Baker, where they found him and his wife, and a Mr. Webster and wife. Mr. Robinson Jones and wife and a Miss Wilson, neighbors, came in soon after. The Indians had previously had a quarrel with Jones, which was now renewed. They then proposed shooting at a mark with Baker and Jones, which was done. After discharging their guns, the Indians at once reloaded, and commenced firing on the whites. Jones and his wife, and Baker and Webster were killed, and Miss Wilson, Mrs. Baker and child, and Mrs. Webster, were unhurt. The four Indian murderers then stole horses in the neighborhood, and rode rapidly, during the night, to the Indian village near the agency, where they told what they had done, and urged that, as blood had been spilt, and they would suffer the penalty, they must all unite and exterminate the whites. The other Indians then armed themselves, and at sunrise, Aug. 18, the work of the death commenced, at the Lower Sioux Agency, near Red Wood. It is strongly asserted by other writers, who give good reasons for the belief, that the Indians collected at the Agency had all ready demanded on the massacre, and commenced it on the 18th, without knowing of the events at Aton.

The first victim to this hellish plot was James W. Lynde, a clerk in the trading house of Nathan Myrick. He was a man of fine attainments, and had written a work on the History and Religion of the Dakotas, which was just ready for publication. Three other persons were killed at the same store. At Forbes' trading house, near by, George H. Spencer, the clerk, was badly wounded, when his life was saved by the interposition of a friendly Indian, named Chaska, who protected him until he recovered. Other white persons in and near the houses at the agency, were either killed or wounded, within a few minutes. At this point the Indians ceased their carnage, in order to plunder the stores and government warehouses, and this delay enabled Rev. S. D. Hinman and some other whites, to escape to Fort Ridgely, spreading the alarm as they went.

After a brief time spent by the savages in robbing the stores, they continued their work of carnage in every direction. They were soon joined by the warriors of the other bands, and, to the number of two or three hundred, spread through the settlements for several miles up and down the river, murdering all the whites whom they could find, excepting a few young women, whom they took captive, and in many instances burning the houses of the settlers.

Meantime, the whites at the upper, or Yellow Medicine Agency, some thirty miles distant, were in ignorance of these dreadful scenes, and of the danger which threatened them. It was not until nearly night when John Other-Day, a Christian Indian, brought them the dreadful news, and warned them to save their lives. The whites, sixty-two in number, at once took refuge in a warehouse; but flight seemed the only safe course, and before daylight the next morning, they were on their way across the prairies towards Henderson, the men on foot, and the women and children, with S. B. Garvie, who had escaped from his warehouse, after being badly wounded, in wagons. The noble Other-Day piloted them truly and skillfully. This party, after great hardships, arrived safely at the settlements on the Minnesota river, and thence to St. Paul, though Mr. Garvie died on the way. The two missionaries, Messrs. Williamson and Riggs, also escaped, with their families, after suffering much hardship.

On Monday morning, August 18th, about three hours after the first outbreak at Red Wood agency, a messenger from that place arrived at Fort Ridgely, twelve miles distant, with the startling news. Captain Marsh, Company B, Fifth Regiment, then in command, at once dispatched a courier to Lieutenant Sheehan, Company C, Fifth Regiment, who, with his detachment, had left the post the morning previous on his return to Fort Ripley, and also to Major Galbraith, who had left at the same time for St. Peter, with about fifty recruits, called the "Renville Rangers," en-route for Fort Snelling, urging them to return at once. Captain Marsh at once left for the scene of carnage, with forty-four men on foot. After a forced march, he arrived about 2 o'clock p. m. at the ferry opposite the Agency, near which place they found nine dead bodies. They were met here by Rev. Mr. Hinman, on his way to the fort, who cautioned Capt. Marsh against an ambuscade, and warned him to return, as the Indians greatly outnumbered his force. Captain Marsh, who was a very brave but very rash man, would not listen to the advice, declaring that he could "whip all the Indians," or something to that effect. Arriving at the ferry, his men were drawn up on the bank, in plain sight, when three or four hundred Indians concealed in the thickets near by, poured a volley into them. Nearly half of his men fell dead or mortally wounded at the first fire, some of them pierced with twenty bullets, while several others were wounded, but managed ultimately to escape; some of them not reaching the fort for three days. The survivors of this sudden attack (Captain Marsh being himself uninjured) fell back from the ferry towards the fort, keeping up a running fight amidst the thick timber on the river bottom, but against terrible odds.

Rushing up to the fallen soldiers, the savages tomahawked those still living, and tore the scalps from most of them, inflicting also nameless brutalities on their corpses. All the fine Springfield muskets carried by the dead, and their ammunition, fell into the hands of the redskins, and were subsequently used by them, with deadly effect, at the sieges of Fort Ridgely and New Ulm, and the battle of Birch Coolie. The remains of the fallen heroes were ultimately interred at Fort Ridgely, and the legislature, some years subsequently, caused a fine monument to be erected there in honor of their bravery.

For some time a hot battle raged in the forest, Capt. Marsh and his men retreating towards the fort, contesting the ground, inch by inch. Finding that his men were falling fast, and that the enemy was gathering in force ahead of him, so as to cut him off, he determined to cross the river, so as to gain the open prairie on that side, and reach the fort, if possible. He had now but thirteen men left. At their head he attempted to wade the river, but was drowned while so doing. His men got over in safety, and made their way to the fort about dark. Out of the forty-four who had left it that morning, twenty-four were dead. Thus ended the Battle of Redwood Ferry, the first engagement of the war. The Indians, it is thought, lost only one or two warriors.

Flushed with this easy victory in their first encounter with our troops, the Indians now considered that the way was clear for their bloody war of extermination. They scattered in every direction, carrying death and torture to the homes of all the settlers within reach. For several days the work of carnage was awful. No pen can describe the horrors of that bloody week. So sudden and unexpected was the outbreak, and so insidious and skulking the mode of warfare of the savages, that the inhabitants were overtaken at their various pursuits and butchered in cold blood, without any chance of flight or resistance. Most of them were European immigrants who had recently settled on the frontier, and were quite unacquainted with savage warfare and treachery. But few of them possessed effective fire-arms, or weapons of any kind, indeed, and even if they had these, so sudden and stealthy was the onset, that resistance would have been unavailing. The savages generally went about on these raids in squads of eight or ten, well armed. In many instances the treacherous devils would advance boldly and with friendly demeanor into houses with whose owners they were acquainted, as if to ask for food, (as was their custom, for the settlers had always freely supplied them); when all at once they would shoot down or tomahawk the unsuspecting inmates, perhaps the very persons who had many times fed them when hungry. In a few instances children, and sometimes adults, fled unobserved while this work of death was going on, and escaped a like fate by skulking in the grass or bushes, from whence they were often compelled to witness the cruel tortures practiced on the other members of their family, or flee for life with the death shrieks of the suffering victims ringing in their ears. Some of those who escaped thus, were rescued many days subsequently, after enduring incredible hardships, skulking by day around deserted houses, endeavoring to find food, and wandering by night through the trackless waste, towards the settlements. Delicate women, carrying or leading infant children, thus traveled scores of miles to some place of safety, sometimes wounded and sick and almost naked. Many perished from hunger, exposure or wounds. Others lived, to suffer for years from their injuries. There were literally hundreds of such incidents as the above, and a full narrative of these adventures and escapes would fill volumes. No record can ever be made of them, and the fate of many will never be known until the last day.

The cruel barbarities practiced by the savages on their victims, was another sickening feature of the massacre, and its bare recital makes one shudder. All the fiendish cruelties that their savage nature and pent up hatred of the pale faces could suggest, they wreaked on their victims, a people who had always been their friends and benefactors. The wounded and dying were scalped or tomakawked out of all semblance of humanity. The bowels of many were gashed open, and their hands and feet, or other members, cut off and thrust into them. Children were slashed with knives, eyes gonged out, ears or hands cut off, or skulls smashed with war clubs. Some of these survived even such awful wounds. Babies were thrust living into stove ovens, and there left, to roast to death. Pregnant women were ripped open, and their unborn babes torn away, and thrown into their face, or nailed to a door or tree, for their dying gaze to witness. But few women, comparatively, were killed outright. Instant death would have been a more merciful fate than they were reserved for. Frequently delicate young maidens were tied, or held by the fiends, and repeatedly outraged by the band of captors, some actually dying in the hands of their tormentors, or if they survived, led into a captivity of horrors. But let us draw a veil over these atrocities.

After the murder of the inmates of a house, pillage was the next step, and the torch was then generally applied to it, oftentimes the wounded victims, unable to escape, being burned to death. Day after day the columns of smoke rising here and there showed where the various bands of demons were plying their work of destruction, while night after night the sky along the frontier was lurid with the light of burning homes. Two or three thousand dwellings were thus destroyed, in addition to three entire towns. Cattle were shot from mere wantonness, and others left to starve, with no one to attend them. Horses were saved for the use of the marauders, hundreds of them being stolen, and in many instances the savages were observed riding to and fro in fine buggies and carriages.

As the houses of the settlers were generally isolated from each other, the news of the outbreak could not reach the more remote and scattered, in season to save them. Along the main roads leading to the settlements, the alarm was spread by fugitives, after a day or two, and this fact enabled thousands to save their lives who would otherwise have fallen. Abandoning houses, crops, cattle—everything, hastily seizing some food and clothing, and harnessing their teams, they fled towards New Ulm, Fort Ridgely, St. Peter, Mankato, Henderson, and other towns along the river. Some even pressed on to St. Paul. Soon the roads were literally crowded with a panic-stricken cavalcade, on foot, on horseback, in all sorts of vehicles, hurrying along with blanched faces and nervous trepidation. Many were pursued and shot at (some killed, even) while flying, and all had horrid stories to relate. Lieut. Gov. Donnelly, on Aug. 26, wrote from St. Peter: "You can hardly conceive the panic existing along the valley. In Belle Plaine I found 600 people crowded in. In this place there are between 3,000 and 4,000 refugees. On the road between New Ulm and Mankato were over 2,000. Mankato is also crowded. * * * Their property in the mean time abandoned and going to ruin." The condition of these throngs of fugitives, crowded into the small towns, was pitiable.

The handful of men who survived the massacre at Redwood Ferry, and made their way back to Fort Ridgely, found that post already crowded with panic-stricken fugitives from the surrounding country. All night these poor settlers arrived from every direction, many of them wounded, having left portions of their families murdered, and their homes in flames. In every direction, all night long, the sky was reddened with the light of burning houses. It was a night of terror and despondency. About ten o'clock on Tuesday morning, the inmates were gladdened with the return of Lieutenant Sheehan and his command, who, on being overtaken the evening before by the messenger sent out to recall them, had made a forced march of sixteen hours. Lieutenant Sheehan at once took command of the post, and in connection with Sergeant John Jones, of the regular army, post ordinance sergeant, took effective measures to put the fort in a defensible condition. All the civilians who were fit for duty, were armed, or put on guard, and even the women were employed making cartridges, running bullets, &c. No attack was made that day, however, although Indians were seen watching the fort. [The warriors were busy attacking New Ulm, as will be seen a little farther on.] About noon on Monday, the messengers and guard in charge of the $70,000 in gold, reached Fort Ridgely, and remained there during the siege.

Let us now follow Mr. J. C. Dickinson, of Lower Agency, the messenger sent from Redwood to recall Maj. Galbraith from St. Peter. Maj. G., so well satisfied was he with the loyal promises of the Indians, had left the agency with some volunteers for Fort Snelling. His family were at Yellow Medicine, and escaped from that place. He, with the "Renville Rangers," Lieut. O'Gorman, had arrived at St. Peter Monday evening, when Mr. Dickinson reached there, with the startling news. It was at first discredited, but he at once made preparations to return, with the Rangers, and a company of volunteer citizens. He immediately dispatched Wm. H. Shelley, of St. Paul, who was with him, with a message to Gov. Ramsey, asking military aid. Shelley rode at full speed all night, and reached St. Paul, nearly one hundred miles distant, at 10 o'clock p. m. Tuesday, spreading the news as he passed down the valley. Gov. Ramsey at once took steps to send troops to the scene of blood. But of this anon.

Monday night was spent by the soldiers and citizens at St. Peter in organizing companies, searching for arms, making cartridges, etc. Early on Tuesday morning, the bells were rung and the inhabitants called together. Great excitement prevailed, but a company was at once organized. Hon. Chas. E. Flandrau, associate justice of the Supreme Court, was elected captain, and W. B. Dodd, first lieutenant. Teams, wagons, camp equipage, etc., were hastily collected.

Major Galbraith, with the Renville Rangers, and others who accompanied them, armed as well as could be possible, left St. Peter at 6 A. M., and after a hard march, reached Fort Ridgely (Forty-five miles distant) the same evening. Just as they arrived at the fort, a furious thunder-gust came up. In the darkness and rain they got into the fort safely, although hundreds of Indians were watching it, and must have seen them but for the storm. There were now 250 fencible men in the fort, and the crowd of fugitives hourly increasing. These were cared for as well as possible, the hospital being full of wounded.

Meantime a company of sixteen horsemen left St. Peter (Tuesday) for the aid of New Ulm, which was reported by fugitives to be in great danger. At one o'clock the same day, Hon. Chas. E. Flandrau left for the same place with 100 well armed men, on foot. Let us now give some account of the SIEGE OF NEW ULM.

This town was on the south bank of the Minnesota River, thirty miles, by land, from St. Peter, and eighteen miles below Fort Ridgely. It contained about 1,500 inhabitants, mostly Germans. On Monday morning, Aug. 18th, a party of citizens left New Ulm to recruit for volunteers. When some seven or eight miles west of new Ulm, they found several dead bodies lying in the road. Convinced that the Indians had risen, they retraced their steps, but on their way back were fired on, and several of the party killed. The rest fled to town and gave the alarm. At the same time, fugitives came in from other directions, near the town, all telling horrid tales of butchery. This created a great panic in the town, and many fled to St. Peter. All that day and night, and next day, fugitives continued pouring into the place. The leading men of the town at once took steps to organize for defence. Arms were collected, barricades erected, sentinels posted, and everything done which could be, to repel an attack. These precautions were taken none too soon. About four o'clock on Tuesday, a party of mounted Indians appeared on the prairie above the town, and dismounting, advanced on the place. The few men who had arms, at once attacked them, but most of the people gathered into the houses in the center of the town, panic stricken. Fortunately, soon after the attack commenced, the fifteen horsemen from St. Peter arrived, and at once began a vigorous defence. The savages burned several buildings on the west edge of the town, and kept up a hot fire on the people within the barricade. The St. Peter cavalry soon made such a brave advance on the Indians, that they were compelled to retire, about dark, several having been killed. During the engagement, the whites lost several, killed and wounded, also. About nine o'clock, in the midst of a furious thunder-storm, Judge Flandrau, with over one hundred men, reached the town, and were warmly welcomed. Vigorous efforts to organize for defence were at once made. Judge Flaudrau was chosen commander-in-chief, Capt. Dodd, provost marshal, &c. Small reinforcements continued to arrive from Mankato and other points, and by Thursday, 325 armed men were guarding the town. Wednesday passed without any alarms, and scouting parties were sent out in various directions to bury the dead, of which a number were found. Let us now glance at the condition of things

AT FORT RIDGELY.

About three o'clock on Wednesday, the 20th, the first attack was made on this post, probably by the same force who had been at New Ulm the evening previous. It is thought five hundred Indians were engaged in it. Concealing themselves in the wooded ravines near the post, the savages suddenly advanced on it with horrid yells and a volley of balls. The suddenness of the onset almost threw the garrison off their guard, and two of the soldiers were killed at the first fire. The men speedily rallied, however, and fought bravely. Sergeant Jones was quickly at his guns, two 6-pounders and one 24-pounder, but on attempting to fire, they would not go off. On drawing the charges, he found them stuffed with rags! Some treacherous half-breeds had done this dastardly act, and then deserted to the enemy. Assisted by a citizen, J. C. Whipple, who had served in the Mexican war, and Sergt. McGrew, of Company C, he soon poured several rounds of canister and shell into the thickets, amongst the foe, killing and wounding a number. The savages then succeeded in crawling up behind some old outbuildings and hay-stacks, from which they poured furious volleys into the fort. Sergt. Jones soon set these on fire with shells, and drove the savages off. At dusk the light of this fire, and the noise of the artillery, impressed the people at New Ulm and other places in the vicinity with the belief that the fort had fallen. But when night closed down, the savages withdrew. The garrison remained on arms all night. One great danger was the dryness of the roofs which could have been ignited with "fire-arrows." A close watch was kept, and Providence favored the beleaguered force, for late at night a heavy rain-storm commenced falling, and continued until next day, entirely averting this danger. The large stables of the fort, about thirty rods distant, were perfectly filled with government mules, and horses brought in by the fugitives. These the Indians succeeded in getting out and stampeding.

The next morning (Thursday) the attack was renewed about 9 o'clock, and lasted hotly for an hour, when the savages retreated, but again attacked the fort about 6 p. m., when another engagement took place, and lasted about an hour. But their efforts to capture the fort were useless. They found it too well defended. It could have been taken by charging into it, but this Indians are afraid to do. Meantime the garrison was becoming worn out with loss of sleep and continual labor and fighting. Nearly five hundred refugees were crowded into its small buildings, where they were compelled to lie on the floor to avoid the bullets of the foe, which swept like a hail-storm through the windows. To add to the trouble, many were becoming sick, and the stores both of ammunition and provisions, and even water, were running low.

That night, as subsequent evidence revealed, Little Crow and his forces returned to the Lower Agency, where he found the upper Indians, whom he had sent for, arrived. This increased his force to 150 warriors. Large numbers were also marauding among the settlements, as far east as Forest City and as far south as Lake Shetek. Confident that with this large force he could take both Fort Ridgely and New Ulm, he now moved on the former post.

During the night, however, the garrison had strengthened its weak points with great skill and success. Earthworks had been thrown up, barricades erected, out of cordwood, sacks of grain, etc., and other defenses provided, while the cannon were stationed so as to command the most exposed points, and the riflemen posted where they could do the greatest execution. About noon the Indians appeared in greater numbers than on either previous attack, and commenced an assault so determined and furious, it seemed as if they were confident that this time the post must fall. But as they advanced, yelling like demons, the gunners sent a storm of grape and canister amongst them, while the riflemen poured volley after volley into them, and the savages retreated from this hot fire. They soon rallied and took possession of the stables and other outbuildings near the fort, and kept up a terrible fire from them. A perfect storm of balls poured into the frame buildings in the fort, sometimes passing clear through them. Several soldiers were hit, and some civilians (one being killed), though all the non-combatants kept well concealed. Finally Sergt. Jones was compelled to fire the outbuildings with shells, and drive the savages out. Soon the flames and black smoke rolled up, and, with the yells of the Indians, the rattle of small arms, and the thunder of the cannon, made an exciting scene. For five hours the battle raged hotly. Little Crow was heard repeatedly ordering his warriors to charge into the fort, and several times they gathered for that purpose and started, but Sergt. Jones would send a storm of shell or cannister among them, and drive them back. It is thought numbers of them were killed in this attack.

About dark their fire ceased, and the night was passed in quiet, but there were few slept around the post except the non-combatants. All the men were under arms all night, being five nights of weary vigil and sleeplessness. The garrison were well nigh worn out, and expected another day of hard fighting. The sun rose, but no signs of Indians. Work was continued on the fortifications, which were greatly strengthened. While thus engaged, a large body of mounted Indians (said by Louis Robert, who counted them, to number nearly 1,000) were seen coming down from the Lower Agency on the opposite side of the river. They did not, however, cross to the Fort Ridgely side, but kept on towards New Ulm. It now became evident that the latter place was their objective point, and the garrison breathed freer. Still, they knew not what a day might bring forth, and kept up their working and watching. Let us now return to and see how that beleagured town fared. After the battle of Tuesday, before described, no attack had been made on the town, though small parties of Indians, doubtless scouts, were once or twice seen near the place. This interval of quiet was spent in erecting barricades, and other works of defence, and in taking such steps as seemed necessary, in case of another attack.

About ten o'clock A. M. on Saturday, the 23d, the Indians (mounted) appeared in great force on the prairie above town, and our forces were at once posted on the open ground in that direction. The Indians first approached slowly, but when about a mile from our line, increased their speed, and gradually spread out their front, like a fan, until it covered our whole line. On they came at full speed, yelling like demons. When about double rifle-shot off, Col. Flandrau's men, inexperienced in such warfare, fell back on the town, the Indians firing on them. The whites committed the error of passing the outermost buildings, and not occupying them, an error the savages soon took advantage of, as they at once took possession of them, and opened a furious fire on our men. By the exertions of Col. Flandrau, the latter soon rallied, and commenced a vigorous fire from every protected spot, each doing duty as best he could, "on his own hook." They soon recovered their coolness, and fought bravely. The enemy, from their great numbers, were able to surround the town, and soon poured into it a fire from every direction. The battle became furious and general.

The Indians also succeeded in getting possession of the houses on the bluff, which gave them a great advantage, commanding, as it did, the interior of the town below, but about twenty men of the Le Sueur company had occupied the windmill, a high building in that locality, and kept up such a hot fire, the Indians could do but little execution on that side. They took possession of the lower end of the city, however, and, the wind being from that direction, fired the houses one by one, advancing thus towards the center of the city, concealing themselves behind the smoke. The greatest danger seemed now to be from this direction, and a strong force of the best marksmen was sent to resist the advance. They fought bravely, and checked the enemy considerably. The battle here was very hot for several hours. About three o'clock the enemy concentrated a force on the river side, as if preparing for a grand assault. A detachment was sent to meet it. The Indians came on at full speed, but our men stood firm, and sent such volleys among them, that they broke and retreated, losing several. Two of our best marksmen, however, fell at the same time.

The battle raged furiously and without intermission until dark. Many of our men were wounded, several killed. All had fought nobly, some performing feats of great daring. The enemy had left ten dead on the field, besides many killed and wounded carried off, and had gained, so far, no great advantage; but if the attack continued much longer, the worst result was feared. Night closed on the weary defenders, full of doubt and anxiety.

A consultation was now held among the leading men and those in command, as to the "situation." One thing that seemed necessary, was to contract the lines of defence toward the center of the town so that a less number could more readily defend any point. To do this it was voted that all buildings, except a few in the center of the town, must be burned. To this the inhabitants consented, and themselves applied the torch to about forty buildings. One brick house was left, and loopholed for defence. Including those burned by the savages, 190 houses in all were now in ashes. Only about twenty-five were still standing. A range of rifle-pits were now dug in front of the barricade, and all the defences strengthened.

When morning dawned (Sunday, August 24th), the savages feebly renewed their attack, but they soon saw they were foiled. In order to get near enough to the barricade or buildings to do any execution, they must pass over an open space right in the face of the defenders' rifles, where there was not even a bunch of grass to skulk behind. They kept up a fire at long range for three or four hours, but as it made no impression they ceased the attack about noon, and left in the direction of Lower Agency. They were seen from Fort Ridgely that afternoon, passing up the river with a long train of wagons, probably loaded with their plunder, and many horses and cattle stolen from the settlers. Neither Fort Ridgely nor New Ulm were again attacked. The brave resistance of the whites had balked the red demons at both places. Had either of those posts fallen, hundreds of women and children, and even of the armed men, would have been massacred. But few would have escaped, and there is no doubt but that the victorious savages would have pressed on and taken both St. Peter and Mankato.

In the attack on New Ulm, ten whites were killed and about fifty wounded. The few buildings left standing in the place, were almost filled with the dead and wounded, and with sick people; for disease had by this time commenced to do its work. The provisions were nearly exhausted, and it seemed impossible to hold the place any longer. There were no houses adequate to shelter the two thousand people now crowded within the fortifications. Hundreds had been for several days huddled in cellars and other unsuitable places. On Sunday afternoon, one hundred and fifty more volunteers from St. Peter and vicinity, arrived, in command of E. St. Julien Cox, well armed and equipped. A council of war was held, and it was resolved to evacuate the town. Accordingly, on Monday, August 25th, every inhabitant, some two thousand in number, with a train of one hundred and fifty-three wagons bearing the sick, wounded and feeble, commenced the march to Mankato. "It was a melancholy spectacle (says Colonel Flandrau, in his report) to see two thousand people, who a week before had been prosperous and happy, reduced to utter beggary, starting on a journey of thirty miles through a hostile country." The volunteer troops guarded the train through safely.

One week had now elapsed since the cruel massacre began. It was a "week of blood." Over seven hundred persons had been murdered (many think the number exceeds one thousand); two hundred had been taken captive; nearly two thousand houses burned; thousands of horses and cattle stolen, and a fertile region some two hundred miles long and one hundred wide, laid waste and depopulated. Eighteen counties were ravaged, thirty thousand people (one-tenth of the population of the State) homeless, their crops and property going to ruin. Claims were subsequently filed by nearly three thousand persons, who lost property valued at $2,500,000. But this does not represent the total loss to our State, while no sum can represent the sorrow and suffering caused by the massacre.

While these exciting events were occurring along the frontier, the State authorities had been acting with great energy and promptness in organizing and equipping a military force to proceed against the savages. The suddenness of the outbreak found them totally unprepared for any such emergency. The Sixth Regiment was in barracks at Fort Snelling, nearly full and partially organized, but its field officers had not yet been appointed, nor had the men received their arms. The Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth Regiments were also partially recruited but not mustered in. Skeleton companies were at Fort Snelling, but none had been organized, and the men were undisciplined. Large numbers had been let off on furlough, to complete harvesting their crops. All the arms due the State had been drawn and issued to the old regiments. The general government was so hard pushed that even blankets and tents could not be furnished to the new troops.

Immediately on receiving the news, Governor Ramsey appointed Hon. H. H. Sibley, of Mendota, to the command of such forces at Fort Snelling as the commandant there, Colonel B. F. Smith, could organize on the instant. Colonel Sibley was admirably qualified for such a responsible duty. His long and intimate acquaintance with the Indian character and habits, and especially with the bands now in rebellion, together with his knowledge of military matters, and his familiarity with the topography of the country, enabled him to either meet the savages in the field successfully, or to treat with them to advantage.

Four companies of troops, about three hundred in all, armed with Belgian rifles and 19,000 cartridges, were furnished to him; and they at once started on a small steamer for Shakopee, arriving there on the 20th. From thence they marched to St. Peter. On the 21st, the six remaining companies of the Sixth Regiment were filled by consolidation and transfers, and sent forward as rapidly as possible. On the 21st, Governor Ramsey issued a proclamation, reciting the news of the outbreak, and calling on such citizens as had horses and arms, to start at once and join the expedition moving up the river. Considerable numbers did so. Companies of horsemen were formed in St. Paul, and several other places, and rode forward night and day. Small companies of infantry also organized in various towns in the central and eastern portion of the State, and made forced marches to the relief of the frontier. By the end of the first "week of blood" (a very short period, considering how unprepared the State was for such a war) several thousand armed men were pressing forward on different routes to meet and drive back the savages. These companies were mostly distributed at stockades and garrisoned towns along the frontier, where they remained for several weeks, until the worst danger was over. On September 9th, Governor Ramsey's message reports, there were twenty-two militia companies, with 2800 men under arms, and volunteer troops enough to make 5500 men in all.

On Friday, the 22d, Col. Sibley arrived at St. Peter, and remained there some three days, getting his troops in hand and properly armed. The latter was a work of difficulty. Most of the Sixth Regiment were armed with Belgian rifles, many of them almost worthless, and none of them very reliable. But a small part of the cartridges furnished were of the right calibre, and much time was lost "swedging" bullets. Gov. Ramsey had, on the 20th, telegraphed to the governor of Wisconsin to "borrow" 100,000 cartridges. They were promptly sent, and reached Col. Sibley at Fort Ridgely. Provisions had to be collected, and transportation secured. Meantime the people of the State were nervous with anxiety, and blamed the commander and State authorities for not throwing his half-armed and unorganized troops at once on the several hundred well armed and desperate savages at New Ulm or Fort Ridgely. Had this been done, a "Custer massacre" would have resulted, and another rout and panic ensued, many fold worse than that of the week previous.

By the 24th, nine companies of the sixth regiment (of which Wm. Crooks had just been appointed colonel) were concentrated at St. Peter. There were also some three hundred mounted men, and several companies of militia infantry. On the morning of August 26th, Col. Sibley, with his entire force, about 1400 men, commenced the march to Fort Ridgely. Col. McPhaill, with one hundred and eighty mounted men, was sent on in advance. These arrived at the Fort at dark, to the great joy of its beleaguered inmates. The main force arrived on August 28th. No Indians were encountered on the way. The expedition was halted at this post for several days, until necessary reinforcements and ammunition (which he called for from the executive) should arrive, and enable him to pursue and successfully act against the Indians, who had retreated some distance up the river, where it was reported they had a number of prisoners.

On August 25th, Col. B. F. Smith was ordered to organize a force of 1000 men, out of detachments of the seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth regiments, at Fort Snelling, and dispatch said force at once to join Col. Sibley. This force was put under command of Lt. Col. Wm. R. Marshall, of the seventh regiment, and moved forward as soon as it could be properly equipped, reaching the expedition on September 1st.

The difficulty of securing transportation for these expeditions, was a serious drawback to celerity of movements. Finally, a general order was issued by the adjutant general authorizing the commanding officers of detachments in actual service, to seize and impress citizens teams whenever needed. This was done, and enough transportation secured in that way, resulting in many cases of individual hardship, but this is one of the inexorable "necessities of war." Another great need which bothered the state authorities, was the scarcity of serviceable arms.

Good rifles were few. Many of the troops were very poorly armed, and even of these inferior guns, enough could not be had. The general government was telegraphed to, but could supply none, in season to do any good. The authorities then seized all the gun-shops in the states and confiscated their serviceable rifles and muskets, and ammunition. All the powder and lead in the hands of dealers everywhere was seized, yielding 3,175 pounds of powder and 1,200 pounds of lead. Even this was insufficient. A lead pipe, some 3,000 feet long, which had been laid in one of the streets of St. Paul, but was just then unused, was dug up and melted into bullets. A force of young women were working day and night making cartridges. Finally, however, all the troops were well supplied and equipped, and no further trouble was felt. It must be remembered that there were then no railroads in the state (except one ten-mile section between St. Paul and Minneapolis,) and no telegraph but one from St. Paul to La Crosse. All military messages and dispatches to the frontier, had to be sent by special couriers.

DANGER OF A CHIPPEWA WAR.

Meantime, a new danger threatened the people of the state. In addition to the powerful Sioux nation, there were in Minnesota the Winnebagoes, with 400 warriors, and in the northern half of the state, the Chippewas, who could muster 2,500 or 3,000 warriors. There were good grounds for believing that these tribes had been in consultation with the Sioux, and that if the latter were successful they would also rise. It has been proved that several Winnebagoes participated in the earlier murders near the Upper and Lower Agencies, while on the same day as the outbreak at Redwood, the Chippewas commenced plundering their agency at Crow Wing on the Upper Mississippi, and assembling armed warriors. They acted very turbulent and defiant, and an outbreak between them and the whites was immiment. Indeed, on one occasion, shots were actually exchanged. The possibility of an outbreak by them so weighed on the mind of Maj. L. C. Walker, their agent, that he committed suicide near Monticello, on Aug. 23d. Companies of cavalry were authorized by the state authorities to protect the country north of St. Paul, and performed patrol duty for some days. Had the Chippewas risen also, nearly the whole state would have been laid waste. Even the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis, etc., would have been captured, as there were not arms in those places enough to have defended them. A company of Home Guards was organized in St. Paul as a precautionary measure. For some days the situation was very critical, and full of danger. Finally, Hon. Wm. P. Dole, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Hon. H. M. Rice, Major E. A. C. Hatch, Clark W. Thompson, and other men who had influence with the Ojibways, calmed them down, and averted what might have proved an awful disaster.

THE WAR IN MEEKER, KANDIYOHI AND STEARNS COUNTIES.

The counties along the Minnesota River were not the only ones ravaged by the red devils during that week of blood. McLeod, Monongalia, Kandiyohi, Stearns, Meeker, Otter Tail, Douglas, Sibley, etc., were all overrun in whole or in part, and the inhabitants either butchered or driven away. The first blood of the outbreak had been shed at Acton, Meeker county. A messenger was sent post haste by the citizens there to inform Gov. Ramsey. He arrived at the capitol just at the same time that the courier from St. Peter bore the news from Redwood. The Governor issued to Capt. Geo. C. Whitcomb, of Forest City, seventy-five guns and a small amount of ammunition, to enable them to make a stand. Capt. W. returned with these at once, via Hutchinson, where he left some of the guns. On arriving at Forest City he found the whole region in a state of panic, the inhabitants fleeing, and the Indians killing and ravaging the country. A company was at once organized and armed, and marched over into Monongalia county (since a part of Kandiyohi), where they found the bodies of a number of slain, and also of hundreds of cattle killed in mere wantonness. They also rescued several persons who had been wounded and were hiding. The militia, aided by citizens at Forest City, at once began erecting a large stockade for defence, in the center of town, in which the inhabitants and refugees could take shelter. Hearing that a family at Green Lake were in great danger, Capt. Whitcomb went to their relief. Near that spot his men had a hard skirmish with the Indians, in which three of the redskins were left dead on the ground, and only one of his own men slightly wounded. He returned to the stockade that night, but next day, with a larger party, again attempted to reach Green Lake. The Indians again attacked him, and after a sharp battle he returned without loss to Forest City. That night the savages made a fierce attack on the town, burned several buildings, and fired on the stockade, but fortunately hurting no one. The troops returned the fire. About daylight the Indians were seen trying to drive off a number of horses and cattle in a corral. The troops sallied out and drove them off, killing two, and having two of their own number badly wounded. By this time Meeker county west of Forest City, and all of Kandiyohi and Monongalia counties, were entirely deserted by the whites.

On August 26th, Captain Richard Strout of the Tenth Regiment, was ordered to proceed to Glencoe and the region adjacent, to protect it. He reached that place about September 1st, and found the town had been well fortified and defended by the militia under command of General John H. Stevens, of the state militia, and was safe from any immediate danger. He therefore marched, with about seventy-five men, towards Acton. On the morning of September 3d, he was attacked near that place by about one hundred and fifty Indians, and a sharp battle ensued. The troops were driven back towards Hutchinson, fighting all the way, until afternoon, when they reached that place. Captain Strout lost three men killed and fifteen wounded, all of whom were brought off the field, and lost most of their equipment, rations, &c., and several horses and wagons abandoned and mired. The Indians must have lost several killed.

At Hutchinson, a large stockade had been built, and a company of about sixty militia commanded by Captain Harrington, were defending the town. About nine the next morning, September 4th, the Indians attacked the post. They burned all the houses on the edge of the town and one or two more centrally located. Our troops sallied out and routed them, however, and a succession of skirmishes ensued, which lasted all day.

Meantime, General Stevens had heard of the engagement near Acton, and at once sent the companies of Captain Davis and Lieutenant Weinmann to the relief of Hutchinson. They arrived about six o'clock on the evening of the fight, but the Indians had withdrawn. Several persons in the neighborhood were killed by them, and others escaped into the stockade. All the signs indicated that the Indians had retreated towards the upper Minnesota, taking a large drove of stolen horses and cattle with them. The Indians were not seen again in this vicinity until September 23d, when a band of about fifty invaded Meeker and Kandiyohi counties. They killed two or three settlers who had returned to their farms, but seemed more intent on stealing cattle than on killing whites. They were pursued by the troops, and sixty-five head of cattle rescued from them.

Wright county does not seem to have been invaded by the Indians. Fortifications were erected by the inhabitants at various points, but no depredations were made in that locality, so far as known.

Western and southern Stearns county, however, suffered severely from the depredations of the red foe. About August 23d, they committed murders and other crimes near Paynesville. The people of that town erected a strong stockade, and the citizens and refugees from points further west, sheltered themselves therein. A part of the town was burned, but no attack was made on the post. At Maine Prairie, St. Joseph's, Sank Centre, Clear Water, Little Falls, and other places, similar stockades were built, and held by a few determined citizens. At St. Cloud, which was filled with refugees, strong fortifications were built, and preparations made to defend the place to the utmost, but no foe ever appeared, fortunately. A number of persons were murdered in the western and southern part of Stearns county, and houses burned.

The southwestern portion of the State was also overrun, and a number of murders committed. This district was soon after placed in command of Colonel Flandrau, and about five hundred militia garrisoned at different points, who soon rid the country of Indians.

The Third Regiment, which had been paroled, after its surrender, at Murfreesboro, was now at Benton Barracks, Mo. Gov. Ramsey telegraphed on Aug. 22d to have them sent to this state at once, for service against the Indians. The request was complied with. The regiment received its exchange on Aug. 24th, and they arrived in St. Paul on Sept. 4th. All their officers were still prisoners in the hands of the rebels, and the companies were commanded by non-commissioned officers. Maj. Welch, who was not with the regiment at its surrender, (having been taken prisoner at Bull Run) was in command of the regiment. Three hundred men were at once sent to the frontier, where they did good service, being the only veteran troops engaged during the war.

On Aug. 23d, Gov. Ramsey, in response to many petitions, called an extra session of the legislature, to meet on Sept. 9th.

SIEGE OF FORT ABERCROMBIE.

On Aug. 23d the Indians commenced hostilities in the valley of the Red River. Fort Abercrombie was then garrisoned by Co. D., Fifth Regiment, Capt. J. Van der Horek, but about half the company was stationed at Georgetown, protecting the Transportation Company's goods at that place. Early on the 23d a band of 500 Sissetons and Yanktons crossed the Otter Tail River, with the intention of capturing a train of goods and cattle en route for Red Lake, where a treaty was to be made with the Chippewas. The train was at once ordered to take refuge in Fort Abercrombie, and did so. Most of the citizens in the surrounding region also repaired to that post, for safety, but many were killed, or taken prisoners. The town of Dayton was destroyed.

Reinforcements were ordered to Fort Abercrombie as soon as its danger was learned, but the troops sent out were detained en route, to protect and aid threatened places in Stearns and Meeker Counties, and did not reach the fort. Meantime it was in great danger, and was quite surrounded by the enemy. Skirmishes near by had taken place between detachments of the troops and the Indians. On Aug. 30th the latter appeared in large numbers before the fort. A large herd of the treaty cattle (172 head) and about 100 horses and mules were grazing on the prairie near by. The Indians drove these off, and the small garrison could make no resistance. On Sept. 3d, at daybreak, the Indians attacked the post. A fight was kept up for two or three hours, but they were repulsed, with some loss on both sides. Active measures were then taken to strengthen the post by a stockade of timber. On Sept. 6th, a second attack was made, and a sharp battle raged until nearly noon. A number of the Indians were killed and wounded, but only one of our force was killed, and one mortally wounded. The Indians hung around the fort, occasionally attacking a messenger, or a watering party, until Sept. 23d, when reinforcements arrived via St. Cloud to the great joy of the beleaguered garrison, who had now been besieged over three weeks. No farther demonstrations of any force, were made by the Indians. But for the brave resistance made by a mere handful of soldiers, aided by a few citizens, the post must have fallen.

A REGIMENT OF MOUNTED RANGERS RAISED.

The want of a mounted force to pursue the Indians was severely felt by Col. Sibley. His small number of irregular mounted militiamen were leaving for their homes. He several times urged Gov. Ramsey to provide cavalry, and that official in turn asked of the War Department the proper authority. This was granted on Sept. 1st, and a regiment of mounted rangers at once called for, for three months service, which was subsequently changed to one year. The regiment was soon recruited, and Col. S. McPhaill appointed colonel.

BATTLE OF BIRCH COOLIE.

While waiting at Fort Ridgely for proper supplies and equipments, and before undertaking any offensive campaign against the Indians, Col. Sibley sent out, on August 31st, a detachment to bury dead bodies, rescue any fugitives that might be found, and make reconnoissances. This detachment consisted of part of Co. A, sixth regiment, Capt. H. P. Grant, about seventy mounted men under Capt. Jos. Anderson, and a fatigue party—about one hundred and fifty men in all, accompanied by seventeen teams. The whole force was in command of Maj. Joseph R. Brown, who was perfectly familiar with the country and with Indian warfare. On the first day's march sixteen dead bodies were found and buried. The next day (Sept. 1) the force separated into two detachments. During this day fifty-five mutilated bodies were buried. In the evening the whole force went into camp at Birch Coolie (or Coulee) in a spot selected by Maj. Brown. No Indians had been seen that day.

Just before daybreak on the 2d, the camp was aroused by a volley of firearms and the yells of Indians, who had crawled unperceived within a few yards of the encampment. For a few minutes terrific volleys were poured into the tents, cutting them into shreds and wounding or killing a number of men and horses. As soon as they could seize their arms, those who were unhurt crawled out, and sheltering themselves as well as they could behind wagons, dead horses, etc., returned the fire. Shortly after daylight the men began excavating, with such implements as they could get, a line of rifle-pits, and in a short time had about two hundred feet dug.

The firing in the still of the morning was heard by the sentinels at Fort Ridgely, fifteen miles away, and a detachment of troops under Colonel McPhaill, at once pushed off to their relief. When within three miles of Birch Coolie, they were met by such a large force of Indians they could not advance, and sent a courier back for reinforcements. Meantime, the troops of Major Brown's command lay all day in their rifle pits, keeping the savages at bay. The wounded were cared for as well as possible, but some died during the day.

As soon as McPhaill's courier reached Fort Ridgely, a large force, with some artillery, was sent to the relief of his and Brown's troops. They came up about daylight, and the whole column then pushed on to Birch Coolie, dislodging and driving the Indians from their position, after keeping our men under fire for thirty hours, without food or drink.

The camp was an awful scene, when relieved. Twenty-three men had been killed outright or mortally wounded, forty-five badly wounded, and seventy horses killed. The dead were buried on the spot, and the wounded carried back to Fort Ridgely in wagons. Thus terminated the most bloody battle of the war, and one which spread gloom over the State. It is not creditable to Minnesota that this battle ground should have been allowed to pass into private hands, and be plowed over. It should have been reserved by the State as a historic spot, and marked with a suitable monument. All the bodies, however, were subsequently removed, and properly interred elsewhere.

RELIEF MEASURES FOR THE REFUGEES.

The condition of the poor refugees from the ravaged districts, was deplorable in the extreme. In St. Peter alone, there were in September, as many as 6,000 or 7,000 for some days, and at one time 8,000. In St. Paul there were 1,000, and at Minneapolis an equal number, and all the towns had more or less. They were all destitute of money, clothing, employment, &c., and many were sick, while not a few were actually insane from trouble and grief. The active exertions of citizens of St. Peter alone prevented great suffering there, but their means were soon exhausted. They then appealed through the papers for aid, and Governor Ramsey appointed commissioners to receive and disburse supplies. About $20,000 in money was contributed, half of which came from eastern cities, while large quantities of clothing were collected by local relief committees, in St. Paul and other places. The Legislature, when it met, voted $25,000 more. These amounts relieved the worst cases of need. In October, most of those whose homes had not been destroyed returned to them, and the number of destitute rapidly decreased. Several hundred, however, were supported all winter. Fortunately, laborers had now become scarce, and wages enhanced, so that all could get employment. The building of railroads went along unchecked in the midst of all the panic. The Winona and St. Peter Railroad completed about ten miles of road this fall.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF THE PRISONERS.

Before leaving the battle-field of Birch Coolie, Col. Sibley left the following note attached to a stake:

"If Little Crow has any proposition to make to me, let him send a half-breed to me, and he shall be protected in and out of camp.

"H. H. SIBLEY,

"Col. Com'g Mil. Exped'n."

Col. Sibley had reason to believe that their repeated defeats had discouraged the foe, and negotiations could be made with the disaffected Indians, and those tired of fighting, for the release of the prisoners. This note bore good fruit very soon.

It was now evident that all the marauding bands from the interior had been called in, and that the Indians would oppose the column on its march with all their combined forces.

Col. Sibley ordered the Third regiment, then at Glencoe, to join his command, and it reached Fort Ridgely on Sept. 13th.

Meantime Col. Sibley's note had been shown Little Crow on his return from the raid on the Big Woods settlers, and A. J. Campbell, a half-breed who acted as his secretary, read it to him. Crow at once dictated a reply, blaming Galbraith and the traders for wronging them, and enumerating some grievances which caused the war. He requested an answer. This note reached Col. Sibley at Fort Ridgely on Sept. 7th. Col. S. at once replied demanding that Little Crow should release the prisoners, and he would then treat with him. On Sept. 12th a reply was received from Crow, saying that the Mdewakantons had 150 prisoners, and other bands some more. He said: "I want to know from you, as a friend, what way I can make peace for my people." Col. Sibley at once replied, urging Crow to give up the prisoners, and complaining that he had allowed his young men to kill nine more whites since he sent the first letter. The same courier who brought Little Crow's letter also brought one privately from the chief Wabasha, and Taopi, a Christian Indian. They asserted that they were forced into the war, and were now anxious to make peace, and if a chance offered they would come in and give themselves up, with all their prisoners. Col. Sibley replied to this message urging them to do so, and promising them protection, adding that he was now strong enough to crush all the Indians who held out.

When this letter was received by Wabasha and his friends who wished to separate from the other Indians, a great dispute arose among all the bands. Indeed, disaffection and jealousy had been brewing ever since the outbreak. The prisoners were in great peril and might have been murdered. But at last all worked out well, and the friendly and repentant Indians carried the day.

The War Department had meantime created Minnesota and Dakota into a military department, and appointed Gen. John Pope to the command. He reached St. Paul on Sept. 12th, and established his headquarters there. The EXTRA SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE, called by the Governor, met on September 9th, and adjourned on September 29th. The legislation was mostly in regard to matters growing out of the Indian war. A Board of Auditors was created to adjust claims growing out of the massacre, and $75,000 was appropriated to settle them. Congress was memorialized to reimburse the State for this outlay. A Board of Commissioners was authorized to collect names of slain, and the facts of their death, &c. [This was never done.] The sum of $25,000 was voted for the relief of indigent refugees. Congress was also memorialized for the removal of the Winnebagoes from the State.

THE NEW REGIMENTS, (the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th) which had been hurried off to the frontier, half organized, were, by this time, completely organized and mustered in. The Colonels were appointed as follows: Sixth, Wm. Crooks; Seventh, Stephen Miller; Eighth, Minor T. Thomas; Ninth, Alex. Wilkin; Tenth, James H. Baker.

BATTLE OF WOOD LAKE.

Col. Sibley, after the arrival of the Third Regiment and the supplies and ammunition he had needed, broke camp, on Sept. 18th, and started in pursuit of the Indians at or near Yellow Medicine. On the morning of Sept. 23d, while encamped near Wood Lake, the Indians suddenly attacked the force. The Renville Rangers were thrown out, and met the enemy bravely. Maj. Welch soon had the Third Regiment in line, and they poured steady volleys into the advancing line of Indians, as did also the Sixth Regiment, under Maj. McLaren. The fight then became general. Lieutenant Colonel Marshall charged the enemy with three companies of the Seventh and A of the Sixth, and put them to rout. The battle had lasted an hour and a half. Our loss was four killed and fifty wounded; among the latter,

Maj. Welch. The Indians lost quite a number—thirty, it is said—fifteen being found dead on the field. After burying the dead, Col. Sibley marched toward Lac qui Parle, near which place Wabasha had notified him he would meet him and deliver up the prisoners.

RELEASE OF THE CAPTIVES.

On September 26th the column arrived at the camp where the friendly Indians had the prisoners, and made their own near by. It was opposite the mouth of the Chippewa River, and was named by our men "Camp Release." Col. Sibley without delay visited the Indians and demanded the captives. They were at once produced, nearly two hundred and fifty in number. Many wept with joy at their release; others had grown almost indifferent. These poor people—mostly women and children—were sent as soon as possible to their friends, if the latter were still living.

The Indians who had given themselves up were at once placed under guard until they could be examined as to their guilt. During the next few days a number came in and gave themselves up, and some smaller parties were captured soon after by our troops under Lt. Col. Marshall, so that soon our force had over 2,000 Indian warriors in their hands. Col. Sibley at once organized a military commission, composed of Col. Crooks, Lt. Col. Marshall, and Capt. Grant, with I. V. D. Heard as judge advocate, to examine all evidence against the Indians, and indicate the guilty ones. Another commission of five officers was appointed to try the accused.

These commissions continued at work until November 5th, by which time they had found three hundred and twenty-one Indians guilty of murder, ravishing, and other crimes, and sentenced three hundred and three to death. These were at once removed to South Bend, there to await the orders of the president. The other Indians and their families were taken to Fort Snelling and confined all winter in a stockade.

CLOSE OF THE INDIAN WAR.

Meantime Little Crow and the still hostile Indians had retreated into Dakota, and before winter reached Devil's Lake, where they remained until the next season. As the war in this State was now practically over, most of the settlers whose homes had not been destroyed returned to them. The Third Minnesota regiment, and the Twenty-fifth Wis. and Twenty-seventh Iowa, were sent south before winter, but the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Minn., with the Mounted Rangers, were retained for home service, and were stationed in detachments in a cordon of posts reaching from the south line of the State across the frontier to St. Cloud. The country between the garrisons was carefully scouted and patrolled, so that no hostile Indians could pass the line. On November 25th, Gen. Pope removed his headquarters to Milwaukee, and Brig. Gen. Sibley (for such he was made after the battle of Wood Lake) remained in command at St. Paul. The winter passed without any hostilities.

OUR REGIMENTS IN THE SOUTH

had not been idle meantime. On Sept. 4th the Fifth Regiment was in the battle at Corinth, and under fire some time. One account says: "The ground in front of us was covered with killed and wounded rebels." The Fifth suffered a loss of six killed, eighteen wounded and three missing. The Fourth Regiment was also in the same fight, and lost, during two days' fighting, three killed and nine wounded. The Fourth Regiment was also hotly engaged at the battle of Iuka, on Sept. 19th. It lost three killed, four wounded, two missing.

At Corinth, Oct. 3d and 4th the Fourth also bore an active share, losing three killed and five wounded. "The regiment bore itself most gallantly," says an official report. In the same engagements the Fifth Minnesota also shared, expending about fifty rounds of ammunition, with which they made deadly work among the enemy, losing six killed, sixteen wounded, and four missing. The First Battery were also in this engagement, and did good work, having only one man wounded.

THE FIRST REGIMENT

also bore its share during this period. At the Battle of Antietam, on Sept. 17th, it was closely engaged, and left ninety men dead or mortally wounded on the field. Their bodies now rest in the national cemetery there.

The First also participated in the battle of Fredericksburg, on December 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th, during which it lost nine wounded and one missing.

EXECUTION OF THE INDIAN MURDERERS.

The three hundred and three Indian murderers were kept at South Bend a short time and then removed to Mankato, where they were confined in a stone warehouse strongly guarded. Meantime, some (so called) "philanthropists," principally Quakers, at Philadelphia and other eastern cities, interfered in the matter, and got up a strong pressure on President Lincoln to pardon the guilty wretches. This was resisted by the prominent men and officials of Minnesota, the people of the State almost unanimously demanding their execution, and threatening, if it were not done, to apply lynch law to them. President Lincoln selected thirty-nine of the murderers, and (on December 6th) ordered General Sibley to execute them. This was carried into effect on December 26th, at Mankato, (one, meantime, dying of disease). Thirty-eight of the savages were swung off of one scaffold, in the presence of a large concourse of people. The rest of the murderers were imprisoned until spring, then taken to Davenport, Iowa, where they were confined a few months, after which they were removed to a reservation on the Missouri river, and set at liberty.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

CLOSE OF THE INDIAN WAR AND THE WAR OF SECESSION.

Sibley's Expedition of 1863.—Brave Conduct of the Third, Fourth and Fifth Regiments.—The First at Gettysburg.—Death of Little Crow.—Gen. Sibley's Column Attacked by the Sioux.—Remarkable Drought in 1863-64.—Three More Regiments sent South.—Return of the First Regiment.—Gen. Sibley's Expedition in 1864.—Heavy Drafts for Men.—Inflation and High Prices.—Battles in which Minnesota Troops Took Part.—Union Victories.—Close of the War.—Return of our Troops.—The State's Share in the Conflict.—A new Era of Material Prosperity Begun.

The winter of 1862-'63 was spent by Gen. Sibley in making preparations for an expedition to the Missouri River, to pursue and punish the hostile Sioux. A third battery of light artillery was recruited for this purpose, and John Jones, the gallant defender of Fort Ridgely, appointed captain. At the session of the legislature, Gov. Ramsey was elected U. S. Senator, but did not vacate the gubernatorial chair until June 30th.

Early in the spring, small parties of Sioux began to make predatory incursions into the state, and these raids continued all summer. Some twenty persons were killed, in all, and a number of horses stolen. The Indians were pursued by troops in every case, and a number of them killed. A reward of $25 was offered by the Adjutant General for Sioux scalps, and afterwards raised to $200.

In May, the Sioux were removed from the state, together with the Winnebagoes, and sent to a new reservation on the Missouri River. Efforts were made to get rid of the Chippewas, but were not successful.

Gen. Sibley in May concentrated three thousand troops at Camp Pope, on the upper Minnesota River, for his expedition. These were: the Sixth, Seventh, and Tenth Infantry, Capt. Jones' Battery, and the Mounted Rangers. On June 17th, the expedition started on its march. Gen. Stephen Miller was meantime in command of the department here. Gen. Alfred Sully was at the same time moving up the Missouri River with another expedition.

On June 22d, the War Department authorized the formation of a three years battalion of six companies of cavalry, for service against the Indians, to be commanded by Major E. A. C. Hatch. This was soon recruited, and in active duty at the various posts in this department.

OUR REGIMENTS IN THE SOUTH.

The summer of 1863 was one of hard service and brilliant renown to our regiments in the South. On May 3d, the Fourth Regiment was in hot action in the battle at the crossing of Big Black river, with a loss of three killed. One of its officers planted the Union flag on the Capitol at Jackson. At Champion Hills (May 16th) it lost one killed. On May 22d, at Vicksburg, it again suffered severely, losing twelve killed and forty-two wounded. The Third Regiment was also in the same campaign. On May 19th, the Fifth Regiment near Vicksburg, lost one killed and five wounded.

The severest loss of any of our regiments in the war, however, was that suffered by the First Regiment at Gettysburg, on July 3d. It took part in the hottest of that memorable action, and made a movement in the face of an awful fire from the rebels. In a few minutes it lost sixty-eight killed, 149 wounded, 90 missing, and when it emerged from the baptism of fire, had only 87 men in its ranks. The news of this terrible carnage was received with profound sympathy by the people of the State, mingled with thankfulness, however, for the great victory won there, and at Vicksburg, on the same day.

DEATH OF LITTLE CROW.

During June, a band of seventeen Indians greatly annoyed the settlers in Meeker and Kandiyohi counties, killing several. On July 3d, a man named Nathan Lampson, and his son Chauncy, were hunting near Hutchinson, when they espied two Sioux. A fight ensued, in which Mr. Lampson was badly wounded, when his son, by a fortunate shot, killed one of the Indians. The dead body of the latter was taken to Hutchinson. From its appearance, and certain marks, it was supposed to be Little Crow. It was scalped, and the remains buried. Not long after, an Indian was captured in Dakota, which proved to be Wo-wi-na-jac, Little Crow's son. He confessed that the Indian killed by Lampson was his father, and that he was with him at the time. The remains of the celebrated chieftain, whose name for months was a terror to our people, were then exhumed, and the skeleton preserved. The scalp and arm bones are in the museum of the Historical Society, at St. Paul.

Gen. Sibley's expedition reached the Coteau of the Missouri on July 24, and on that day, at a place called "Big Mound," was attacked by about one thousand Indians. A sharp engagement ensued, in which twenty-one Indians were killed, and only two of our troops. On July 26, at "Dead Buffalo Lake," the Sioux again attacked his column, but were repulsed, with a loss on our side of one man. On July 28, at "Stony Lake," about two thousand Indians again gave battle, but were routed, with considerable loss. The expedition pursued the savages to the Missouri river, across which they escaped. It returned to the state about Sept. 1st. Gen. Sully's column had several engagements with the Indians, chastising them severely.

The summer of 1863 was memorable for an intense drouth, which continued until the close of 1864. During these two seasons almost no rain fell, yet the harvests were good. The worst result was on the river, which was unprecedentedly low, and business was badly interfered with, and the lumbering interest was, for the same reason, greatly depressed.

On Sept. 19 and 20, at Chickamauga, the Second Regiment was hotly engaged, and suffered a loss of thirty-five killed and one hundred and thirteen wounded.

Early in October, the Seventh, Ninth, and Tenth Regiments were relieved from duty here and sent to St. Louis, from whence they went to the front.

On Oct. 12th, the War Department, having called for two hundred thousand more troops, authorized the Second Regiment of cavalry to take the place of the Mounted Rangers, whose term of service had expired.

On Oct. 14 the First Regiment was engaged at Bristow's Station, and lost one killed and nineteen wounded, capturing two hundred prisoners and several guns.

At the state election this fall, Gen. Stephen Miller was elected governor, by a vote of 19,628 over Henry T. Wells, who had 12,739.

On Nov. 23, the Second Regiment was in the action at Mission Ridge, and suffered a loss of five killed and thirty-four wounded.

The provost marshals of the state made an enrollment of all the male citizens this fall, preparatory to the draft. Resistance was made in some cases, but no serious disturbances took place, as in other states.

EARLY IN 1864,

the regiments which enlisted in 1861, and had re-enlisted as "veterans," were allowed to return to the State on furlough. They were received in the various towns of the State with the most lively demonstrations of pride and gratitude, and banqueted and petted as the brave heroes deserved.

On April 28th the First regiment, whose term of service had expired, was mustered out at Fort Snelling. Barely one hundred of the 1080 men who had stood on the same parade ground three years before, were in the ranks. Out of some re-enlisted men and recruits a battalion was formed, called the "First Battalion," which did good service during the next year.

On March 30th the Third regiment had a close action at a place called Fitzhugh's Woods, near Augusta, Ark. Seven were killed and sixteen wounded. Gen. Andrews, commanding, had his horse shot under him.

On June 6th an expedition left Fort Ridgely in pursuit of the hostile Sioux on the Missouri River, under command of Gen. Sully. It consisted of the Eighth Minn. (mounted), six companies of the Second Cavalry, three sections of Jones' Battery, and Brackett's Battalion of cavalry, which had re-enlisted and was now organized as a separate command.

On June 14, the Sixth Regiment left Fort Snelling for the south, and was soon after placed in the Sixteenth Army Corps, in which was also the Fifth, Seventh, Ninth and Tenth Minnesota regiments. The Fifth had, not long previously, taken a part in the disastrous Red River campaign, and the Ninth had borne a share in the unfortunate Guntown expedition (June 10), where it suffered a loss of seven killed, thirty-three wounded, and two hundred and forty-six taken prisoners.

On Feb. 1 the War Department had made a call for two hundred thousand men, and on March 14 another call for the same number, followed by one in April for eighty-five thousand. The quota of our state under these heavy calls was about five thousand men, and on May 26 drafting commenced to fill the quotas of some districts which were delinquent. The desire of some towns and districts to escape a draft led to the issuing of bonds, with the proceeds of which they paid high bounties and procured recruits. Subscriptions were raised in some districts for the same purpose. A class of middle men, called recruit, or bounty, agents, sprang up, who, in bidding for recruits, sometimes gave as high as $700 or $800 for men to fill quotas. Under this stimulus recruiting went on pretty lively, while a considerable number of men were drafted and sent to fill old regiments. On July 18th came another call for five hundred thousand, and this again produced a new struggle to fill quotas. The entire number of men apportioned to our state up to this time was 21,442.

That these frequent and heavy drafts for men produced a feeling of doubt and despondency can not be denied. It was now the fourth year of the war, and its end still seemed far off, while its rapacious maw appeared to literally swallow up the enormous levies which the people in their pride and patriotism promptly furnished at each call. There was mourning in nearly every household for some "unreturning brave," and suffering in the families of enlisted men.

The inflation of the currency also produced an unheard-of rise in the price of living. On June 1 gold was 150. On July 11th it had reached 285—the highest point during the war. All other values advanced accordingly. There was some silver lining to the dark cloud, though. The great advance in goods literally made the fortunes of many dealers. Even real estate began to show life, while there was an ease in the money market which reminded one of 1857. Several of our railroads were now in active progress, and labor was in great demand. The continued drouth and low water was a serious drawback, however. Prayers were put up in most of the churches for rain.

Small raids were made by the Sioux several times during the summer, and several persons killed, but these attacks occasioned but little alarm.

On July 13th, our Fifth, Seventh, Ninth and Tenth Regiments were in the Battle of Tupelo, and all suffered some loss. The Seventh had nine killed and fifty-two wounded. Col. Wilkin, of the Ninth, was killed—one of the bravest and finest officers who left our state.

Under the call of July 23d, an eleventh regiment of infantry was authorized, and filled very quickly. James Gilfillan, formerly of the Seventh, was appointed colonel. The Eleventh left the state on Sept. 22d, for Tennessee, where it performed guard duty for several months.

A battalion of heavy infantry was also recruited, which was soon increased to a full regiment. Wm. Colville, late of the First Regiment, was placed in command. The regiment served for several months at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The bullets of the enemy were not so disastrous to some of our regiments, as the malaria of southern swamps. Our Sixth Regiment at Helena, and the Third at Pine Bluff, Ark., were both decimated by disease. Sometimes only a handful of men were found well enough for duty.

On October 5th, the Fourth Regiment was in a heavy action at Altoona, and captured two flags. Their loss was killed, 13; wounded, 31.

On December 7th, the Eighth Regiment took part in an engagement near Murfreesboro, Tennessee, in which it lost 14 killed and 76 wounded, in a charge on the enemy's batteries.

On December 16th, the Fifth, Seventh, Ninth and Tenth Regiments took part in the great battle of Nashville, between Thomas's and Hood's armies. All suffered loss, though fortunately not severe.

On December 19th, another call was made, for 300,000 troops, and the recruiting and bounty business grew more intense than ever, and continued all winter.

During this time, the patriotic people of our State were contributing with generous liberality to the Sanitary and Christian Commissions, to various relief movements, to special hospital funds of our various regiments, for the support of destitute soldiers' families, and individual cases of distress without number. No State in the Union did more, proportioned to their means, in these works, than the people of Minnesota.

THE YEAR 1865

opened with more encouraging prospects. The large forces of the Union army were gaining substantial victories. The successes of Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, Sherman in his historic march to the sea, "crushing the confederacy like an eggshell," and Grant, doggedly consuming the enemy at Petersburg, were fast shattering the rebellion. In the siege of Spanish Fort, at Mobile, in April, the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, and Tenth Minnesota Volunteers bore an active and honorable part.

Not unmingled with tears were the rejoicings over these victories. Every battle-bulletin brought sorrow and mourning to many homes in our state. On April 3d came the great news of the fall of Richmond, and on April 8th, while the people celebrating this event, the dispatch of General Grant announcing the unconditional surrender of Lee and his army was received, setting nearly everybody crazy with joy. On April 13th the provost marshals received an order to cease drafting and recruiting, and the war was practically over. One of its saddest results was yet to come—the death of President Lincoln, on April 15th. This calamity was duly observed in all the towns of the State, on April 19th, by suspension of business, and religious services. These gloomy feelings were soon dispelled, however, by the early in the summer, and their muster-out at Fort Snelling. As each of these bodies of brave men returned, they were received with such ovations and demonstrations of joy as a grateful people could devise. Quietly our soldiers "hung up their bruised arms," and were soon again absorbed into the body of the people. In all, Minnesota had furnished to the armies of the republic 25,052 men, or about one-seventh of its entire population at the beginning of the war. Of these, it is estimated from the best data obtainable, that 2500 were killed in battle and died of disease during the war, while probably twice as many more received wounds from which they will suffer through life. Many died shortly after the war, from the effects of disease or imprisonment incurred in service. In her devotion to the cause of the Union, our State has a bright record.

The state was almost free from Indian raids during all this year. Only one of any moment occurred. On May 2d a family of five persons named Jewett, were murdered near Garden City. A half breed named Campbell, who aided in the raid, was arrested at Mankato several days afterward, and hung by a mob.

The census of 1865, showed a population of 250,099—a gratifying increase, considering the war of secession and the Indian war as drawbacks.

With the close of the war a new era of prosperity seemed to have begun in the state. Money was abundant, immigration brisk, labor in demand, and real estate advancing. Our railroads were in rapid progress in all directions, and villages and towns springing up everywhere.

On Nov. 11th, at Fort Snelling, Shakopee and Medicine Bottle, two Sioux convicted of taking part in the massacre of 1862, were hung. They had fled to Manitoba, and were not caught until 1864.

This fall much excitement was occasioned by the reported discovery of gold quartz at Lake Vermillion. Several mining companies were formed, and veins opened and worked, but the yield did not pay, and the mines were soon abandoned.

The state election this year was very feebly contested. Two well-known old settlers were nominated for governor, but the vote was light. Wm. R. Marshall received 17,318 and Henry M. Rice 13,842. At the same election an amendment to the constitution was voted on, proposing to confer the elective franchise on negroes, but was defeated.

CHAPTER XXIX.

PRINCIPAL EVENTS FROM 1866 TO 1881.

A Period of Inflation.--Rapid Railroad Construction.--Proposed Removal of the Capital.--Attempted Adjustment of the Railroad Bonds.--Legislative Control of Freight Tariffs.--Prairie Fires in 1871.--An Arctic Cyclone.--Impeachment of State Treasurer.--The Jay Cooke Panic.--Regulating Railroad Tariffs.--Grasshopper Ravages.--Suffering on the Frontier.--Relief Measures Adopted by the Legislature.--Murderous Raid by Missouri Outlaws.--Further Attempts to Adjust the Railroad Loan Debt.--End of the Grasshopper Scourge.--Return of "Good Times," and Rapid Growth in Prosperity.

The year 1866 was one of great financial ease. The large expenditure of money by the government, in the pay of discharged troops, bounties, and various war claims, made money unusually plenty.

The railroads of the State were pushed this year with great vigor. By winter, 315 miles were in operation. There was a continuous line from St. Cloud, via Owatonna, to Winona, a distance of 245 miles. These roads were an important element in aiding the settlement and business of the State. Formerly the sole dependence for travel and freight had been on the river, and the winter was a season of dullness and depression. This was now largely changed.

At the State election in the fall of 1867, Wm. R. Marshall had 34,874 votes, and Charles E. Flandrau 29,502. This would indicate a population of about 320,000, showing a heavy immigration during the years 1866 and 1867. At this election, a negro suffrage amendment was again voted on and defeated. The following year [1868] the amendment was a third time voted on, and adopted; ayes, 39,493; noes, 30,121.

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF THE CAPITAL.

At the session of the legislature in 1869, a bill was introduced to remove the seat of government to a spot near Big Kandiyohi Lake. The bill was at first regarded as a joke, and it met with small opposition, passing both houses with little delay. Gov. Marshall vetoed the measure, and an attempt to pass the act over his veto, failed.

At this session, the legislature celebrated the completion of an all-rail route to the east by a visit to Milwaukee, and to the Wisconsin legislature at Madison.

At the state election in the fall of 1869, Horace Austin (rep.) was elected governor, by a vote of 27,348, over George L. Otis (dem.), who had 25,401.

By the census of 1870, Minnesota was found to have 439,706 population.

PROPOSED ADJUSTMENT OF THE RAILROAD BONDS.

At the session of the Legislature in 1870, an act was passed submitting to the people an amendment to the constitution, providing for the sale of the five hundred thousand acres of what was known as the "Internal Improvement Lands," and the use of the proceeds in extinguishing the state railroad loan bonds, in the following manner: Two thousand of the bonds were to be deposited with the State Land Commissioner on or before the day of sale, by the holders, they agreeing to purchase with them the lands at $8.70 per acre, etc. The amendment was adopted by a popular vote, but as only 1,032 bonds were deposited by the owners, the measure failed.

The unusual low water of 1863, '64 and '65 had now given way to a series of years of the opposite extreme. In 1870 occurred great freshets, doing much damage, and the water was reported "higher than for twenty years."

Railroad construction had been pushed with great vigor for the last year or two. At the close of 1870, there were 1,096 miles in operation, 329 of which were built that year. A road had been completed to Lake Superior during the season, thus connecting the river and lake systems, while the Northern Pacific Railroad was under full headway.

During 1869 and '70, much complaint was made by shippers, of unjust charges by the railroads of the State. Governor Austin, in his message, January, 1871, called attention to the subject very pointedly. An investigation was made by a legislative committee, which resulted in the enactment of a freight and passenger tariff, and the creation of the office of Railroad Commissioner. The tariff so fixed was disregarded by the railroads, and in 1871, an action, as a sort of test case under that statute, was commenced by John D. Blake, of Rochester, against the Winona & St. Peter Railroad, for unjust freight charges. The presiding judge decided the act unconstitutional, but the Supreme Court of the State reversed this decision, when the railroad company appealed the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was not until 1876 that a decision was rendered, sustaining the right of legislative control over railroad tariffs.

An act was passed by the legislature of 1871 to "test the validity and provide for the equitable adjustment" of the State railroad bonds, by the creation of a commission, to ascertain and award the amount due on each. The act was voted on in May following, and rejected by the people. Another important measure passed at the same session, was an act dividing up the 500,000 acres of Internal Improvement Land, among various railroad companies. This was vetoed by Gov. Austin. Two years later the constitution was amended so that no act disposing of these lands, should be valid, unless approved by a vote of the people.

In the fall of 1871, destructive fires, driven by high winds, swept over a number of frontier counties, lasting several days, and inflicting great damage on the settlers. Hundreds lost their houses, crops, hay, fences, etc., and several persons were burned to death. During the summer, many had also lost their crops by destructive hail storms. Gov. Austin appealed to the people of the State, by proclamation, for aid for the sufferers. He received in response, $11,000 in money, and clothing, provisions, etc., worth $11,000 more, while the next legislature appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of purchasing seed wheat for those who had lost their crops.

In November, 1871, Horace Austin was re-elected Governor, by a vote of 45,833; over W. Young, who had 30,092.

From 1870 to 1873, was a period of great inflation and speculation. The money market was unprecedentedly easy, and real estate partook of the same excitement as characterized the flush times of 1856 and 1857. Railroad building was carried on to a remarkable extent, and the entire State was enjoying an unusual period of material progress and development.

The winter of 1872-3 was an unusually early and severe one. On January 7th, 8th and 9th, 1873, occurred an "Arctic Cyclone", or "Polar Wave", of a violence and intensity never before experienced in this State. The worst effects were felt in the prairie region. Gov. Austin, in a special message to the legislature, reported that seventy lives were lost, thirty-one persons suffered loss of limbs, and about three hundred cattle and horses perished. The legislature voted $5,000 as a relief fund to aid sufferers.

During the session of 1873, charges of corrupt conduct and misdemeanors in office, were made against Wm. Seeger, State Treasurer. On March 5th, the House of Representatives impeached him, and the Senate, on being presented with the articles, appointed May 20th as the date to sit as a Court of Impeachment. Prior to that date, Mr. Seeger resigned his office, and Gov. Austin accepted the resignation. When the Senate met on May 20th, this fact left that body uncertain whether to proceed with the trial or not. On May 22d, Mr. Seeger sent in a written plea of "guilty" to all the charges. A resolution was then adopted by the Senate, declaring that the judgment of the court was, that he be removed from office, and disqualified to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit in this State.

On September 19th, 1873, the news was circulated in this State, of the failure of Jay Cooke's banking house in Philadelphia, occasioning a financial panic. Its effects here were far different from those of the panic of 1857. There was some stringency in the money market, railroad building ceased, and real estate was very dull for several years, but not a bank in the State closed its doors, and but few mercantile houses failed. Immigration was large, good harvests added annually to the wealth of the State, and it advanced steadily in prosperity.

THE GRASSHOPPER SCOURGE.

During the summer of 1873, a species of grasshopper, called the "Rocky Mountain Locust," made its appearance in myriads, in some of the south-western counties, almost totally destroying the crops. Hundreds of families were left in great destitution. These facts being reported by the press, an energetic movement was made in the towns and cities in the eastern portion of the state, to send relief to the sufferers, and large quantities of clothing, provisions, medical supplies, etc., were collected and distributed to them, beside quite an amount of money.

At the state election this year, Cushman K. Davis was elected governor, by a vote of 40,741, over Ara Barton, who had 35,245.

When the Legislature of 1874 assembled, it promptly voted $5,000 for the temporary relief of the frontier settlers, and on March 2nd, a further sum of $25,000 for the purchase of seed grain. With the aid thus furnished, the settlers planted their crops again, but soon the ground was fairly alive with young grasshoppers, hatched from eggs deposited the year previous. As soon as these were large enough, they laid bare the region about them, then fell on other localities near by, and thus destroyed the crops in a number of counties again. The people were once more in a state of great destitution.

Gov. Davis addressed a circular to the commissioners of the counties not ravaged by the locusts, asking them to advance money proportioned to their property, for a relief fund. Contributions were also solicited from the people of the state. By the latter, $18,959 was raised, together with very large quantities of clothing and provisions, and forwarded to the sufferers. Even with this aid, there was much suffering the next winter.

The Legislature of 1875, immediately on assembling, appropriated $20,000 for immediate relief, and later in the session, $75,000 for the purchase of seed grain. Only $49,000 of this was used. The farmers again planted their crops, in hope, but early in the summer they were, for a third time, destroyed. The situation now became serious. All the state was beginning to feel the effects of this calamity, though the portions yet unharmed kept up an active collection and forwarding of supplies for the destitute. Without this benevolent work, the suffering would have been severe.

By the state census this year, the population of Minnesota was found to be 597,407. At the state election, John S. Pillsbury was elected Governor, by a vote of 47,073, over D. L. Buell, who had 35,275.

The season of 1876 saw the grasshopper devastations repeated, and over a larger area than before. The crops were more or less a failure, and again an appeal was made to the benevolent people of the rest of the State for aid, which was liberally and cheerfully responded to.

On September 6th, a daring crime was perpetrated at Northfield. A band of eight outlaws from Missouri, attacked the National bank in that town, with the intention of robbing it. The cashier and another citizen were shot dead, and two of the robbers killed by persons who hastily armed themselves. The rest of the desperadoes fled, and, after a chase of several days, four of them were surrounded in a thicket in Watonwan county, where one was killed, and three taken prisoners. The latter, who were brothers named Younger, plead guilty of murder, and were sent to the State's Prison for life.

The legislature of 1877 prepared an amendment to the constitution, providing for biennial sessions of that body, and the amendment was adopted by the people at the fall election.

Five acts were passed at the same session, relating to the grasshopper scourge. One of these appropriated $100,000 for bounties to pay for the destruction of grasshoppers and their eggs. [This was never put into effect.] A State loan, to raise the money therefor, was also authorized. In addition, townships or villages were authorized to levy a tax to pay similar bounties. The sum of $75,000 was also appropriated to purchase seed grain for those who had lost their crops, and $5,000 was voted for a special relief fund.

At the same session was passed an act providing for the redemption of the State railroad bonds, by giving for each outstanding bond surrendered, a new bond for $1,750, at 6 per cent. interest. The amendment was defeated at an election held on June 12th.

Early in the summer [1877] the grasshoppers appeared in myriads again, and began devouring the crops. The farmers endeavored to destroy them by fires, ditching, and catching them in pans smeared with tar. A day of fasting and prayer for riddance from the calamity, was appointed by the Governor, and generally observed throughout the State. Soon after this, the grasshoppers disappeared, and a partial harvest was secured in the region formerly afflicted by them. For five successive seasons, the farmers in that district had lost their crops, more or less entirely.

In the fall of 1877, Gov. Pillsbury was re-elected Governor, receiving 57,071 votes, over Wm. L. Banning, who received 39,117.

The legislature of 1878, appropriated $150,000 to purchase seed grain for destitute settlers, the amounts issued, to such, to be repaid by them. Over six thousand persons, in thirty-four counties, received loans under this act, enough to plant 223,727 acres. Most of these loans were repaid.

At the same session an act was passed, proposing a constitutional amendment, offering to the holders of State railroad bonds, Internal Improvement Lands, in exchange for such bonds. The amendment was rejected by the people at the next election.

During the year 1878, railroad extension, which had been almost suspended for four years, was renewed again with much vigor, and the material progress of the State was very marked, the western counties, especially, developing rapidly.

At the election in 1879, John S. Pillsbury was re-elected Governor for a third term, by a vote of 57,471, over Edmund Rice, who had 42,444, and other candidates, who received 6,401.

On November 15th, 1880, the Hospital for the Insane, at St. Peter, was partially destroyed by fire, and twenty-seven of the patients lost their lives, by burning, or in consequence of exposure and fright.

The census of 1880, showed a population in Minnesota, of 780,082. The assessors' returns give a valuation of real and personal property, of $268,277,871. These figures show a proud and gratifying condition of growth and prosperity in the short space of thirty-one years, since Minnesota began its political existence.

FORT SNELLING.

FORT SNELLING.

If a visitor expects to see a stone fortification, bristling with cannon and prepared for defense against intruders by land or water, he will be disappointed in Fort Snelling. If, on the other hand, he anticipates a pile of ruins overgrown with ivy, the remains of former greatness and strength, he will find himself as much deceived in that direction. No mark of cannon-ball or even musket shot exists. The fort has never sustained an attack. Some old buildings, it is true, are disused and look sadly forsaken, their places being supplied by new and more modern structures, still it would require some stretch of the imagination to construe them into ruins. One of the officers, however, jokingly suggested that ivy be planted around the tower that in old time guarded the main entrance, pierced for two tiers of musketry, and a ruin be made of it. This was a valuable suggestion, as in its present condition it performs no useful purpose and is an eye-sore to the visitor. Thus we see that the fort fails to attract, either by its military freshness or by a ruinous condition. It is simply a plain military post without display. It has, however, served a purpose, and is now the historical landmark for the State and the Northwest. Here was the first settlement, the first birth, first marriage and first death. Here was organized the first church, here was the first farming, first milling and first enterprise of every kind. Around Fort Snelling cluster all the early associations of the State. What matters it, if it has been a means of fraud on the national resources and a continual charge to the government? Had the paltry dollars been kept back, much would have been lost and the country made poorer not richer. As the skillful general in the hour of battle wastes ammunition, property of all kinds and even lives of men that in a less critical hour he would cherish, to accomplish a result superior in importance to money or lives, so the government is often compelled to submit to much waste to achieve great ends. The fort stands on the bluffs of the Mississippi, whose pure white sandstone affords a strong contrast to the dark water below, as well as to the green banks above. The wide gorge through which the Father of Waters brings down the floods of the North is here greatly increased in width, after receiving the waters of its confluent the Minnesota. Geologists tell us that once the Minnesota was the larger river, and that the Mississippi was its tributary. They tell us, too, that the Mississippi once traversed a different course, leaving its present channel at the mouth of Bassett's Creek and, taking a route through the Lakes Calhoun and Harriet, flowed into the Minnesota at some point between Shakopee and the fort. No historian, however, can confirm the testimony of the rocks, and the old fort cannot reach back far enough to aid in the research.

We are indebted to the politeness of Colonel John Gibbon, the officer in command, and to Adjutant Harding for the following history of the fort, prepared by S. R. Douglas, 2nd Lieut. 7th Infantry. This will give the facts of the fort as it was, and as it is, except the improvements of the past year. The improvements consist of a bakery, a commissary store house and a stable, added at a cost of about $9000. It will be necessary for us, however, to notice some improvements lately made in the reservation, in consequence of the establishment of the headquarters of the "Department of Dakota" at this point.

The "Department of Dakota" was created Aug. 11th, 1866, out of the departments of the Missouri and Platte, and Brevet Major General Alfred H. Terry assigned to command. May 18th, 1869, General Terry was succeeded by Major General Winfield S. Hancock. December 3d, 1872, the latter was succeeded by Brevet Major General, now Brigadier General, Alfred H. Terry.

The Department of Dakota now includes the Territories of Montana and Dakota, and the State of Minnesota. The object of the department is to facilitate the movement of troops, the distribution of supplies, etc., etc. The troops in this department are the Second and Seventh cavalry, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Eleventh, Seventeenth, Eighteenth and Twenty-fifth infantry. The headquarters have been located at St. Paul since the creation of the department, with the exception of a short time when they were located at Fort Snelling. During the year past, extensive buildings have been erected on the Fort Snelling reservation with a view to the establishment of the headquarters of this department there, near the military post. These improvements are still in progress, and, when complete, will add greatly to the beauty and usefulness of the reservation. Fourteen buildings built of cream colored brick, are nearly complete, and present a fine appearance. They differ in architecture and are large and elaborate. The headquarters building is a handsome structure.

So much has been said and is still to be said in this history in reference to Fort Snelling, that it has been thought best to insert the following report of the fort:

FORT SNELLING, MINN.,
December 11th, 1879.

To the Post Adjutant, Fort Snelling, Minn.

SIR:—Pursuant to instructions from the commanding officer, Fort Snelling, Minn., I have the honor to submit the following report, viz: In 1805, Lieutenant Zebulon Montgomery Pike, U. S. Army, was sent out to explore the upper Mississippi river, to expel British traders who might be found violating United States laws, and to make treaties with the Indians.

On the 21st of September, 1805, he encamped on what is now known as Pike Island, at the junction of the Mississippi and Minnesota (then St. Peters) rivers. Two days after, he obtained by treaty with the Sioux Nation, a tract of land for a military reservation, which was described as follows: "From below the confluence of the Mississippi and St. Peter, up the Mississippi to include the Falls of St. Anthony, extending nine miles on each side of the river." By this treaty, as ratified by the Senate, the United States stipulated to pay two thousand dollars ($2,000) for the lands thus ceded.

The reserve, thus purchased, by Lieutenant Pike, was not used for military purposes until February 10th, 1819, at which time, to cause the power of the United States government to be fully acknowledged by the Indians and settlers of the Northwest, to prevent Lord Selkirk, the Hudson Bay Company and others, from establishing trading posts on United States territory, to better the condition of the Indians, and to develop the resources of the country, it was thought expedient to establish a military post near the junction of the Mississippi and the St. Peters. Accordingly part of the 5th U. S. Infantry, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Henry Leavenworth, was despatched to select a site and erect a post. They arrived at the St. Peters in September (1819) and went into cantonment on the south side of it, near where the town of Mendota now stands.

The first monthly report was rendered for September, 1819. During the ensuing winter (1819-20) scurvy raged amongst the troops, referring to which, General H. H. Sibley, in his address before the Minnesota Historical Society, says: "So sudden was the attack, that soldiers apparently in good health when they retired at night, were found dead in the morning. One man who was relieved from his tour of sentinel duty, and stretched himself upon a bench, when he was called four hours after, to resume his duties, was found lifeless." In May, 1820, the command left their cantonment, crossed the St. Peters, and went into summer camp at a spring, near the old Baker trading house, and about two miles above the present site of Fort Snelling. This was called "Camp Cold Water." During the summer the men were busily engaged in procuring logs and other necessary materials for the work. All preparations were being made to commence building the new post, which was called "Fort St. Anthony;" the site selected being that of the present military cemetery. But in August, 1820, Colonel Josiah Snelling, 5th U. S. Infantry, having arrived and assumed command, selected the site where Fort Snelling now stands.

Work steadily progressed, the troops performing the labor, and on September 10th, 1820, the corner stone of Fort St. Anthony was laid with due ceremony.

During the following winter (1820-21), the buildings of the new post not being habitable, the troops were quartered in the cantonment of the preceding winter.

The first measured distance between Fort St. Anthony and Fort Crawford (Prairie du Chien), was taken in February, 1822, and was given as two hundred and four miles.

Work on the post was pushed forward with all possible speed. The buildings were made of logs, and first occupied in October, 1822.

The first steamboat, the Virginia, arrived at the post in 1823.

A saw-mill was built, the first in Minnesota, by troops from the post, in 1822, and the first lumber ever sawed on Rum River, was for use in the construction of the fort. Minneapolis now includes the mill-site.

The post continued to be called Fort St. Anthony until 1824, when, upon the recommendation of General Scott, U. S. A., who inspected the fort, it was named Fort Snelling, in honor of its founder.

In 1830 stone buildings were erected for a four company infantry post, also a stone hospital and a stone wall nine feet high surrounding the post. These buildings were not actually completed, however, until after the Mexican War.

Notwithstanding the treaty made by Lieutenant Pike, the Indian title to the Fort Snelling Reservation, did not cease until the treaty of 1837, which was ratified by the Senate in 1838, and by which the Indian claim to all lands east of the Mississippi, including said reservation, ceased.

In 1836, before the Indian title ceased, many settlers located on the reservation, on the left bank of the Mississippi.

On October 21st, 1839, the President of the United States issued an order, by virtue of the act of March 3d, 1807, "An act to prevent settlements being made on lands ceded to the United States, until authorized by law," directing the United States Marshal to remove squatters from the Fort Snelling reserve, and if necessary, to call on the commanding officer at Fort Snelling for troops to assist him in executing his order. Accordingly, on the 6th of May, 1840, a few of these settlers, having received the necessary notice, were forcibly removed by the Marshal, assisted by U. S. troops from the fort.

In 1837, Mr. Faribault presented a claim for Pike Island, part of the reservation purchased by Lieutenant Pike, in 1805. This claim was based on a treaty made by him with the Dakotas in 1820.

A military reservation of seven thousand acres, at Fort Snelling, Minnesota, was set aside by the President, on May 25th, 1853. In November following, the President amended his act of May 25th, and reduced the reservation to about six thousand acres.

The first map of the Fort Snelling reserve was made by 1st Lieutenant James W. Abert, Corps Engineer, in October, 1853.

Pursuant to the act of March 3d, 1857, which extended the provisions of the act of March 19th, 1819, authorizing the sale of certain military sites, the Secretary of War sold the Fort Snelling reserve, excepting two small tracts, to Mr. Franklin Steele.

The articles of agreement between the board appointed for the purpose on the part of the United States, and Mr. Steele, were dated June 6th, 1857, and were approved on the second day of July following. The reservation and buildings thereon were sold for ninety thousand dollars, one-third to be paid on July 10th, 1857, and the balance in two equal yearly installments. The first payment ($30,000) was actually made, July 25th, 1857, on which date Mr. Steele, in pursuance of military authority, took possession of said property. The troops were withdrawn from the post previous to Mr. Steele's occupancy thereof. Mr. Steele having made default in the two remaining payments, the United States entered into possession and occupancy of the reservation and post, on April 23d, 1861.

By act of August 26th, 1862, the Fort Snelling reservation was reduced and defined as follows :

"Beginning at the middle of the channel of the Mississippi River below Pike's Island: thence ascending along the channel of said river in such direction as to include all the islands of the river to the mouth of Brown's Creek: thence up said creek to Rice Lake: thence through the middle of Rice Lake to the outlet of Lake Amelia: thence through said outlet and the middle of Lake Amelia to the outlet of Mother Lake: thence through said outlet and the middle of Mother Lake to the outlet of Duck Lake: thence through said outlet and the middle of Duck Lake to the southern extremity of Duck Lake: thence in a line due south to the middle of channel of the St. Peter's River: thence down said river so as to include all the islands to the middle of the channel of the Mississippi River: reserving further, for military purposes, a quarter section on the right bank of the St. Peter's River, at the present ferry, and also a quarter section on the left bank of the Mississippi River, at the present ferry across that stream."

Mr. Steele presented, on February 6th, 1868, a claim against the United States government for the possession and occupancy by U. S. troops, of said post and reservation: which claim exceeded in amount the original purchase with interest.

By act of May 7th, 1870, the Secretary of War was authorized "To select and set apart for a permanent military post, so much of the military reservation of Fort Snelling, not less than one thousand acres, as the public interest may require for that purpose, and to quiet the title to said reservation, and to settle all claims in relation thereto, and for the use and occupation thereof, upon principles of equity." In pursuance of which act, the Secretary of War set apart for a permanent military reservation fifteen hundred and thirty-one and twenty hundredths acres, defined as follows:

"Beginning at a point where the south line of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section thirty-two, township twenty-eight north, of range twenty-three west of the fourth principal meridian, intersects the middle of the main channel of the Minnesota River: thence west to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of section thirty-two, town and range aforesaid: thence north to the northwest corner of section twenty, town and range aforesaid: thence east to middle of the main channel of the Mississippi River; thence along the main channel of the Mississippi River and the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers at the head of Pike Island and the middle of the Minnesota River, to the place of beginning, including the officers' quarters, barracks, &c."

A reserve of ten acres granted by the United States to the Catholic Church at Mendota for a cemetery, was also reserved. Mr. Steele executed full release of all claim whatsoever to this property, and for the use or occupation of all property sold to him per agreement dated June 6th, 1857; in consideration of which, the United States released Mr. Steele from all indebtedness on the purchase made by him, and granted and conveyed to him the remainder of the so-called Fort Snelling reservation (excepting one small tract), which is defined as follows:

"All of sections nineteen, thirty and thirty-one, and all that part of section eighteen lying south of Minnehaha Creek, and all that part of section seventeen lying south of Minnehaha Creek and west of the Mississippi River; all that portion of section twenty, lying east of the main channel of the Mississippi River, including the islands east of said main channel, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, and all that portion of the southwest quarter and of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-one which lies east or northeast of the main channel of the Mississippi River, and all those portions of sections twenty-one, twenty-two and twenty-eight lying on Pike's Island (so-called being the entire island, and all that other portion of section twenty-eight which lies east and south of the Minnesota River, except twenty acres, being the south half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section, the same being reserved for a Catholic Church and burial ground, where the church and burial ground now are; all that portion of the south half and of the south half of the north half of section thirty-two which lies west or northwest of the Minnesota River; all the above described lands being in township twenty-eight north, of range twenty-three west of the fourth principal meridian. Also all that portion of section thirteen lying south of Minnehaha and Rice Lake and east of the creek running between said

Rice Lake and Lake Amelia and east of said Lake Amelia, and all land in section twelve that may be included in said boundaries. All of section twenty-four lying east of the western boundary of said reservation ("reserve selected") and any portion of section twenty-three that lies east of the creek joining Mother Lake and Lake Amelia, and the east half of section twenty-five and the east half of section thirty-six, all in township twenty-eight north, of range twenty-four west of the fourth meridian. Also all that portion of section five which lies west or northwest of the Minnesota River; all of section six; all that portion of section seven which lies north of the Minnesota River, and all those portions of section eight and eighteen which lie west and north of the Minnesota River; all in township twenty-seven north, of range twenty-three west.

Also the east half of section one, and the east half of section twelve, and all that portion of the east half of section thirteen which lies north and east of the Minnesota River; all in township twenty-seven north, of range twenty-four west.

The action of the Secretary of War in selecting said reservation and buildings and conveying the above specified lands to Mr. Steele, was approved by the President on January 4th, 1871.

A stone prison was erected during the war of the rebellion, which is now used as a commissary storehouse.

The old stone hospital is now used for offices and laundress' quarters. The new hospital is just completed.

Fort Snelling is situated on a high bluff on the right bank of the Mississippi, in latitude 44 deg. 52 min. 46 sec. north, and longitude 93 deg. 4 min. 54 sec. west. It is an irregular shaped bastioned redoubt.

A wagon road runs entirely around the post, and is eight feet below the parade at the gorge, but gradually arrives on the same level at the shoulder angle.

The old post is almost enclosed by five buildings, and in form is nearly a rhombus, with a tower at each angle.

A new two-story barracks for six companies of infantry and sixteen sets of officers' quarters, was built during 1878. The east tower, stone wall, and old guard house, have been torn down.

The commanding officer's quarters have been remodeled during the current year.

The water is obtained from a spring about three-quarters of a mile from the post, by means of water wagons. Water is also obtained from the Minnesota River, being forced through pipes by an engine, into a large tank on the west side of the parade ground, but the water thus obtained is unfit for drinking purposes. During extreme cold weather the water pipes freeze up, rendering it impossible to refill the tank except during the open weather.

There is a post-office, a telegraph office and a railroad station at the post.

* * * * *

The nearest supply depots are at St. Paul, four miles distant from the post, by wagon road, and six miles by railroad. A bridge is building across the Mississippi River at the post.

Forage and fuel are obtained by contract. The post and company garden supply vegetables for the garrison.

The armament consists of two three-inch rifled cannon, with carriages, model of 1861. The present strength of the garrison is sixteen commissioned officers and three hundred and fourteen enlisted men.

It is impossible to obtain from the records of the post, the various expenditures for barracks and quarters, and repairs of same, for any definite period. All that I have been able to obtain is that thirty-five thousand dollars ($35,000) was appropriated for barracks and quarters in 1878. It is presumed, however, that the required information can be obtained at the Quartermaster General's office. The work, practically, (with few exceptions), has been performed by the labor of the troops, and the cost to the Government cannot be correctly estimated.

A site has been selected on the Fort Snelling reservation upon which to erect buildings for the Headquarters of the Department.

The records of the post are very incomplete. It seems, from all attainable evidence, that the records were removed in 1857, when the troops were withdrawn, and have not been returned. It further appears that these records had not been received by the Adjutant General of the army prior to July 18th, 1866. The last Board of Officers appointed to investigate claims on the Fort Snelling reservation met pursuant to S. O. No. 278 A. G. O. dated October 17th, 1870. I have been unable to find any general order referring to the reservation of 1853 or 1862, or referring to lands sold in 1857 and 1870.

The reservation of 1870 was announced in General Order No. 66, Adjutant General's office of that year, and was first surveyed by Captain D. P. Heap, Corps of Engineers, on April 13th, 1871. A new line for the southern boundary was run by First Lieutenant Edward Maguire, Corps of Engineers, on May 7th, 1877.

I respectfully submit the foregoing, believing it will cover a few of the points required.

I am, Sir, Very Respectfully Your obedient Servant,

S. R. DOUGLAS,
Second Lieut. 7th Infantry.

HISTORY OF HENNEPIN COUNTY.

CHAPTER XXXI.

INTRODUCTION—MOUNDS—INDIANS—EARLY MISSIONARIES—VOYAGEURS—EARLY EXPLORERS—MISSIONARIES—ONE OF THE INDIAN BATTLES—NEW MISSIONARIES.

When Livy wrote the history of Rome, he was compelled to admit that facts and fiction had become so intermingled that it was impossible to distinguish the one from the other. The legends of the past were such a mixture of facts, mythological superstitions and wild fancies that it was a relief to reach the restful word "constat" (it is admitted), and find that there was some ground upon which all agreed and could stand with firm feet.

Though the settlement of Hennepin county was not determined by the flight of birds, and though there was no barbarous uncle or remarkable infants, Romulus and Remus, still there are always, in the growth and settlement of any country, fancies and superstitions that take the form of traditions and bewilder the wisest heads. The machinery of the shrewdest Yankee can never so completely separate a mixture of wheat, cockle and pigeon grass that it can be said here we have now collected all the wheat, here all the cockle and here all the pigeon grass. The historian who delays his separating process until after harvest, must have a like experience and will find many a kernel of cockle among his wheat. By beginning thus early, before the first settlers have passed away, we must have a decided advantage over historians who grope among the rubbish of the past, sifting and screening to get the grains of fact as pure as possible. We can talk to-day with eye witnesses of the scenes we describe and hope thus to collect and preserve in almost unalloyed purity the treasures of history.

It must not be supposed, however, that the compilation necessary to furnish a history, such as is here proposed, is an easy task. Though the files of "the Press" afford a valuable thesaurus of information, still many choice items have never found their way to the columns of the newspaper and are accidentally unearthed by the historical explorer as he pokes about, as little noticed by the busy citizen as the rag picker, who with sack and hook is exploring the ash barrel in the rear of the merchants' store. Out of a vast amount of material gathered by the persistent efforts of these collectors, we purpose to furnish to the public such part as ought to be kept in mind by the present and future inhabitants of this county, and besides furnish entertainment to those who would simply while away an hour among the interesting things of the past, comparing the old with the new.

MOUNDS.

Although we are enabled to furnish facts that cannot be questioned in reference to the settlement of Hennepin county by white men, still there are, even in this new country, many old things and many mysteries that can never be explained - mounds built by a people whom we can never know, whose history can never be committed to paper. There are many mounds in this county and we here give them a passing notice.

Archaeologists have divided mounds into the following classes: "Altar or Sacrificial Mounds," "Mounds of Sepulture" (or burial), "Temple Mounds," and "Mounds of Observation." Besides these they have found mounds that do not admit of classification under any of these heads—mounds of curious shapes, having such forms as defy conjecture as to their use.

These wise heads have spent much time in conjecture, and much in measurement, with mathematical instruments, to determine data that will suit their fanciful theories.

It is not our purpose in this paper to discuss the antiquity of these mounds, or to speculate on their character. Little attention has been paid to the very numerous mounds found in the county. It may be safe, however, to class them all, at a venture, under the head of Mounds of Sepulture. The investigations made have revealed little except bones, and the evidence of great antiquity is not very clear.

This method of burial was certainly in use in recent times among our Indian tribes. Jonathan Carver, in a letter found in this volume, speaks of visiting a mound near St. Paul, in 1767, and witnessing the Indian burial. The custom of this imaginative people was to place the bodies of their dead upon high stagings, overlooking lakes, rivers or beautiful scenery, which they would enjoy if living, and leave them there, until at certain intervals, they collected the remains for burial in the mounds. Mounds in this county are found overlooking the water of all the principal lakes and rivers scattered through its various townships. As we can never write the history of the builders, we will leave the subject to future explorers and more fertile imaginations.

INDIANS.

After the Mound Builders come the Indians in the occupation of the county. If, as has been claimed, the Mound Builders were the Indians, they must have been earlier settlers of tribes now extinct or driven further south. The present tribes of Indians, at least, come after the Mound Builders. The fanciful names, wild natures and curious legends of this people, will always be associated with much that is poetic, grand and brave.

The early settlers of Minnesota, however, will hold the Indian in execration, and so, too, their children's children for many generations, in consequence of the massacre of 1862. We must, however, refer the reader to the chapters, "Habits of the Tribes" and "Massacre of 1862," found earlier in the volume.

EARLY MISSIONARIES.

It must be left to the imagination of the reader to picture many of the hazardous experiences and narrow escapes of the early missionaries, which can never be written. Their motto, "Ad maiorem dei gloriam," often exposed them to the tomahawk and scalping knife of the Indian, or to hardships and exposures under which they could but die. The indefatigable explorer is still finding new facts to add to the already rich store.

VOYAGEURS.

Again fancy may run riot among the stories of the "Voyageurs" who, making the love of adventure their highway to happiness, spent weeks and months in dalliance with Indian maidens. Facts in regard to these adventures are coming to the knowledge of the explorer among the curious things of the past. Fancy need not be very wild that discovers, on the streets of our great cities, half-breeds, bearing unmistakable marks of noble parentage. The fact that Frenchmen, frequently descendants from noble families, but of broken fortunes, cohabited with the Dakota squaws, raising up sometimes large families, is freely admitted.

These half breeds, while in many instances bearing the impress of nobility in countenances, having the high cheek bones and coarse hair of the natives, were often much more reckless than their sires. For, we are assured, that their adventurous sires frequently solemnized by a veritable marriage, contracts undertaken at first for the diversion of an hour. Their consciences, however, were rather elastic, for the existence of such marriages in their wanderings, seems not to have interfered with others, contracted at home, or with new ones entered into for convenience or diversion at some new camp.

The progeny belonged neither to the one race nor the other, and since they could not be acknowledged, cared for and educated by the enlightened partner to the contract without exposing him to shame, were left to become breeders of strife and contention among the tribes. This is one of the evils that proves that "The effect of contact of the simple minded savage with the deeper and higher life of the intruder is fraught with danger to both."

EARLY EXPLORERS.

Father Louis Hennepin, born in Flanders, in 1640, became a missionary to Canada, in 1670. He accompanied LaSalle in his exploration of the great lakes, the upper Mississippi and its tributaries. His "Description de la Louisiane" published in 1683, and a similar work published in 1697, are said to do more credit to his imagination than to his priestly character. In spite of the claim that they contain many falsities, both publications are esteemed by his supporters and the traducers of his veracity. In 1680, he discovered the Falls of St. Anthony, but robbed them of a beautiful Indian name, "Kakabika Irara," (severed rock, curling water) and substituted the name of his patron saint. Le Sueur and Faribault were also distinguished explorers coming soon after Father Hennepin. Next comes Captain John Duluth, in 1760, also Nicollet, Schoolcraft, Catlin and Featherstonhaugh. Accounts of these explorers will be found in another part of the work. They were valuable contributors to the information of their day and also contributed to the growth of the territory and subsequently, of the State by their glowing descriptions of its resources and healthful climate.

Jonathan Carver, in 1767, exhibited here, what many a genuine Yankee has done elsewhere, good speculating qualities. He was the first of the numerous land speculators. He roamed about much with a keen eye to the main chance, while he at the same time took in the scenery, the future probabilities, and ventured various prophecies for the future of the state, predicting that what is now St. Paul would soon have eastern and western communication. His notes and descriptions are valuable.

MISSIONARIES.

Passing over the experiences of the earliest missionaries, French Jesuits—of whom sufficient notice will be found in the preceding early history of Minnesota, by Rev. E. D. Neill—we shall notice briefly the missionaries who, though late, compared with Father Hennepin and the Jesuit missionaries accompanying the traders and voyageurs, are really early in the progress and settlement of the county. In a manuscript found at Fort Ridgely, and only partially preserved, written by James W. Lynde, one of the first victims of the Indian massacre of 1862, are found these words in regard to the missionary work: "It has been," says Mr. Lynde, "a ceaseless and untiring effort to promote their welfare"; also, "The influence of the mission among the Dakotas has ever been of a direct and energetic character. The first efforts of the mission were directed more to the christianizing than to the civilizing of the Sioux; but of late the missionaries, though their exertions in the former respect are not at all abated, have been more earnest in their endeavors to teach the Indians to plant and till." Mr. Riggs, however, in commenting on this passage, claims that the fruits of the teaching began to show in later years, but that the Bible carries with it the plow and the hoe, and that the missionaries were continually aiming to introduce industrial and mainly agricultural habits among the Indians.

Two brothers, who afterwards were ordained clergymen, S. W. and G. H. Pond, were the first missionaries to settle in the Territory. They came, in 1834, from Connecticut. They threw great zeal into their work, laboring equally for the good of the white man and the red. Their earnest lives, their Christian example and instruction came to exercise an important moulding influence on the moral and religious, and also on the material fortunes of the State. Setting out as they did, without the patronage of any missionary association, theirs may be called a purely Christian enterprise. S. W. Pond, by correspondence from Illinois, where he was located, with his brother, Gideon H., who still lived in the old Connecticut home, planned this private missionary work.

On the east shore of Lake Calhoun they built a log house. This was the first house erected by a private citizen within the county. They did the work with their own hands.

These men were simply laymen but had been well educated. They were soon at work pursuing acquaintance with the Dakotas, their purpose being to secure a thorough knowledge of their language and modes of life. Mr. Gideon H. Pond was eminently successful in this and obtained a very complete knowledge of, and was regarded as an authority on Dakota habits and language. With this in view, he sometimes attached himself to their hunting parties, making long expeditions with these wild tribes.

The Dakotas were an association of the fiercest tribes of North American Indians. The Jesuit missionaries had long before abandoned all attempts to tame their wild natures. Mr. Pond has given many thrilling accounts of the devilish scenes to which he was a witness in the battles between the Dakotas and Chippewas. Similar scenes, re-enacted in 1862, when white settlers were the victims of the tomahawk and scalping knife, have given the inhabitants of Minnesota a just abhorrence of the Sioux and their savage traits. Men are still living who have taken an oath, as sacred as the ancient oaths of conspirators, sealed with blood, to "Hunt and shoot Indians wherever they may be found." Though we may call such retaliation unchristian and even murderous, let each man take home the provocation and imagine similar outrages perpetrated on his own family, before he passes judgment.

Here is a scene of August, 1838, which was one of the introductory experiences that taught Mr. Pond the character of this fierce people. We give facts condensed from Neill's account.

Peace and friendly interchanges had taken place between the Chippewas, or Ojibwas, of Canada, and the Dakotas, or Sioux, of Minnesota, only a few months before the bloody acts, here reported, were enacted. This fact shows the treacherous character of the tribes and how little dependence could be placed on the smoking of the calumet. Mr. Pond had joined a hunting party, consisting, according to Indian custom, of braves, squaws and papooses. During the absence of Mr. Pond and a large division of the Indian party, several Chippewas came to the lodges, and were hospitably entertained and treated with Indian marks of respect, in accordance with the spirit of the existing treaty. During the night, the guests arose and scalped the Dakotas, even including women and children. Among the few to escape was a mother with her papoose. In the flight, the child perhaps saved the mother's life, for it received the death missile that might have proved fatal to her. She notified the other division of the party, and they quickly returned to witness a dreadful scene. Several had been killed, sleeping, while others had evidently engaged in the death struggle. Mr. Pond's eyes were here opened to the fierce character of the people whom he had come to draw by cords of love to embrace the "Gospel of peace." He assisted in digging a grave into which they gathered the severed limbs, heads and mangled bodies of the Dakotas. As he turned away, sickened, from the sight, it must have required a brave heart to hold him to his work. This act of bad faith began a series of similar atrocities, undertaken, on the one side or the other, by Chippewa or Dakota, in retaliation. In some of these attacks, the white settlers were also sufferers. Could Mr. Pond have looked forward, about thirty years, and seen the wholesale slaughter of 1862, perpetrated by these same savages, who were then friendly to him—could he have believed that, after the labors of many years, both by him, Mr. Riggs, Dr. Williamson and a host of others, sent here to preach the Gospel—that these tribes would, at a later day, break out with greater ferocity than ever, it seems almost certain that he would have abandoned his work as the Jesuit missionaries had done before him.

It seems as if our government would never awake to a realization of the fact that this anomaly of tribes, having governments independent of the central government at Washington, can never be productive of good, either to the central government, or to the wheels within the wheels, the tribes themselves.

Treaties were made with the Ojibwas and with the Dakotas in 1837. That with the Ojibwas was effected by Gov. Dodge of Wisconsin. Although, by the terms of this treaty, the right of the Indians to the land ceased, still they continued to roam over it or occupy it at will, uninterrupted by the government, since they offered no hostility to the whites. Their tribal wars, however, continued, causing at times great uneasiness and alarm to the few settlers. We give here a brief account of

of which Mr. Pond speaks, in order to emphasize further the ferocity of the tribes, and because the scene was laid in this county. The line of painted warriors marched over what is now the most populous part of the county, holding a war council within the territory now covered by the city of Minneapolis. It happened in July, 1839,

There was a Sioux village on the west shore of Lake Calhoun which, from its lodges, was estimated to contain about five hundred souls. Their old enemies, the Chippewas, were encamped in strong force further north, on the Rum River, near where Anoka now stands, and so, just outside the limits of the county. The distance between the camps was about twenty-five miles. The Chippewas were usually the aggressors in the tribal wars and were, according to our judgment, more tricky and more ready to break the treaties, which the whites had induced them to make with each other. In the present instance, a party of Chippewas, skulking in the vicinity of the Sioux village at Lake Harriet, encountered Rupa-co-ka-ma-za, son of the chief and nephew of Redbird, killed and scalped him and made good their retreat. The murderous act was at once reported at the village and the Sioux blood was roused to white heat for retaliation. Summoning their allies from neighboring villages, they met for a final council on the east bank of the Mississippi just above Nicollet Island. They there went through their Indian mummeries and, before nightfall, set out, four hundred strong, to make a night march and fall on their enemies at dawn.

The expedition was successful. They surprised and defeated a body of Chippewas, superior to them in number of warriors. The Sioux, however, lost heavily and Redbird and his son were among the slain. One squaw is reported to have attended the march of the avengers, to wreak on the enemy vengeance for the death of her husband. They returned to the village about night, the day of the battle. Seventy scalps were displayed on the pole in the centre of the village as soon as they returned. Night after night, they repeated the scalp dance. Mr. Pond, who lived on the other side of the lake, described their orgies as the most heathenish and demoniacal ceremonies. They made night hideous for the few white settlers.

It is humiliating to admit that this was enacted within the territory of the United States and under United States jurisdiction, within the memory of many men now living. How much more humiliating to admit that such scenes are repeated to-day among the many tribes whom it pleases our government to recognize as independent. The solution of the difficult Indian question ought to be, what of late has been offered to the Poncas, viz., the homestead right with an added provision, requiring the breaking up of these lawless bands, rendering every Indian amenable, like other citizens to the laws, whose protection he enjoys and whose bounty he receives.

NEW MISSIONARIES.

Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, M. D., a native of South Carolina and a graduate of Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, who had been practicing medicine in Ohio previous to his ordination as a clergyman, was sent out by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The Board desired to learn through him if they had any call for labor here. His report induced them to send to his assistance Rev. J. D. Stevens, a native of New York, and Alexander Huggins, a farmer, with their wives, also, as teachers, Miss Sarah Poage and Miss Lucy Stevens. This band of recruits arrived at Fort Snelling, in 1835, and during that summer Dr. Williamson organized a Presbyterian church at the fort. Rev. Mr. Stevens located and built his house at Lake Harriet, near the property of Eli Pettijohn. The rest of the party set out for the post of the trader Renville, and located at Lac qui Parle. The Ponds soon joined hands with the new comers and the work went on prosperously, having the support of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

In the summer of 1835, on the second Sabbath in June, the organization of the church at Fort Snelling took place, the first in Hennepin county. The communion was administered on the same day, for the first time in Minnesota. Twenty-two members received the sacred emblems. The missionaries from the lake, a few settlers from Mendota and some of the garrison of the fort made up this number. The elders of the church were Col. Gustavus Loomis, Hon. H. H. Sibley, then a young man in charge of the trading post at Mendota, A. G. Huggins and S. W. Pond.

The First Presbyterian church in Minneapolis, of which D. M. Stewart, D. D., is pastor, is a continuation or perpetuation of the old church at the fort. It was reorganized in Minneapolis May 22d, 1853, but dates its first organization at Fort Snelling, June 14th, 1835. In 1837, Rev.

Stephen R. Riggs, a graduate of the same college as Dr. Williamson, Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, came with his wife to strengthen the mission.

In the summer of 1835, Rev. J. D. Stevens, with the assistance of the Messrs. Pond, built a house in the woods on the west shore of Lake Harriet. In this house, in the autumn of that year, a daughter was born to Mr. Stevens, the first white child born in this vicinity. In the spring of 1836, Gideon H. Pond returned to Connecticut, where he remained a year, and returned an ordained clergyman. He remained at the Lake Harriet Mission several years after his return. Rev. Mr. Riggs, who joined the mission, as stated, in 1837, moved to Lac qui Parle in the autumn of the same year. Mr. Stevens remained only to the following fall, 1838, when he moved to Wabasha Prairie as Indian farmer.

The subsequent settlement of Hennepin county was principally from the good old New England stock by men who came to establish family altars and build churches.

New Englanders have been called the "Salt of the Earth" in whatever state they have located. They have given tone to society and modified the government, the religion and the politics. The men have been men of pluck and spirit, and the women strong minded enough to assert their position and maintain the right, and the rites they brought from the East. They have been the salt of Minnesota. In fact, to follow out the figure chemically, salts of all kinds, when diffused, or held in solution, tend to crystalize in certain fixed forms. So it is with the New Englanders. Their enterprise carries them to every state. They are found diffused through all societies. Wherever they settle, blood tells, principle prevails, they crystalize in New England forms. We have New England forms of society, education and religion, New England wives, mothers and New England homes. In the city of Minneapolis alone there are fifty-one churches and fifty-eight church organizations.

The ambitious strife for splendor in church architecture is as infectious, to say the least, as the more homely Good Samaritan doctrines which the vaulted roofs were built to disseminate. This infection has reached this new country. It exhibits itself in models of architecture, already completed, and in vast piles now rising to become rival structures.

CHAPTER XXXII.

EARLY SETTLERS—AGRICULTURE—NEW SETTLERS—THE RESERVATION—THE EQUAL RIGHT AND IMPARTIAL PROTECTION CLAIM ASSOCIATION OF HENNEPIN COUNTY, M. T.—GROWTH—NAMES OF THE OLDER SETTLERS—EXTENDING AND MULTIPLYING SETTLEMENTS—FINANCIAL PROGRESS.

Churches can not grow faster than population comes to build and support them. We must now see who the settlers were, that came in to build up the churches and establish industries to sustain them. The foundation of all industries is Agriculture. The cultivation of the soil is the only employment that is directly creative of wealth. The farmer takes a piece of land which yielded nothing without care. His care makes it productive of hundreds of dollars each year. In other words, he creates value from what was valueless, while every other industry contributes value to the country by changes which it effects in the material furnished. Minnesota has come to be acknowledged as the wheat growing state of the Union.

It will be interesting to note the growth of agriculture in this county, and see who the early settlers were, that came to develop it.

As migratory birds, flying both north and south over the State, stop here on their way from the north, and again, at the proper season, coming from the south, give us a call, so it has been with the settlers. They have dropped in on us both from the north and from the south. Curiously, the first settlers came, like the fall feathered visitors, from the north. They, however, only stopped to oil their plumage, and moved on south. Our subsequent settlers came mainly from the east, or farther south, and came to stay. We shall see who both classes were as the chapter advances. The early attempts at agriculture in Hennepin county were not characterized by those features that mark the beginnings in countries or states, bearing earlier dates of settlement. We cannot entertain the reader by descriptions of crude implements such as wooden plows, but must admit that our pioneers were blessed with many of the modern improvements of scientific farming.

We can only claim for the first, courage to try the experiment of farming in so inelement a climate, during so short a season as the summer was found to continue.

Lieut. Camp was called plucky, for testing it, but his first attempt proved successful. He made the experiment, in 1823, at Fort Snelling. His success was very important to the future of the State, for, though several years passed, before the example was followed by others, Philander Prescott, employed as Indian farmer, undertook farming, near Lake Calhoun. This was in 1830, and the first plowing, outside the fort. Soon after, others followed. The settlers from the north, came in 1826. A colony, forced from their first settlement, near Hudson Bay, by an unusual flood, settled under the protecting wing of Fort Snelling. This colony embraced only Swiss. The names of a few of them given are Perry, Garvais and Massey. Perry is described as a great owner of cattle, and was called, in consequence, the "Abraham" of this region. The purpose of government Military Posts seems to have been interpreted in one way by these settlers, and in quite another by the officers of the government. These settlers accused the officers, of the fort, of exercising arbitrary and tyrannical power, and thus frustrating one purpose of a fort, viz., affording protection and encouragement to settlers. This view was sustained by subsequent settlers, who, like these Swiss, wished to settle as squatters on the reservation. The officers of the fort, however, had definite orders from the United States Marshal, to remove squatters from the Fort Snelling Reserve. In accordance with this order, instead of fostering this colony, they subjected them to persecution, even proceeding so far as to burn their buildings. At last, in 1836-7, they were compelled to abandon lands where they had made their homes for about ten years. Mr. Perry moved to the present site of St. Paul, taking his cattle with him, and remained there until his death. Some moved to other points in this territory, and others to the territory of Wisconsin. Such treatment of emigrants who settled near the fort, operated to discourage rapid settlement.

NEW SETTLERS.

The arrival of Col. John H. Stevens, with a party of settlers, in April, 1849, was an important event. Col. Stevens was the first settler in Minneapolis. The party, consisting of ten, stopped first at St. Paul, but soon set out, on foot, to examine the Canaan of their hopes, determined to make this their future home. Dr. William Dyer, a young physician, who subsequently became distinguished in his profession, Alfred Courtwright, a successful teacher, and seven farmers, with the Colonel, constituted the party.

When they reached Fort Snelling, they, like all their predecessors, coveted the forbidden fruit—the land in the reservation. They pressed on, however, and were fully satisfied to settle at St. Anthony, where the land was open for occupancy. Only two of this famous party remained to witness the subsequent marvellous growth of this county, but from them we learn, the country charmed them, beyond any thing they had ever seen. They forgot their fatigue in admiration of the view before them. The inroads of civilization, at that time, were too few to change materially the primeval character of the scenery. On the government reservation, on the west bank, was the old mill, and here and there a log house on the east side. These were the only marks of civilization on the scene. The scenery about the falls seems to have attracted and delighted the visitors as much in its original beauty, as it does now, in its practical usefulness.

The Colonel could not, however, become satisfied so long as he saw the fair lands on the other side of the river. He and many others were impatient at the restriction on locating upon and improving these tempting lands. By some means, the restriction was removed in favor of a few, among whom was Col. Stevens, who then occupied claims within the reservation. The occupancy of such settlers, however, was like that of the early settlers, the Swiss, from the north, simply that of squatters. Col. Stevens built a log house in the winter of 1849, and occupied it, with his family, as soon as it was completed. He was, as stated above, the first settler in Minneapolis. A few months later, Calvin A. Tuttle, and soon Mr. Miller, leaving the east side, joined Mr. Stevens, and built houses near him.

In the spring of 1850, C. C. Garvey took a claim adjoining Col. Stevens on the south. The settlement soon had added to its numbers, Dr. L. Fletcher, John Jackins, Edward Murphy, Judge Bassett, Charles Hoag, Joseph H. Canney, and others. Their cabins were scattered over what is now Minneapolis, at intervals of half a mile or more. They had no churches. Their spiritual food was furnished by fireside instruction, unless, which often happened, Rev. Gideon H. Pond, or some one of the missionaries, preached at the house of Col. Stevens. Camps of Indians were often made in their vicinity, causing interest and excitement, even though they created no alarm. Still, they were always thievish prowlers, even when professing the greatest friendship. A nervous woman might often be startled by seeing the nose of an Indian or squaw flattened against the window pane.

THE RESERVATION.

It must be borne in mind, that, at this time, a reservation of land for military purposes, made by a treaty of the United States government with the Indians, in 1805, through Gen. Pike, existed, covering all the territory, from the junction of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers, the site of Fort Snelling, up to and including the Falls of St. Anthony, extending nine miles each side of the river. This extensive reservation included many thousand acres, much more land than was necessary for military purposes. It was seen, by explorers, to be very valuable, and covetous eyes were fixed upon it. Squatters took possession, as they have often done of land unsurveyed by government, trusting that when it came into market, their rights, as on lands not military, would be respected. In this, however, they were destined to meet disappointment. The government had thrown every possible obstacle in the way of their obtaining a foothold, from the first, and now proceeded with the usual formalities of sale. The plats were to be forwarded, on a certain day, from Washington, when the sales, of land therein described, would take place, at public auction, to the highest bidder.

Such sales, however, would have been ruinous to those who had occupied claims, and made improvements, in full expectation of the final right of pre-emption, and entry at the usual government price. There existed, too, a tacit agreement between the squatters and the officers of the fort, that, on the one side, there should be no interference with their occupation, and, on the other, there should be a division of spoils, in case the final decision should be in their favor.

Speculators were on the alert. They assembled in considerable numbers at St. Paul, intending to bid on the claims. This led to the following organization among the settlers for mutual protection:

THE EQUAL RIGHT AND IMPARTIAL PROTECTION CLAIM ASSOCIATION OF HENNEPIN CO., M. T.

The settlers on the reservation had no intention of sitting idly by and seeing their homes sold to intruders; neither did they purpose to bid on them, themselves, above the usual pre-emption price, one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. In this dilemma they called a meeting and established this Land League. This was an association of claimants on the reservation, organized to protect their interests by force, if need be. In a word, they proposed to do all the bidding, on the lands put up at auction, themselves, and to make it impossible for any venturesome speculator to put in a counter bid. The association numbered one hundred and twenty-five members. They appointed Thomas W. Peirce as bidder for all members of the league. The remainder were to stand around, to intimidate. If a speculator should not be intimidated, but force himself in as a bidder, the members were to surround him, and hustle him out of range of the sales. This plan was fully matured, and would doubtless, have been carried out to the letter; for the speculators found the squatters resolute, and sustained by public opinion, and it was more than intimated, that the militia, if called on, would, likewise, side with the settlers. The speculators appealed to Governor Willis A. Gorman, for support at the coming sale, and asked if the troops could be called out. The Governor promised the troops, but intimated that he should instruct them how to load. "How shall you instruct them to load, Governor?" asked a speculator. "Blank, by —!" replied the Governor. The speculators took the hint and the first opportunity to leave. It is probable, that this plan of bulldozing would have succeeded, had not another escape offered.

Fortunately, a better method occurred. The plats did not arrive from Washington, in time for the advertised sale, and it was, necessarily, postponed. Seizing the opportunity, afforded by this delay, a delegation of citizens was sent to Washington, to protest against the measure. Dr. A. E. Ames, Franklin Steele, Judge Meeker, H. T. Welles, and others, were delegates. They left home on the 9th of October, 1854. The commissioner of the general land office informed them, on application at his office, in Washington, that the lands must be sold to the highest bidder, according to the previous notice, to comply with the law. On appealing, however, to the Secretary of the Interior, a stay of proceedings was obtained, until the assembling of Congress.

Dr. Ames spent most of the winter in Washington, and on the 8th of March, 1855, started for home. He was successful in his undertaking. A bill passed Congress, in consequence of his endeavors, reducing the reservation, and allowing settlers the usual privileges of government land entries. Commissioner Wilson made Dr. Ames the messenger, to convey to the land office in Minnesota, the laws and regulations, under which the subsequent entries were made. The general government had learned, by a painful experience, and under similar circumstances, in New York State, where the settlers on the Holland purchase combined, and in Wisconsin, where the Fox River settlers combined, and in other states, that men united for mutual protection, must be respected.

The poor doctor came near paying dearly for his success. An Arctic storm caught him, just on the threshold of his home, in southern Minneapolis, and he nearly perished with cold.

The news of the reduction of the reservation had reached home before him, and a general rush for locations followed. In April and May, 1855, the settlers were able to "prove up" and obtain title to their lands. Thus ended, in a quiet and orderly way, what might have proved a dangerous and even bloody disturbance. Now begins

THE GROWTH OF HENNEPIN COUNTY.

The lands on the east side of the river, outside the reservation, had been taken, and the previous settlement was on that side. The rapid immigration, and the prospective value of lands on the west side, led to warm contests among the conflicting claimants. Litigations followed in great numbers, furnishing to lawyers fat fees, their first golden harvest. The rapid influx of 1855, was the natural consequence of the reduction of the reservation. The attractive lands on the west side, had long tantalized the immigrants as well as the older settlers on the river.

Before our dates advance further, let us look back at a few of the NAMES OF THE OLDER SETTLERS.

Lieut. J. B. F. Russell, acting Q. M. of the regular army at Fort Snelling, who built the old government mill and the house near by, in 1822.

B. F. Baker, long the principal fur trader, in what is now known as Hennepin county. He was a famous man in trade and in the chase. He built the stone part of the St. Louis House, near Fort Snelling, which was burned several years since.

Peter Quinn located here in 1823, and had supervision of the Indian farms. He came from the fur company of Labrador to Pembina and finally, to this county.

Samuel J. Finley, son-in-law of Quinn, came with him. Claims at St. Anthony, occupied by Peter Quinn, Finley and one Joseph Reachi, a Canadian voyageur, were, subsequently, purchased by Franklin Steele.

Next comes an important person, whose name has figured in the public affairs of this county, J. R. Brown. He took a claim near the mouth of Minnehaha Creek, in 1826. His was the first claim within the present limits of the county. He abandoned it, however, four years later, without much improvement.

Leaping over a few years, to 1837, we find two very important names, Franklin Steele and Martin McLeod. The former made a claim on what is now a part of the East Division of Minneapolis, and built a small log house near the corner of Second Avenue South and Main street. Two other log cabins were built the same year, one above and one below.

Martin McLeod came by the northwest plains, from the Hudson Bay colonies of Selkirk, to Lac Traverse. In company with him, in this rash expedition, were Capt. J. Pays, formerly of the Polish army, and Richard Hays, an Irishman. The party had, for a guide, Pierre Bottineau, whose name has become familiar, as a resident of St. Anthony. His two companions perished in the snow, near Cheyenne River, but he made his way, with the guide, to the house of J. R. Brown, having been five days without food, and twenty-six days without seeing any one except his party. The hospitable reception of Mr. Brown was fully appreciated, we may suppose, after the hardships of the previous twenty-six days on snow-shoes.

R. P. Russell arrived at Fort Snelling, in 1839. He made the journey from Lake Pepin, on foot, suffering much from want of food. Alexander Graham acted as his guide. Mr. Russell is still living. His present residence is on Hennepin Avenue, near Twenty-eighth street.

The development of Minnesota began in 1834. During this year, H. H. Sibley, came out as partner of the American Fur Company, to superintend their interests, from Lake Pepin to the Canada line. H. M. Rice, N. W. Kittson, Edmund Rice, D. Olmstead, and others, came soon after Mr. Sibley, and became identified with the progress and growth of the material interests of the state. Their names are found on the map of the state, attached to counties and townships, that have thus attempted to honor their memories.

The treaty with the Chippewas, which was effected by Governor Dodge, of Wisconsin, in 1837, ceding the pine valley of the St. Croix and its tributaries, to the United States, greatly accelerated the development which began three years previous. During the same year, also, a deputation of Dakotas, at Washington, ceded all their lands lying east of the Mississippi. These things opened the way to EXTENDING AND MULTIPLYING SETTLEMENTS.

Bloomington was first settled in 1851-2, by William Chambers, Joseph Dean and Reuben B. Gibson. They settled above Nine Mile Creek.

Eden Prairie was first settled in 1852, by David Livingston, Hiram Abbot, the Mitchells, and others.

Richfield was settled in 1852, by Mark Baldwin, Samuel Stough, and S. S. Crowell.

Excelsior was settled in 1853, by a colony of about forty families, under the guidance of George Bertram. Mr. Bertram selected the site, on the south side of Lake Minnetonka, in June of the previous year. After the planting of this large and prosperous colony, the settlement of the country surrounding went on rapidly.

Early in 1852, Simon Stevens and Calvin A. Tuttle visited Minnetonka. They are supposed to be its first white visitors since 1822. In that year, J. R. Brown, John Snelling, Samuel Watkins, and Mr. Stewart, discovered the lake while on an exploring tour through this part of the county. Mr. Stevens made a claim at this time, 1852, just below the outlet of the lake, and built the first saw-mill in Hennepin county west. During the year, James Shaver settled on Second Lake, and in December following, A. E. Garrison and a Mr. Robinson located a claim at the present site of Wayzata. These were the first settlers on its north shore.

In February, 1853, Stephen Hull built the first house at the Narrows. In April, 1853, William Lithgow settled near the upper Lake. He was drowned in the lake, in February, 1854.

Near the mouth of the Crow River, a settlement was begun in the fall of 1853, by E. H. Robinson and Mr. Baxter.

We have thus marked a few of the nuclei of settlement. Most of these settlers were from New England. Their early training and education had fitted them for what they were to encounter. Around these centres gathered the rapidly increasing population. Their sterling qualities and patient courage attracted settlers, as iron filings are attracted to a magnet. Thus the county has continued to fill up. In 1853, an estimate, probably a generous one, put the population at 2,000. In 1880, the census shows it 66,590. It is admitted that the growth of the State of Minnesota has been more rapid than that of any other state, not only in population, but in wealth, education, and internal improvements. Hennepin county is so situated that it necessarily partook largely of this wonderful growth. Indeed, the enterprising character of the settlers of this county contributed largely to the unexampled growth on the part of the state.

Much is often said of the power of that genius in certain men, which enables them to foresee future cities on barren lands, immense possibilities in things not yet developed. This power, however, must be valueless without the magnetic power to attract men, combine forces, and thus produce, almost create the result sought. The wonderful growth of Minneapolis is proof enough of the character of the men who have settled here, and the progress throughout the county has been largely due to the progress at Minneapolis.

The organization of the Hennepin county Agricultural Society took place in 1853. Its purpose was to encourage improvements in agriculture and stock in the county. The first officers, appointed September 7th, 1853, were, J. W. Dow, President; J. H. Canney, Secretary; Col. John H. Stevens, Chairman of the Executive Committee. Seconding these efforts for improvement, Col. Stevens imported some Devonshire cattle, at considerable expense, and little ultimate profit to himself. These efforts led to and initiated the improvements since made in methods of agriculture and stock-raising in the county.

FINANCIAL PROGRESS.

The taxable property of Hennepin county, in 1862, according to Governor Ramsey's message, was $43,529. In 1880, only twenty-nine years later, the official records show the assessed valuation, $38,183,474. From the records of 1879, are taken the following statistics: Wild Hay, tons, 26,168; Timothy Seed, bushels, 109; Apple Trees, growing, 127,038; Apple Trees, bearing, 20,995; Apples, bushels, 7,714; Grape-vines, bearing, 6,585; Grapes, lbs., 15,510; Strawberries, qts., 29,586; Tobacco, lbs., 913; Maple Sugar, lbs., 19,723; Maple Syrup, gals., 1,306; Sheep, number sheared, 7,326; Wool, lbs., 196,272; Cheese, lbs., 4,665; Bees, number of hives, 873; Honey, lbs., 14,233; Milch Cows, 6,658; other Cattle, 2,155; Hogs, 6,888; Horses, 7,717; Mules, 211.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

MILLS, MANUFACTORIES AND SETTLERS—MEANS OF TRANSPORTATION—NAVIGATION—RAILROADS—GENERAL DESCRIPTION—RIVERS AND LAKES—GEOLOGY AND MINERALOGY—SOIL AND VEGETATION—ZOOLOGY—CLIMATE—EDUCATION.

We have thus far named those settlers who came to make claims, and have thus become identified, more or less, with the agricultural progress of the county. Other inducements brought here another class of settlers, to build mills and inaugurate manufactories. The Falls of St. Anthony affords the greatest and most available water power in the United States. Besides, there are other minor falls in the county, utilized to some extent.

The first improvement, of any kind, in Hennepin county, consisted in the building of the old government mill and a house near it, in the spring of 1822. Lieut. J. B. F. Russell, built them, acting in his capacity of Q. M. in the regular army. This was the first mill in Minnesota.

In July, 1847, Wm. A. Cheever bought of Mr. Steele, on the east side, nine-tenths of the water-power. He made the purchase for Eastern capitalists, among whom were Robert Rantoul and Caleb Cushing.

Ard. Godfrey came from Maine, in the fall of 1847, to build Mr. Steele's mill. John McDonald and Ira Burroughs came at the same time, and were engaged in the same enterprise. Robert W. Cummings, Henry Angell, Capt. John Tapper, and William Dugas went up the Swan River to cut timber for the new mill. Daniel Stanchfield took another party and opened another lumbering camp, on Run River. In the spring of 1848, the mill was ready, and the sawing began. In September, two saws were running. The settlers now began building frame houses. The lumber, from the mills, helped on the settlement of the county.

An unusual freshet occurred in 1849, which swept about 6,000,000 feet of logs over the falls. Fortunately, Mr. Steele had about 2,000,000 feet on the upper streams, secure. These were brought down, and the mills continued running.

In 1852, Simon Stevens built the first saw-mill in Hennepin county, west, on the claim which he took at the outlet of Lake Minnetonka. The building of saw-mills was the initial step in the great milling interests of this county. In 1848, the enterprise of mill building took a start from the building of a dam from Hennepin Island to the east shore, and locating four saw-mills on it. In 1856-7, however, the two great incorporated companies, that now control the power, took hold of its development. "The St. Anthony Water Power Company" took control of the water-power, from the centre of the channel, on the west side of Hennepin Island, to the east shore. "The Minneapolis Mill Company" took control of the remainder, viz., from the centre to the west shore. The lumbering establishments have done more for the growth of Minneapolis, and Hennepin county, than any other industry. The future development of the county may depend on other manufactories, but the past must give the credit to lumber.

In 1860, four years later, the report for the whole state gives 562 manufacturing establishments, with $2,388,310, capital invested. In 1874, Minneapolis, alone, produced manufactured goods to the amount of $15,000,000. The last census, 1880, shows that Minneapolis had, in 1879, 406 manufacturing establishments, employing $8,615,250 capital, 7,723 hands, paying, in wages, $3,651,668 annually, using 13,972 horsepower, water and steam combined. The value of manufactured goods produced in 1879, was $29,473,121.

The Falls of St. Anthony furnish a water-power with a fall of 82 feet and a width of 1200 feet. It is capable of driving twenty times the present establishments. The companies in control, are ready to make liberal arrangements with parties bringing capital to develop further the capacity of the falls. Full statistics of the manufactures of Minneapolis will be found in another chapter.

MEANS OF TRANSPORTATION—NAVIGATION.

For several years after the rapid growth of Minneapolis began, the question of transportation was a vital one. Though St. Paul was as high a point as the large steamers of the Mississippi could reach regularly, through the season, it was found that boats could reach Minneapolis or St. Anthony, as that part of the city was then called, during a part of the season, in high water, and that boats of light draft might be depended upon for regular transportation, during the boating season. It will not be possible, in this outline history, to enter into the details of the discussion which continued so long over the point, whether St. Paul or Minneapolis should be regarded as the head of navigation on the Mississippi. We can only mention the facts in regard to the attempts to navigate the river to Minneapolis, and also, on the upper Mississippi, above the falls.

The first steamboat that came up as far as Fort Snelling, arrived at Mendota in 1823. During the same year, Major Stephen H. Long explored the Minnesota River, and the northern frontier. Beltrami, an Italian refugee, explored the sources of the Mississippi, and made a map of the country.

The first navigation of the river above Fort Snelling, must date from the arrival of the Lamartine, Capt. Marsh, at noon, May 4th, 1850. The land was made at a point opposite what we call "Bridal Veil." The Captain attempted to force his boat further up the river, but was unable to stem the current. May 7th, three days later, the "Anthony Wayne," Capt. Rogers, succeeded in forcing her way up, in spite of the rapid current, and landed at the old rafting place, near the present location of the lower or iron bridge. The arrival was justly regarded as a great event, as the question of transportation to these upper regions was beginning to assume a serious nature. Speeches were made, by Governor Ramsey and other leading citizens. The band played, and the occasion was duly honored. Later in the season, during the same year, the "Lady Franklin," Capt. Smith Harris, came up within a few feet of Spirit Island, "Turned gracefully about and dropped down to the landing."

Business men now determined to secure regular communication. They were liberal in furnishing means to forward the plan, and the result of their labors was the establishment of a line of steamers. On the 18th of July, 1853, the "Hindoo," a fine steamer from below, landed at Cheever's Flat, and afterwards made regular trips to this point.

The Minnesota River was also navigated by smaller craft. Insufficient as this means of communication would be in the present advanced stage of our growth, it performed an important part in assisting that growth.

A steamer bearing the distinguished name, "Governor Ramsey," was fitted up by Captain John Rollins, in 1850, to navigate the upper Mississippi. The trial trip seems to have been an eventful day in the colony. It took place May 25th, 1850. She ran up to Bantfield Island, about eight miles, then returned, and freighted for Sauk Rapids. Just at dark, she left the landing for her first trip. She ran about a mile, and tied up for the night. The next day, Sunday, she ran up to Sauk Rapids, discharged her cargo, and returned to St. Anthony on Monday. She made the return trip in exactly seven hours. After this, Capt. Rollins made regular trips, touching at intervening points.

RAILROADS.

The year 1862 was the era of railroads. The building and management of the railroads of a new country, is a very important matter, and one fraught with great danger to the interests of the country. The method used in constructing roads, is by furnishing private citizens or corporate bodies, capital obtained by bonding towns; or some method by which the country through which the road passes, is put under contribution to defray the expense. This puts the capital of many into the hands of a few. In case the trustees prove reckless or unprincipled, the country at large must become the sufferer. Minnesota has suffered greatly through railroad mismanagement. This has been true, not simply in building and equipping the roads, but in exorbitant tariffs. She has been loaded with debt, and her attempts at adjustment have loaded her with odium. This county has suffered greatly from this cause. Such evils are, however, self-correcting and Time, the great healer, will remedy all evils of the past, when such prosperity follows as has followed their construction here.

In 1862, the railroad from St. Paul to St. Anthony opened the county to railroad communication. To the making of railroads there is no end. We shall not attempt to enumerate, in this brief article, all the roads and the history of their construction. A simple statement of the receipts and shipments of the principal commodities, by the various railroads to and from Minneapolis, during the year ending May 31st, 1880, will show the importance of the roads to this county, and will further indicate the extent of the business of the county.

Total of all kinds of freight, 47,307 cars.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION, BOUNDARIES, ETC.

Hennepin county, as originally organized, had for its eastern boundary, the Mississippi River, and was held in the embrace of three rivers, the Mississippi, Minnesota, and Crow. These rivers formed almost the entire boundary. Carver and Wright counties, on the west, completed its boundaries. By a subsequent act of legislature, St. Anthony was attached. The length of the county, north and south, is about thirty-two miles. Its greatest breadth is about twenty-eight miles. Its area is 354,904.96 acres. The forty-fifth parallel of latitude passes through the middle. The summers are very warm, and hasten vegetation to maturity. The winters are very cold. It may serve to assist the mind, to compare it with other localities of the country, in reference to latitude and temperature. The forty-fifth parallel, which passes through the middle of this county, passes through Green Bay, Wisconsin, touches the extreme northern limit of New York, and forms the northern boundary of Vermont. The winter isothermal line, however, strikes considerably north of New York and Vermont. The snow-fall is light, but as thaws are infrequent, enough usually accumulates to insure sleighing through the winter. The same is true of this as of all northern climates; the winter is made jolly by extra sociability.

The surface of the country is undulating, though in no part mountainous or hilly. The county belongs to the southern slope of the state, and to the Mississippi valley. The elevation above the level of the sea varies from 663 feet at the crossing of the C. M. & St. P. R. R. on the Minnesota River, to 940 feet at Long Lake station. The elevation of the Mississippi River at Nicollet Island is 791 feet, and half a mile below the Falls of St. Anthony 711½ feet.

RIVERS AND LAKES.

This county is favored with abundance of water to supply all the functions that water ever fulfills.

First, for Navigation. The Mississippi has afforded navigation both above and below the Falls. The Minnesota permits navigation along the southern boundary of the county.

Second, Water Power. The immense power of the Falls of St. Anthony, alone, gives this county greater facilities for manufacture, than can be found elsewhere in the United States. There are minor water powers on the smaller streams and lakes.

The largest flouring establishments in the world, and other branches of manufacture, derive their power from these great falls. In early times travellers have expended their eloquence in descriptions of their beauty, but to-day, if we describe the features correctly, we must admit that the picturesque scenery has largely disappeared and given place to practical business. If we echo the sentiments of this ambitious people, we must dwell on the wealth in machinery and manufactures that now environs the falls, and not lament over the beauty that has gone. The description of these vast establishments is reserved for a subsequent chapter.

Third, Running logs to the numerous saw-mills.

Fourth, Beauty of Scenery. On the map we can count over two hundred lakes in Hennepin county. As we ride through the country, they seem innumerable. They are mostly clear and deep, with gravelly margins, and discharge their waters into the large boundary rivers, through numerous beautiful creeks and rivulets. The largest is Lake Minnetonka. Many of the lakes, on account of their great beauty, are places of summer resort.

Fifth, Health. The healthfulness of the state is thought to be due, to some extent to its large amount of water surface. Doubtless this, taken with its great distance inland, is a very healthful feature for Hennepin county.

The Crow is not regarded as a navigable river, though, at one time, Capt. Rollins made a run, with the "Gov. Ramsey," twenty miles up the stream. Its banks are low and wooded, presenting no marked features. The fine river scenery is on the Mississippi from the falls to Fort Snelling. Throughout this distance, of nine miles, the river runs through a gorge about eighty rods wide, with high, bare, rocky bluffs on each side. This is the grandest scenery of the Northwest. After the great tributary, the Minnesota, forms its junction, at Fort Snelling, the gorge widens to about a mile. The same rock-ribbed walls are, however, continued. If we pass up the Minnesota, we find the banks changed in their character. The bluffs, instead of being bare and rocky, are turfed and grown up to small wood. At the early settlement of the county, these banks were described as simply grassy, but the absence of wood was, probably, due to fires sweeping over them.

Geologists interpret the clayey deposit, west of the river, and other debris moved by the icebergs of the glacial period, as indicating great surface changes in the county, as well as in the volume and course of its rivers. The Minnesota was once the largest river, and the Mississippi flowed into it.

GEOLOGY AND MINERALOGY.

The general contour of the county is nearly level, with an undulating drift surface. In a belt varying from six miles to less than one mile in width along the Mississippi, the narrowest point of which is in North Minneapolis, the drift has been modified by the river, and presents almost a level surface, with a soil lighter and more sandy than in parts more remote from the river. Co-existent with the line which marks the limit of this drift, is that of the supposed line between the St. Peter sandstone and the Shakopee limestone of the Lower Magnesian formation. The belt included in this line has a nearly uniform flat surface, occasionally diversified by a knoll of hard-pan drift. Excavations made at different points included in this belt, never fail to reveal this hard-pan. Underlying this tract, is a laminated or flaky clay, which, when burned, yields an excellent quality of brick of that creamy color known as "Milwaukee brick."

The principal out-cropping rocks are the Trenton limestone and St. Peter sandstone. The Shakopee limestone crops out at Shakopee, on the opposite side of the Minnesota River, and is believed to exist, covered by the drift, throughout Hennepin county. It is known among builders as "Kasota Stone," named from the town where it is extensively quarried. It was called Shakopee limestone from its being first noticed and classified at the out-crop in Shakopee.

The Trenton Limestone is composed of three distinct layers—Upper Trenton, Green Shale and Lower Trenton. The Lower is the only out-cropping stratum in the county. The Green Shales are only found on excavating the drift. It is quite fossiliferous, and sometimes called, incorrectly, soap-stone. The Lower Trenton occurs along the bluffs of the Mississippi, at and below the falls. It is plainly seen in the quarry below the University. The upper stratum, eight feet, is impure limestone. Under this is a more impure stratum, though of similar character. Third, four feet eight inches Green Shales. Fourth, a little more than two feet of stone used for the roughest building. Underlying, the fifth layer, is the building stone, fifteen feet in thickness, used so extensively in the construction of the best walls in this and adjoining counties. This stone is too argillaceous (clayey) to be a reliable building material. Its weakness consists in the shales interlarded between layers of the limestone. This causes, also, a mottled appearance on the surface of the stone. The dark spots are shale, and the lighter colored, limestone. Sixth, two feet of blue shale is found. This last layer rests upon the St. Peter sandstone.

The fact that the harder limestone of the lower Trenton is super-imposed on the softer St. Peter sandstone gives rise to our water falls. The action of the water cuts away the underlying St. Peter, thus producing after many years' erosion, a great fall. The position of the layers also threatened at one time the destruction of the falls which they had previously produced. Little streams had so percolated the sandstone as to render it more than probable that the overlying limestone would soon be undermined, and the the magnificent fall be change into a simple rapid. Prompt and efficient measures on the part of capitalists, assisted by the general government, arrested the danger, and rescued the fall.

SOIL AND VEGETATION.

The soil of the county may be distinguished as of two classes: sandy soil, occupying the belt before described, near the river, and the grayish clay. The changes noticed in the vegetation, as one passes through, will indicate the change in the soil beneath. Crops of oak and aspen show the soil to be sandy, while the large sugar maples, American elms, bass and red oak point out the clayey soil. On the clay also grow the butternut, soft maple, bitternut, black ash, white ash, poplar, white birch and white oak.

The principal shrubs are hazel, smooth sumac, wolf-berry, thorn, elder, honey-suckle, kinnikinnick, wild rose, prickly ash, and speckled elder. Many water-loving plants abound along the numerous lakes.

Frost grapes, wild plums, American or native crab-apples, black and red cherries, june-berries, choke-cherries, prickly and smooth wild goose-berries, high bush cranberries, high blackberries, black and red raspberries, strawberries and cranberries are the principal wild fruits.

From the middle of the county westward the soil is clay, rolling and heavily timbered. East of this is the belt containing the small, sparse timber, covering the eastern part of Maple Grove and Plymouth, the western part of Minneapolis and the central portions of Richfield and Bloomington, with occasional tracts in Minnetonka and Eden Prairie.

The soil and climate favor the production of spring-wheat. This is grown to the exclusion of winter-wheat which winter-kills. The hardness of the kernel of Minnesota spring-wheat gives a superior quality to the flour of our mills. Other small grains, of ordinary farming, are readily produced. Sorghum has recently become an important article of production. The cultivation of fruits has been proved practicable although it was long supposed impossible to mature choice varieties. Peter M. Gideon, of Excelsior, has done more than any other man for the improvement of varieties of fruits. It can almost be said that he has done all in this county. He struggled for a long time unaided, but now has charge of a "State Experimental Farm." Trees were set out on this farm in the spring of 1878. There, with the patronage of the state, Mr. Gid-con will continue his experiments. His purpose is to produce an apple that is a long keeper, and grown on a hardy stock. It is impossible in this article to describe his methods. For hardiness, necessarily the first requisite in this climate, he depends on the crab stock. Some valuable varieties have already been obtained.

ZOOLOGY.

On the same grounds that Minnesota has been called the sportsman's state, this county might be called the sportsman's county. Its lakes, prairies and forests are the natural haunts of the many varieties of game with which the state abounds. Gray and prairie wolves, bears, wild cats, raccoons, foxes, deer, rabbits, squirrels, gophers found in such abundance throughout the state, as to cause it to be called the "Gopher State") and wood chucks, were all found in abundance, within a few years, and many of them abound now. Some water animals, sought for their furs, are trapped. The otter, mink, beaver and muskrat furnish the most valuable pelts. Grouse (prairie-hens), partridges, and pigeons, are the principal feathered game, except in the season when ducks, brant and wild geese abound.

This county shares with the state in a multitude of small birds of brilliant plumage. Some varieties are peculiar to this vicinity. They delight the eye and ear of the tourists, who frequent the charming lakes, woods and streams. The lakes abound in the usual varieties of fish. Some interest has been shown in adding new and improved kinds.

CLIMATE.

The climate of this county and those immediately adjoining, gave to Minnesota at an early day, its reputation for health and made it the asylum for invalids. No other county in the state is better situated or more favorably known for health. It is very beneficial to invalids suffering from pulmonary diseases. Instances where this climate does not effect a cure for such invalids, can usually be explained by the fact that the disease was allowed to progress too far before trying the remedy, or some other circumstance, peculiar to the patient and not chargeable to the climate, interfered.

EDUCATION.

The first settlers of this county brought with them from New England, not only the fear of God, which lead them to build churches, but, as the natural concomitant of the Bible is education, they brought in their hearts the desire for schools and at once set about educational work.

Refinement and social culture were as essential to them as the vital air. It has been said, and truthfully, that the tendency of western life is verging toward barbarism. Here, however, culture and refinement followed closely on the heels of settlement. It is already abreast of the boasted East in public education.

It can be safely said, that the whole state, but pre-eminently Hennepin county has made greater progress in education during the last twenty-two years than any other state or county in the United States. The first school taught was by Miss Electa Bachus, in the summer of 1849, in a small shanty on the east side. This was under territorial jurisdiction. In the fall of that year, the first school house was built in the county.

The next teacher, was Miss Nancy E. Miller. The first teacher on the west side, was Miss Mary A. Scofield. The first male teacher, was Reuben Clark. Thirty years only have passed since one little school was all and sufficient for the wants of the community.

The following is extracted from the official report of 1879, for the sake of contrast. School districts, 110; school houses, 130; graded schools outside of Minneapolis, 5; scholars enrolled, 10,245. A larger proportion of children of school age attend school in this than in any other state.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

ORGANIZATION OF COUNTY—OFFICIAL RECORD —JUDICIAL RECORD LIST OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

The bill which fixed the boundaries of this county, passed the Territorial Legislature in 1852, and was approved March 6th, of the same year. It originally formed a part of Dakota county.

The bill provided that "So much of Dakota county as lies north of the Minnesota River, west of the Mississippi, and east of a line commencing at a place known as the Little Rapids, on said Minnesota River; thence in a direct line north by west, to the forks of Crow River; thence down said river to its junction with the Mississippi." The bill further provided that Hennepin county be attached to Ramsey, for judicial purposes. "Until further provided for." For elective purposes it was to remain, as then, in conjunction with Dakota county, so far as related to the election of a councillor and two representatives, until the next apportionment.

Section 3 of the bill provided that, "When the treaty of Mendota, concluded with the Dakota Indians, should be ratified by the United States Senate, the county of Hennepin shall be entitled to elect, at the next general election, such county and other officials as the organized counties were entitled to." Section 4 provided that the county commissioners elected, should be authorized to establish the county seat temporarily, "Until the same is permanently established by the legislature, or authorized votes of the qualified voters of said county."

The county was formally organized on the 21st day of October, 1852. Eleven days previous, an election was held at the house of Col. John H. Stevens, at which 73 votes were polled, representing about one-half of the voters residing in the county. Another voting place was fixed at Mendota, for the accommodation of those living along the Minnesota River. Previous to the election, a mass-meeting was held, at which the following ticket was nominated, irrespective of party:

Representative, Dr. A. E. Ames; County Commissioners, Alex. Moore, John Jackins, Joseph Dean; County Treasurer, John T. Mann; Register of Deeds, John H. Stevens; District Attorney, Warren Bristol; Sheriff, Isaac Brown; Coroner, David Gorham; Judge of Probate, Joel B. Bassett; County Surveyor, Charles W. Christmas; Assessors, Edwin Hedderly, Eli Pettijohn, S. A. Goodrich; Road Commissioner, George Parks. The entire ticket was elected without opposition, and the parties named became the first officers of Hennepin county. They were nominated and elected without effort on their part, and in many instances, against their expressed wish. The first meeting of the Board of County Commissioners was held on the 21st of October, 1852, Alexander Moore being chosen chairman. Dr. H. Fletcher was the first Justice of the Peace before the county organization, and Edwin Hedderly the first Justice after the county organization. Politically, little need be said of Hennepin county. In its earlier days, and until the organization of the Republican party, the contest for political preferment, was between the old Whig and Democratic parties, the latter usually being in the ascendancy. Now, in consequence of the death of some of the giants in the land, the masses could no longer be held to the old lines. The Whig party died with Clay. Political chaos throughout the country followed. Down went Whig and Know-Nothing, and out of the ruins was built the Republican party. It is not important to give the position of politicians in this state during the political chaos. Since, the Republican element has, with a few exceptions in local politics, been the ruling factor. In State and National politics the county is largely Republican.

JUDICIAL RECORD.

The scales of justice were first poised in the old government mill, on the second Monday in July, 1849, by Hon. Bradley B. Meeker, Circuit Judge by appointment of Gov. Ramsey; Taylor Dudley, clerk of the court, Franklin Steele, foreman of the grand jury. The session lasted one week. The first session after the organization of the county, was held in a small house afterwards occupied by Anson Northup. This was in 1852. Sweet W. Case was clerk of the court, Dr. Alfred E. Ames, foreman of the grand jury. The session was short, only two or three indictments being found, and these quashed by the judge. Following this, in the order given, were Judges A. G. Chatfield, M. Sherburne, Chas. E. Flaudrau, James Hall, Edward O. Hamlin, Chas. E. Vanderburgh, and A. H. Young. Judge Vanderburgh was elected in 1859, and has since filled the office. Should he continue until the expiration of his present term, it would make for him twenty-eight consecutive years. Judge Young was appointed Judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Hennepin county, in May, 1872, by Gov.

Austin. At the fall election following, he was elected to the office for the term of five years. In 1877, was elected Judge of the Fourth Judicial District, under an act of the legislature allowing two or more judges in one district.

CHAPTER XXXV.

WAR RECORD OF HENNEPIN COUNTY TAKEN FROM THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S REPORT, AFTER THE SAME HAD BEEN CAREFULLY SCRUTINIZED AND CORRECTED BY RESIDENT MEMBERS OF THE SEVERAL COMPANIES.

The date of the organization of the First Regiment of Minnesota Volunteers, April, 1861, will indicate the enthusiasm of the state in responding to the call of the country for defenders. April 12th had heard the first gun at Fort Sumter; April 13th had witnessed the surrender of the fort; April 14th, Abraham Lincoln had issued his famous proclamation calling for 75,000 men, more than enough, we all felt sure, to wipe out every vestige of rebellion.

Minnesota, one of the youngest daughters in the family of states, comes to the front in April, and organizes her first regiment. Indeed, this regiment did not furnish places enough for men, wishing to enlist as privates, to show their patriotism. The country was electrified by seeing this regiment of stalwart men, moving to the front in June, coming from a state of which many citizens had not even heard, whose record was yet to be made. This young state was not only quick to respond to the demand for men, under the enthusiasm that pervaded the country during the earlier stages of the war, but she held out to the last with her quota, through all the dark days that followed.

When it was ascertained that 75,000 men would not accomplish it, successive calls were made—300,000, 500,000, 750,000, etc., until, at last, a grand total of nearly 3,500,000 had been furnished to do what it was anticipated a handful of men could accomplish in a few weeks.

Minnesota followed up these successive demands, until the very Indians thought her territory was nearly depleted of fighting men, and assailed her unprotected settlers. War was thus brought to her own doors, in forms more dreadful than Antietam or Gettysburg. The records will show how well the state behaved under the fiery ordeal of war. It belongs to us only to transcribe to these pages the roll of honor of the county, hoping to assist in immortalizing the names of the patriotic and brave defenders of our flag. Here they are, rank and file. Honor them all.

RICHFIELD.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION —EARLY SETTLEMENT—
CIVIL HISTORY —SCHOOLS—CHURCHES—MILL-ING—SHOPS —STORES —HOTELS —BIOGRAPHI-CAL.

This township is situated in the south-eastern part of the county, and borders on the east on both the Mississippi and Minnesota Rivers. The northern and central portions of the town are rolling, and the southwestern undulating. The central portion of the town is traversed by the sandy belt, which produces crops of small oaks and aspens. The remainder of the rolling land is well timbered with elm, bass, maple, etc., trees of a larger growth. The south-eastern part, bordering on the Fort Snelling Reservation, and extending west as far as Wood Lake, is a beautiful prairie. The town contains nearly thirty lakes, many of them of great beauty. Most prominent among them, for size and scenery, are Amelia and Wood Lakes. Aside from the Mississippi and Minnesota Rivers on the east, there are two beautiful streams, Minnehaha and Nine Mile creeks which flow through the town. Minnehaha Creek, taking its rise in Lake Minnetonka, flows easterly through the towns of Minnetonka, Minneapolis, and Richfield receiving the tributary waters of lakes Mother, Amelia and Rice, thence south-easterly, tumbling all its laughing waters over a precipice, forming Minnehaha Falls, and flows into the Mississippi River, above Fort Snelling. These waters, but especially Minnehaha Creek, are very beautiful, and a great attraction to tourists. Nine Mile Creek flows across the south-western part of the town into the Minnesota.

The Northern Boundary of the township was originally two miles north of the present line, running in a straight line from Minnetonka to the Mississippi. This line was altered by act of legislature in 1867. A narrow strip was taken from its entire northern boundary and attached to the township of Minneapolis. It was two miles wide at the west and so continued until it intersected Minnehaha Creek at the outlet of Rice Lake, and followed the course of that stream to its junction with the Mississippi.

On the east, the Military Reservation, by its original boundaries, included more than half of this township. The dividing line extended west of Lake Harriet. By the first reduction, November, 1853, the lines were so contracted that the western line passed through lakes Mother and Amelia. It includes by its present boundaries only about one thousand acres, and allows the town several miles on the great rivers.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In consequence of its intimate relations to the fort and its once forming part of the reservation, the history of Richfield must begin from the earliest records of explorers, before the settlement of the state. We refer to previous chapters in the work for this part of the history, simply reminding the reader here, that a few of the Swiss settlers, from the Hudson Bay territory of Lord Selkirk, under the leadership of Louis Massey, settled here in June, 1827, but were forcibly removed by orders from the government. No relic now indicates their occupancy. The leader of the party, Louis Massey, is still living at Hudson, Wisconsin, at an advanced age. The first claim in the town was that made on Minnehaha Creek by Hon. J. R. Brown. Louis Godfrey was the first settler after the territorial organization. He was a Frenchman and his wife a Chippewa. He lived on section five, where widow Darcy now resides. During the Sioux massacre he fled to Mendota, and died there in 1878. The date of his settlement is uncertain, but it is known to have been prior to 1852. Samuel Stough made a claim in 1852, and resided here until his death, in 1875. William Finch settled here in 1853, and in 1878 removed to California. He lived where Mr. Place now resides. James A. Dunsmoor settled in 1853, removed to California, and died in 1871. Philander Prescott, who has been mentioned as arriving at Fort Snelling in 1819, and as Indian farmer in 1830, settled in Richfield, near where the Richfield Mills now are, about 1852. He was interested in the building of the mills, and prominent in public affairs until his death. He was killed, in the massacre of 1862, by Little Six and Medicine Bottle. He was running his horse for life, hoping to reach Fort Ridgely. The murderers were afterwards hung.

Many other settlers arrived in 1853. C. W. Harris, who died in 1868 at Minneapolis; Henry Townsend and his two sons, Henry and Robert; Mr. Draper, John McCabe, Mr. Duggan, and others. From this date on, settlers arrived very rapidly, until now it is one of the most populous and prosperous towns in the county. The present population is 1505. The town has 22,988 acres of land. The assessed valuation of the same for the year 1869, was $150,104; 1875, $532,530; 1880, $702,670. Personal property, 1869, $49,336; 1875, $98,329; 1880, $119,614. Total taxes in 1869, $3,988; 1875, $8,497; 1880, $7,818. Horses over two years old, 1869, 333; 1875, 491; 1880, 493. Cattle over two years old, 1869, 655; 1875, 856; 1880, 790. Sheep, 1869, 493; 1875, 851; 1880, 1816. Hogs, 1869, 184; 1875, 255; 1880, 646. Bushels of wheat, 1869, 49,124; 1875, 43,425; 1880, Acreage, 5,698.

CIVIL HISTORY.

The annual Town meetings were held at the school house, near Richfield Mills, until 1871, A. Keith was moderator at the first meeting held May 11th, '58, with Alonzo Sawtelle, Clerk. In the first call for a meeting the name of "Richland" did not seem to please the people, and the first vote taken was for the new name of Richfield. The Post Office had been called Harmony until Richfield was adopted. The Supervisors elected were Joel Brewster Chairman, Richard Strout, and Jesse Richardson; Town Clerk, Alonzo Sawtelle; Assessor, George Odell; Overseer of the Poor, James A. Dunsmoor; Justices, R. L. Ratholomew, Geo. W. Irwin; Constables, Geo. W.

Townsend and Wm. R. Moffatt; Collector, Geo. W. Townsend; Overseer of Roads, A. Keith. The first Supervisors meeting was held June 3, 1858, and the town divided into road districts. June 14th, 1858, $400 was voted for town expenses. September 30th, 1858, Wm. Finch elected county Supervisor. April 5th, 1859, voted $100 for town expenses. Supervisors elected, Geo. Odell, C. L. W. Maynard, W. W. Woodward. April 3, 1860, voted $400 for town expenses and authorized the building of Pounds. Supervisors, Geo. Odell, G. W. Irwin, J. N. Richardson.

April 2, 1861, voted $150 for town expenses and $600 for schools. Supervisors, Geo. Odell, R. R. Bryant, T. W. Peirce. W. W. Woodward appointed Superintendent of Schools.

April 1, 1862, levied 1½ mills per dollar for town expenses. Supervisors, Geo. Odell, W. W. Woodward, R. Robinson.

April 7, 1863, levied 2½ mills per dollar for town expenses. Supervisors, W. W. Woodward, A. H. Baston, G. W. Brown.

January 30th, 1864, call for a special meeting, which was held February 10th, and by a vote of 64 to 59 raised $8000 to pay soldiers' bounties and that each one should receive $150, but at a special meeting March 23, the amount was reduced to $125.

April 5th, 1864, levied 1½ mills for town expenses, and 16 mills to pay interest on bounty bonds, and raised the per diem of town officers from $1.00 to $1.50. Supervisors, A. H. Baston, G. W. Townsend, W. G. Moffatt.

CHURCHES.

The town has four church organizations; Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, Episcopal and Catholic.

The Methodist denomination began its existence under the guidance of Rev. Mills, who held the first services in a granary, owned by Henry Townsend. Services were next held in the school house near Wood Lake, about a quarter of a mile south of where the Baptist church now stands. It was called "Harmony Mission" until 1864.

when it was included in the "Minneapolis Circuit." In the fall of 1865, a change was made, and a new circuit formed, consisting of appointments at Excelsior, Eden Prairie, Chanhassen, and Harmony, or Wood Lake, as it was sometimes called. In 1869, the neat wooden church was built on section 22. A parsonage and cemetery were also located on the church grounds.

MILLING.

The only manufacturing establishments are the Flouring Mills. These are the "Richfield Mills" and the "Edina Mills." The former was built in 1854, by Philander Prescott, Judge Moffatt and Eli Pettijohn. The whole property soon came into the possession of Mr. Prescott, and he remained sole owner until his tragic death in 1862. It is situated on Minnehaha Creek, at the crossing of the Bloomington road. The property has passed through the hands of various owners to the present proprietors, Pratt & Baird. It is called the best landscape garden in the State. A drive-way, starting from the main entrance, follows around near the sides in a circular form. The plat inclosed by the road-way is cultivated with beautiful flowers and foliage plants in beds, with serpentine walks. In this inclosure is a large arbor with seats and a booth, where refreshments may be obtained. The space outside the drive is also laid out with handsome plants. BLOOMINGTON.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—FIRST SETTLEMENT—
CIVIL HISTORY—CHURCHES—SCHOOLS—MILLS, SHOPS, ETC.—THE FIRST SETTLERS—BIO-GRAPHICAL.

The town of Bloomington occupies the south-eastern part of the county, lying on the Minnesota River, which forms its entire eastern and southern boundary. A strip of meadow, varying from twenty rods to a mile in width, skirts the river the whole length of the town. The bluffs are, therefore, back from the river, but here and there stretch out bare, sandy points to the meadow below. Beautiful rolling prairies extend back from the bluffs over the whole township. The bluffs are not usually bare, but are covered with turf and timber, while the bottom lands, at the foot, have in some parts large areas of water. The sand belt passes through the middle of the town, exhibiting its usual characteristics, viz., less productive soil, and timber of smaller or lighter growth. Heavier timber is found in the northwest. Nine Mile Creek has high, sandy bluffs covered with brush or timber. The small lakes on the prairie east of Nine Mile Creek are now very shallow, without outlet, and appear to diminish year by year. They will doubtless wholly disappear. Lakes Ryland and Bush better deserve to be classed among the beautiful lakes of the town. The only stream of any size within the limits of the town is Nine Mile Creek, which enters the town near the northwest corner, takes a southeasterly direction, and flows into the Minnesota River.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

Peter Quinn was the first white man to settle and cultivate the soil of this town. He was appointed Indian farmer, in accordance with a treaty with the Indians, and began his work, in 1

1843, on land now owned and occupied by James Davis, on section 14. He remained here until 1854. Rev. Gideon H. Pond, the missionary among the Dakotas, moved here in 1843, and he and his Indian bands pitched their tents on the banks of the Minnesota River, where Mrs. Pond now lives. He lived here until his death, which occurred in 1878. Martin McLeod settled here in 1849, where his son, Walter S. McLeod, now resides, at the mouth of Nine Mile Creek. Joseph Dean came next. He arrived in the winter of 1851-2. He had obtained a charter for a ferry which he proceeded to establish in company with William Chambers. He built the log house which still stands near the ferry.

William Chambers also came in 1851-2; made a claim, now the farm of William Chadwick, and joined Mr. Dean in the ferry enterprise. He died here in 1868.

In 1852, the following party came from Illinois and made claims near the river, on the western prairie, S. A. Goodrich, A. L. Goodrich, Orville Ames, Henry and Martin S. Whalon, and Edwin Ames Sr. Not one of those men is now living in Bloomington.

We are indebted to Mrs. Rebecca Goodrich for the following information in regard to these worthy pioneers: S. A. Goodrich died in Bloomington, in 1865. A. L. Goodrich sold his farm in 1879, and now resides in Minneapolis. Orville Ames and M. Whalon died in the service of their country, the former in hospital and the latter, it is supposed, in rebel prison. Henry Whalon moved to Princeton, Minnesota, soon after his settlement, but returned a few years later and died at Fort Snelling. Edwin Ames died on his claim soon after his arrival, and his widow perfected the title. Quite a number settled on the prairie east of the creek in 1853. From this time on the town was rapidly settled.

The following statistics will show the population of the town and the rapidity with which it has advanced in wealth.

The population, by census of 1880, was 820. The town has 23,205 acres of land; the assessed valuation of the same for the year 1869, was $103,693; for the year 1875, $298,163; and for the year 1880, $460,538. The assessed valuation of personal property for the year 1869 was $41,068; 1875, $47,775; 1880, $52,320. The total amount of taxes raised in 1869 was $3,574; in 1875, $4,245; in 1880, $3,718. Number of horses over two years old, in 1869, 287; in 1875, 353; in 1880, 403. Cattle over two years old, in 1869, 581; in 1875, 752; in 1880, 592. Sheep in 1869, 309; in 1875, 300; in 1880, 363. Hogs in 1869, 150; in 1875, 159; in 1880, 401. Bushels of wheat in 1869, 47,884; in 1875, 48,055; in 1880, acreage 5,109.

Special meeting, August 1, 1864. A resolution was lost by 23 to 9, providing for the raising of money by town bonds to pay soldiers' bounties to fill the Bloomington quota under the President's call for 500,000 men. Owing to the action of the electors, the town officers were powerless to act, and a number of citizens, among whom were Wm. Chadwick, John Layman and T. Peteler, gave their individual notes to the First National Bank of Minneapolis, as security for money advanced to pay the bounties of soldiers to fill the quota.

Special meeting, January 3, 1865, at the house of A. G. Gillet, voted to issue town bonds to pay bounties to soldiers to fill the quota under the President's call for 300,000 men, the tax for the payment not to be levied on the property of those

April 7, 1868, levied one mill per dollar for town expenses. Supervisors: Wm. Kell, E. Parker, Wm. Chadwick.

March 30, 1869, Supervisors' meeting. The Treasurers' report showed that the amount of money realized from the sale of bounty bonds amounted to $1,361.96, and that bonds had been canceled which, including interest, amounted to $1,394.17. And, as the seventeen-mills tax amounted to considerable, there was still some bounty money in the treasury. An attempt was made in 1870 to use this surplus money to build a town house; this was found to be illegal, and the money was distributed among the soldiers of the town who had not received a full bounty. The date of the annual meeting for 1869 does not appear, but it was held at "Cate's School House." Levied one mill per dollar for town expenses. The building of a town hall was agitated. Supervisors: Wm. Kell, E. A. Parker, Wm. Chadwick.

A special meeting was held during the summer for the purpose of purchasing a lot for the town hall and to entertain N. G. Northrup's proposition, to donate land for a town house.

April 5, 1870. Meeting held at Cate's School House. Voted to use the surplus bounty money for the purpose of building a town hall, but as the bounty money could not be used legally except for the payment of bounties, the matter was dropped. Voted a tax of one mill per dollar for town expenses. Supervisors elected were Henry Harmon, John M. Cummings, A. P. Thompson.

An election was held May 31st of this year to decide for or against the payment of state R. R. bonds by the sale of internal improvement lands, and 75 votes were cast, all in favor of such method of payment.

Wm. Chadwick. The subject of building a town house and pound has from time to time been agitated, but neither of them has been built.

CHURCHES.

The Bloomington Presbyterian Church is at present the only organization in existence in the town. Rev. Mr. Pond took measures for its establishment immediately after the removal of the Indians and the consequent termination of his missionary work. In 1855, the organization was completed with thirteen members, and services were held in the new church. The church was first located at the Bloomington Cemetery, on section 21, but in the spring of 1864, it was removed to its present location near the post office, and enlarged. Three members of the original thirteen still survive, Mrs. G. H. Pond, Mary F. Pond and Mrs. Chadwick. Mr. Pond continued the charge until 1873, when he resigned on account of ill health, and was succeeded in turn by Rev. M. Howell, Rev. Van Emmon, and the present incumbent, Rev. J. de Bruyn Kops. The latter took charge in 1877.

The First Baptist Church was organized January 22d, 1861, with nine members. The church flourished for a time, but, in 1872, only half a dozen remained, and those voted to disband. The pastors during its continuance were Revs. S. S. Utter, A. J. Davis, and Cressy.

SCHOOLS.

The first school held in the township was at the Dakota mission, by Rev. Mr. Pond and his assistants. Though organized for the Indians, some white children of early settlers attended. The first public school was taught in a private house by Miss Harrison, in 1855, since which time public schools have been regularly kept. The town is divided in four school districts, and has two joint districts with Richfield: the school house of the latter located in Richfield. That of District No. 13, known as the Gibson school house, on Section 20, finished in 1859, was the first school house built. That of district No. 10, long known as the Cates school house, was first located on section 15, but in 1874 the location was changed to section 16, and the present house built. That of district No. 11 is in section 10, and was built in 1869. That of district No. 14 is on section 32, and was built in 1866.

GRANGE NO. 482.

This Grange was organized March, 1874, by Deputy W. S. Chowen, of Minnetonka, in the school-house, district No. 10, with twenty charter members. The first master was J. D. Layman, and the first secretary V. Bailey. The first meetings were held at the house of James Davis and at Pease's Hall. During the first winter a stock company, under the title of the "Oak Grove Hall Association," was organized, composed only of members of the Grange, for the purpose of building a hall. Shares were issued at $10 each, the money was raised, and the hall completed during the summer. It stands near the postoffice. A Library Association was formed March 19th, 1874, called the "Bloomington Grange Library Association," to consist only of members of the Grange in good standing. Thirty dollars was invested in books at the outset, and new books have since been added. The membership of the Grange is now forty-eight.

HOTELS, ETC.

The first hotel in the town was built in 1854, at the crossing of Nine Mile Creek, by a Mr. Baillif, who kept it a number of years. Next, Albee Smith built the hotel and store at the ferry. In 1858 Mr. Whitney built a hotel near the creek, which was the stopping place for the stage and passengers for a long time. It was subsequently purchased by N. G. Northrup, who opened a store in connection with the hotel. After two years he sold to Mr. Moir, the present owner. Owen R. Dunbar opened a store in 1876, where the Bloomington postoffice now is. He was also postmaster. In 1878 he sold to Mr. Cumming, who keeps a small general store and is postmaster.

BLOOMINGTON FERRY.

The ferry was established in 1852 by Joseph Dean and William Chambers. They continued it in company until 1855, when Mr. Dean sold his interest to A. C. and S. A. Goodrich. In 1868 Mr. Chambers sold his interest to James Brown, who, in 1872, sold to John Cameron. Mr. Cameron was accidentally killed at the ferry a few years later. His widow and Mrs. Rebecca Goodrich are now the owners. In 1855 Mr. Dean sold to Albee Smith and others, from St. Paul, his interest in lands at the ferry, but not including the ferry itself, for a town site. The purchasers surveyed, platted it and built a hotel, but the town refused to grow.

MILL, SHOPS, ETC.

"The Bloomington Flouring Mill" is located on Nine Mile Creek, section 21. M. J. McAfee, the present owner, built the dam and mill in 1876-7. It is a wooden building 30x40 feet, three stories high. It has three runs of stone and one set of rollers, and is operated by a twenty-inch turbine wheel of the Leffel pattern, with thirty or forty horse power. It has a capacity of twenty barrels per day. The water power is good. Numerous springs feed the pond, and keep up the supply of water, enabling the mill to run steadily during the summer months.

Three blacksmith shops are located and owned as follows: one near Bloomington Ferry, by Hector Chadwick; one on section twenty, by Joseph Pepin, and one at Bloomington post office, by A. Cumming.

Mrs. Cameron keeps a hotel and store near the ferry, in a building built by parties from St. Paul.

THE FIRST SETTLERS.

Mrs. Mary Louisa Quinn is the oldest living settler in Bloomington, and also probably the oldest settler in the State. She now lives with her daughter, Mrs. Margaret Brosseau. Mrs. Quinn was born in the Rocky Mountains, in the fall of 1800, and is the daughter of a Scotchman, named Findley and a Rocky Mountain Indian woman, who died giving her birth. On the death of the mother, Mr. Findley was left with a family of four children. He, therefore, left the Mountains and came to Fort Garry, where he left the infant in the charge of a family until his return from Lachine, Canada. He took the other children with him, but never returned. At Fort Garry the baby grew to womanhood. Peter Quinn, who subsequently became her husband, was one of the earliest settlers in this county, with a career even more eventful than that of his wife. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, about 1789, was carried off by a party of English sailors when a school boy, and taken to York Factory, an Esquimaux trading post, on the coast of Labrador. Making his escape, he lived three years with the Esquimaux, without seeing a white man during the time. He was ransomed by a party of Hudson Bay trappers in charge of Mr. Graham.

Graham was the father of Mrs. Alexander Fari-bault of this State. He brought young Quinn to Fort Garry where he married as stated above. He remained in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company a number of years but was in constant dread of being caught and returned to his original captors. In 1824, he was sent to the trading post of the American Fur Company, at Lac qui Parle to rescue a white woman, that had been captured by the Sioux, and there made arrangements to join the American company. He left his wife and family for the time at Fort Garry and accepted the appointment as their agent at Fort Snelling. He arrived at his new post in 1824. During his absence his wife suffered many hardships. While her protectors were on a hunting excursion, her eldest child died, and, though obliged to carry an infant two months old, she determined to set out alone to find them. A heavy snow storm overtook her on the way, and the baby perished, while she with difficulty made her way to her friends, who kindly received her. She now persuaded her friends to go with her to join her husband in Minnesota, and settle there. Several set out with her for Fort Snelling, in the winter of 1825. They traveled on snow shoes all the way. Mr. Quinn hearing of their coming, met the party at Crow Wing, and conducted his wife safely to Fort Snelling. He was soon appointed to a trading post at Leech Lake, Minnesota, whither he went with his family and remained till the spring of 1827. Mrs. Quinn at that time returned with her husband to Fort Snelling, near where she has since lived, and is now over eighty. From 1827, Mr. Quinn was constantly in the employ of the government, until his death. He carried the mail, for a time, from Fort Snelling to Prairie du Chien. He was often employed as interpreter and in making treaties on account of his familiarity with the Sioux and Chippewa languages. In 1837 he went to Washington in charge of a delegation of Indian chiefs. In 1843, he was appointed Indian farmer, and opened the farm for instructing the Indians near where his widow, daughter and grand-daughter now live. In 1854 he was sent to Fort Ridgely as interpreter for the soldiers. At the opening of the Sioux war, in 1862, he was sent by Capt. Marsh to Redwood Ferry to reconnoitre, and pacify the Indians. He was there maliciously shot by an Indian named White Dog, who imagined himself injured by Quinn and committed the act in retaliation. Mrs. Quinn who was at the time visiting her daughter in Bloomington, did not return to Fort Ridgely. Mrs. Quinn is familiar with Indian dialects and the French language but cannot talk English. She receives a pension from the Government.

Rev. Gideon H. Pond came to Bloomington, in 1843. Mr. Pond was born in Washington, Litchfield county, Connecticut, June 30th 1810. He lived on the home farm until 1834, when he received a letter from his brother, Samuel W. Pond, a school teacher at Galena, Illinois, proposing a missionary enterprise to the Dakota Indians. The proposition was accepted and, in 1834, provided with neither brass, scrip nor purse, he joined his brother at Galena, where they embarked on a steamer and arrived at Fort Snelling in May. They began their labors among the small bands of Dakotas around lakes Calhoun and Harriet. They built a rude cabin on the east shore of Lake Calhoun, and labored together three years, when Gideon H., the subject of this sketch, leaving his brother in charge of the mission school, went to Lac qui Parle, where a Presbyterian church had been organized, and offered his services as Indian farmer and teacher. He remained there a few years and returned to Lake Harriet. As previously stated, the Ponds undertook this missionary labor unaided, but, soon after, on the arrival of missionaries sustained by the A. B. C. F. M., they joined with them and labored under the patronage of that society. They began as laymen but, in 1836, Gideon H. Pond returned to Connecticut, and, during a short absence was ordained, when he returned to his labors. In 1843, owing to the repeated disturbances between the Chippewas and Dakotas, the latter changed their location to the banks of the Minnesota river. Mr Pond followed their fortunes and located in Bloomington, where his family now lives. He erected a residence for his own family and a school-house for the Indians. Services were held every Sabbath, and schools were sustained during the week, for the red children, by Mr. Pond and his assistants. Several of these assistants were women. In 1852, in accordance with a treaty, the Indians were removed from the vicinity but Mr.

Pond had now become attached to this place as a home and remained here until his death. Mr. Pond was married November 2d, 1837, at Lac qui Parle, to Miss Sarah Poage, who was his faithful assistant until her death, which occurred in 1853. In 1854 he married Mrs. Sarah Hopkins, widow of a missionary, who was drowned in the Minnesota river at Saint Peter, July 4th, 1851. As the settlers arrived in Bloomington very rapidly after the departure of the Indians, Mr. Pond devoted himself to religious, social and political progress among the new settlers. He organized a church and was its pastor for many years; he represented the 7th district in the first territorial legislature, and otherwise took an active part in progressive, political affairs. He died, January 20th, 1878.

Hon. Martin McLeod was born in Montreal, Canada, August 1812. During early years he was engaged as a clerk in a wholesale house in his native city. He had a liberal education, but was imbued with a strong desire to explore the West. In 1836, at Buffalo, he met General Dickinson, a British officer, who was organizing a party of young men to explore the western country. McLeod joined the expedition and went to the Hudson Bay Company territory of Lord Selkirk. The company was disbanded, and McLeod found himself, in the winter of 1836-7, cast on his own resources. He, with Capt. J. Pays, a Polish exile, and Richard Hays, an Irishman, hired Pierre Bottineau, as guide to conduct them to Fort Snelling. Hays was lost in a snow storm, and perished. Pays was so badly frozen that they were compelled to build a shanty for him and leave him behind. On returning for him a few days later, they found him frozen to death. Mr. McLeod arrived with his guide at Lake Traverse, and during the same spring, (1837), proceeded to Fort Snelling. There he became clerk and book-keeper for H. H. Sibley. He afterward became a partner with a Mr. Baker, in a trading post at the fort. After the death of Mr. Baker, he went up the St. Croix River and traded with the Chippewas, during the winter of 1839-40, and afterward up the Minnesota River to Traverse de Sioux, and opened a trading post there, another in 1843, at Big Stone Lake, and still another at Lac qui Parle, in 1846. He took his family with him to the two places last mentioned. In 1819 he removed them to where his son now resides. He continued the trading posts already mentioned, and established others at Redwood and Yellow Medicine, after the Indians were removed to these points. In 1858 he sold out his trading posts and engaged in real estate business until his death. He was a member of the territorial legislature and council, and took a great interest in the affairs of the country. His death occurred in 1860. His son Walter S. McLeod, who lives on the old homestead, was born near Fort Snelling, April 16th, 1841, and has always been a resident of the county. He has filled a number of town offices, and is a public spirited and enterprising citizen.

Mrs. Margaret Brosseau was born at Leech Lake, Minnesota, October 15th, 1826, and is the daughter of Peter and Louisa Quinn. Her whole life has been passed in the vicinity of Fort Snelling. Her early life was spent among the Indians and traders who frequented the fort. She, by this association, became familiar with the Sioux, Chippewa and French languages in addition to English. She attended school at the fort and at Mr. Pond's missionary school. In 1846 she was married to S. J. Findley, of Prairie du Chien, a clerk in the sutler's store at Fort Snelling. Mr. Findley kept the ferry and lived in a house, still standing, on the east bank of the Mississippi River, near the new bridge at the fort. There he died November 8th, 1895, leaving his wife and three children. Two of these children are now dead, and the third, the only survivor, is Mrs. A. E. Scofield of this town. Mrs. Findley remained at Fort Snelling until 1857 when she married F. X. Brosseau and settled on her farm in Bloomington where she now resides. From 1862 '72 they lived in St. Paul, but returned at the latter date and have since lived in their old home. There were two children by the last marriage, James L. and Francis X.; both are dead.

He there attended school, and in due time entered Knox College, Galesburg. His health would not permit him to complete his course and he left college. In 1852, in company with others, he came to this town and made a claim where his family now resides. In 1854, and again in 1856, he visited Illinois. During the last visit he married, at Chicago. His wife was a Miss Adams, a native of Enosburgh, Vermont, born March 18th, 1830. She came to Chicago, in 1854. Mr. Goodrich was the first assessor for Hennepin county, and held the office of Justice of the Peace. He died Nov. 21st, 1895. There were six children. Mrs. Goodrich still resides on the old homestead.

They then removed to Kingston, where William attended school until fifteen. He was employed afterwards on the steamboats of the St. Lawrence, and canal boats on the Rideau canal, until twenty-two, when he married, bought a farm, and lived on it seven years. He then lived one year in Kingston before coming to Minnesota. He came here in 1854, and settled on his present farm in 1869. He married Miss Elizabeth Morris in 1845. She was born in England, January 15th, 1827, and ten children, of whom eight are living, followed the marriage. Robert, Mary A., Hector, Emma J., Clara J., George F., William A., and Eddie.

EDEN PRAIRIE.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—EARLY SETTLERS—
TOWN ORGANIZATION—INDIAN BATTLE—SCHOOLS—CHURCHES—RAILROADS—STATIS-TICS—BIOGRAPHICAL.

Eden Prairie is situated on the Minnesota River, which forms its entire southern boundary. The face of the country is mainly rolling and hilly. This is the character of the northern and middle portions. The name, however, arose from the southern portion, which consists of a prairie. The town was named, in 1853, by a Mrs. Elliot, who gave it the name Eden, in expressing her admiration of this beautiful prairie. It has many lakes and some marshes. The lakes are characterized by the usual gravelly shores and high banks that render the lakes of the county so beautiful. It is watered by several small streams. Mill Creek, the largest, rises in Minnetonka, flows across the town from north to south, through Staring Lake and empties into the Minnesota River. The whole township is fertile and well adapted to grain. At one time it produced more wheat than any other town in Hennepin county. In the northern, or brush-land portion of the town, the soil is a dark loam with clay subsoil. The prairie has a deeper and richer soil. Heavy timber is found in the extreme north-west and south-west and lighter on the hilly land. Eden Prairie is a farming town and contains no village.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The town was first settled in 1852, by John McKenzie, David Livingston, Alexander Gould, Hiram Abbott, Samuel Mitchell, Sr., and sons, R. Neill, Aaron Gould, and others. Mr. Abbott made the first claim on the north part of the prairie, immediately after the treaty, with purchase of land, was made with the Dakotas, in 1851. Mr. McKenzie's claim was in the southern part of the town near the river, on sections 34 and 35. In company with Hon. Alexander Wilkin, then secretary of the territory, and others, he platted a village, and called it Hennepin. This was on the Minnesota river, at his claim. A hotel, store and a few residences were built. It was at one time the chief shipping point for grain, which was taken in the small steamers that plied up and down the Minnesota river. Like many a projected city of the West, it failed to flourish, and was abandoned.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

Previous to the state organization, Hiram Abbott was appointed Justice of the Peace, and William O. Collins, Constable, in 1854, under the territorial government. These were the only officers previous to the town organization.

The township was organized in 1858, and the first town meeting held on the eleventh of May, in the old school house. The following officers were elected:

Supervisors, Aaron Gould, chairman; Robert Anderson and William O. Collins, Clerk, William H. Rouse, Collector, A. K. Miller, Assessor, William J. Jarrett. Overseer of Poor, John Keeley. Justices, William O. Collins and James Gamble. Constables, A. K. Miller and Arch. Anderson. The total expense of the town for the first year was $55.04.

The town officers for 1880, were: Supervisors, William Hurlbut, chairman; William Andrews and Aaron S. Neill, Clerk, William O. Collins, Assessor, George N. Gibbs. Treasurer, Sheldon Smith.

EARLY EVENTS.

The first child of white parentage born in the town, was to Mr. and Mrs. Pauley Butterfield, and died in infancy. The first marriage was William Chambers and Martha Mitchell, in the winter of 1852-3. Neither are living. The first woman to live in this town was Miss Jane Mitchell, now Mrs. Frank Warner, of Carver. She came in 1852, to keep house for her father and brothers, before the arrival of the other members of the family. The farm where they located, on section 17, is now owned by the heirs of Fred. Miller.

INDIAN BATTLE.

On the 27th of May, 1858, only a few days subsequent to the organization of the town, a fearful Indian battle was fought, which was witnessed by several of the settlers. It took place between the old enemies, the Sioux and Chippewas, near Murphy's ferry in the southern part of the town. The Chippewas wished to avenge a murder, committed the fall previous near Crow Wing by the Sioux. In furtherance of their plan, the Chippewas formed an ambush among the hills on the north side of the ferry. The Sioux were encamped on the south side. The Chippewas numbered about two hundred warriors, the Sioux, only sixty or seventy. The Chippewas therefore counted on an easy victory. The contest began at early dawn by a detachment of Chippewas firing upon a fishing party of Sioux, who had unsuspectingly crossed to the north side. This roused the Sioux camp and they took possession of the ferry so promptly, as to cross and come on the Chippewas at the banks of Big Creek and get into cover in their near vicinity before they could be repelled. The Chippewas finding their ambush a failure, made several attempts to dislodge their foes by strong detachments, but without success. The Sioux, though inferior in numbers, fought with characteristic vigor and desperation, and about 10 o'clock in the morning completely routed the Chippewas. The number killed is not known but Noonday, a young chief of the Chippewas, fell and his body was horribly mutilated by Wau-manning, chief of the Sioux. Phillip Collins, who was an eye witness, states that the Sioux chief cut the heart from his fallen foe and drank of its blood, then, after taking the scalp, cut off the head and carried it on a pole to the Sioux camp near Shakopee. Then the victory was celebrated by a scalp dance, lasting several days, characterized by their usual barbarities. The body of the young chief was burned.

After the fight, Mr. Collins found in a pouch containing the pipe, "Kinnickinnick," etc., of a fallen Chippewa, a rude map on birch bark, which bore, besides the localities of hills, lakes and rivers of that vicinity, several mysterious characters, among them figures representing cows, others foxes, etc. It is unfortunate that this relic was lost.

SCHOOLS.

The first school house was built in 1854. It was built of tamarac logs and finished with basswood lumber. In size it was 18x24 feet. This was the second school house built in Hennepin county. Miss Sarah Clark taught during the summer of 1854, which was the opening term of the school. This old house, which long served as school house, church and town hall, was torn down in 1873, and in its stead was built the present structure. It is a neat frame building, 20x30 feet, on the east line of section 20, district number 56. The town sustains schools in four entire districts and forms part of two joint districts with Minnetonka, all furnished with substantial school houses.

CHURCHES.

The earliest report of religious instruction is of the preaching of Rev. Gideon H. Pond, in the spring of 1854, at the house of Hiram Abbott. Meetings were afterward held at the house of J. Staring, and, later, in the old log school house. The Rev. Edward Eggleston preached in the school house several times during the early part of his ministry. Three churches are now sustained in the town. The Methodist Episcopal, United Presbyterian and Episcopal. The first effort toward the establishment of a Methodist society was the forming of a class by Rev. J. E. Bell. He was soon succeeded by Rev. Mr. Stephenson. For several years the society was small, but gained numerical strength with the development of the town. In 1871, a church was built in section 21, near the site of the old school house. The society now numbers about sixty members and has a flourishing Sunday School.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1858, by Rev. Alex. McHatton, a missionary, who remained about two years. Several changes occurred during the next few years. Rev. A. B. Coleman was stationed here in 1868. He was the first stated pastor and remained until 1871, when he was succeeded by Rev. J. L. Whitley, who remained three years. Rev. James Rogers was stationed here in 1874 and remained until 1878, when he was succeeded by Rev. S. T. Herron, the present pastor. The elders of the church are Samuel Anderson, James Clark and James Gamble. The church edifice is a comfortable frame building 28x40 feet, located in the northwest part of section 26. It was built in part, in 1869, and finished in 1879. The society numbers fifty-three and Sunday School sixty-five. The average attendance at the Sunday School is forty.

Episcopal, St. John's Church. The first organization of this society was in 1864. It was, however, re-organized in 1873, in consequence of the failure to record the first organization. The church is a very neat wooden structure, 22x34 feet. It was originally built in Chanbassen, Carver county, about the year 1860, and in 1868, was moved to its present location on section 27. The first pastor was Rev. John Fitch. The present pastor, Rev. William Powell, has officiated since 1873. The officers of the society are William J. Jarrett, senior warden, and George V. Hawkins, junior warden. The present membership is about twenty, and a Sunday School is maintained.

MILL.

A grist-mill, on section 26, on Mill Creek, is the only establishment of the kind in the town. It was built by Dr. Nathan Stanton in 1861, and began to run in 1862. Isaac Crow bought the mill the next year, and operated it until his death, which occurred in 1872. James Till bought it of the heirs, and sold it in 1878 to its present owner, J. Balme. It has two runs of stone, and has used water power wholly until within three years. Low water has since compelled the partial use of steam.

STORES, HOTELS, ETC.

The first store in town was built by Howe & Dunn, at the proposed village of Hennepin, in 1854. In the same year a building was erected near the mill, for the double purpose of store and hotel, by Mr. Dudley. The property soon passed into the hands of A. I. Apgar. He kept open the hotel but closed the store, and it continued thus until destroyed by fire in 1867. A small store was also opened in the fall of 1880 at the station, by Jacob Rankins. A postoffice was established in 1854, with J. Staring as first postmaster. Mr. Staring held the office fourteen years. His son, M. S. Staring, carried the mail to and from Bloomington. This was six miles distant, and the nearest point on the old stage line. He made weekly trips for eighteen months, and received for his services for the entire time, twelve dollars. This office is kept at present by H. Goodrich, who also has a store, established nine years ago.

RAILROADS.

The Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad enters the town on the north, near the northwest corner of section 3, and passes out at the southwest, through section 30. The depot is situated near the middle of the town, on section 17. A second postoffice is located near the depot, called Washburn. The track of this road was laid and the station built in November, 1871. The first agent was R. O. Reed, who continued until June 16th, 1872, when the present agent took the position. Another railroad, the Hastings & Dakota Cut Off, passes through the northwestern part of the town, built in 1880.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Prominent among the early settlers here are the Andersons, three generations of whom are now living in the town, and number upwards of one hundred. Robert Anderson was born in Knocknabossett, county Cavan, Ireland, in 1824. Remained with his father until the age of twenty-six, being employed in milling and farming. In 1850 came to America, arriving at Galena, Illinois, November 5th, where he spent four years farming. Came to Minnesota, April, 1854, first stopping in Bloomington, then to Eden Prairie, where he has since resided. February, 1850, married Miss Mary J. Hill, daughter of John and Elizabeth Hill, of Ireland. From this union nine children were born: Those now living: John H., Samuel G., Robert J., Mary J., Anna E., Joseph M., Margaret E. and Agnes E. When he came to this region there was but one store in Minneapolis on the west side, and no settler between Fort Snelling and Bloomington except Rev. Gideon H. Pond and one French family. Into this wilderness he brought his family by way of the Minnesota River on the rickety little steamer Iola. This little craft became partially disabled on the way up, obliging the passengers to carry wood and water to keep her in motion. This pastime was indulged in several times during the journey from St. Paul, to the general annoyance of the passengers. Mr. Anderson has been prominent in matters of education, temperance and christianity; now has a son in the University fitting for the ministry.

William Anderson was born January 1st, 1837, in North Ireland. When sixteen years old, his father, a prosperous cottager and mill owner, died, and in 1854 William came with the family to America, settling in Jo Davies county, Illinois, where he attended school one year, then went to Galena to work in a store, where he remained until the fall of 1855, when he came to Minnesota crossing the Mississippi at Fort Snelling, and went to Eden Prairie. His mother made a homestead claim of the farm he now occupies, on section 13 and 14, where she lived to see the third generation of her family: 103 grandchildren and 13 great grandchildren. She died in March, 1878. William Anderson married Miss Rachel Mitchell, April 28th, 1858. They have eleven children: Harvey, Martha A., Lizzie R., Ida E., Fannie, Loretta H., Jennie L., Julia M., Alfred W., Arthur H. H., and Alice P. He has been active in educational and religious matters and largely interested in the erection of the three churches in the township. Was one of a few who hewed and hauled the logs for the first school-house in his district, in 1856. Two of his children are now attending the High School in Minneapolis.

James Anderson was born in the same town in Ireland, as his brothers Robert and William. His early life, like that of his brothers, was devoted to milling and farming. In 1852 he came to America. Lived one year in Hanover, Illinois. In 1853 came to Minnesota and located where he has since lived, on section 14. In common with other pioneer settlers, he staked out his "claim," which he subsequently secured by pre-emption and entry. In the spring of 1854 brought his family from Illinois, coming from St. Paul on the steamer Iola. Was married February 26th, 1852, to Miss Sarah Hicks, of Cavan county, Ireland. Have had nine children, Robert H., Eliza J., John W., Thomas, Matilda, James, David H., Robert, and a son who died in infancy.

At the age of thirteen, William went to Salem and learned the saddlers' trade, remaining until 1836, then sought adventure upon the ocean, his first service being with Commodore M. C. Perry, of the steamer Fulton, the first steamer built by the U. S. government. Also sailed on the ships Admiral and Henry Clay: was three years on the whaler America, in Pulaski Bay, Prussian possessions. During eighteen years of ocean life, visited many places of historic interest, sailing around the world, and encountering many thrilling adventures and remarkable preservations. In 1852, abandoned ocean life, and in May, was married to Miss Hannah Shepherd, of Boston, Mass. Six children have been born to them: Sarah L., Blanche M., Martha A., William M., Rose A., and John

CHAPTER XXXIX.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—FIRST SETTLERS—ORGANIZATION—POST OFFICES—OFFICIAL ROSTER—VILLAGES—CHURCHES—SOCIETIES—SCHOOLS—HOTELS—MILLS—RAILROADS—BIOGRAPHICAL.

Minnetonka, is located in the southern part of Hennepin county, and was covered with a heavy growth of timber in the western portion of the town, and with a light growth of underbrush in the eastern part. The surface is rolling, with occasional mounds of considerable height. The soil is principally a sandy loam, while in some portions of the eastern part, a clay loam appears. A number of lakes are scattered over the town, the principle one being Shady Oak Lake, which is a beautiful body of water, located in the south-east part. Gray's Lake, a large body of water, is located on Section 8, in the north-western part. Glenn Lake, in the southern part on section 34, Crane Lake, in the north-eastern part on section 2 and Shell Lake on Section 11. Wayzata bay, the eastern arm of Lake Minnetonka, is in the north-western part of the town, and many fine cottages now adorn its banks.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The first settlers in the town were Simon Stevens and James Shaver, Jr., who came in the spring of 1852, Mr. Stevens locating on section 15. This was before land could be entered, obliging Mr. Shaver and Mr. Stevens to build a shanty and occupy it to hold possession, until such a time as they could legally enter and secure it. On account of a valuable mill site, Mr. Shaver located his claim on sections 17 and 18, on the south shore of Wayzata Bay. Mrs. James Shaver was the first white woman in the town. Later in the year, came James Mountain, Mrs. Mary Gordon and five sons, John McGalpin, George Andrews, and John Bourgeois. Mrs. Gordon settled on what is now the county poor farm. James Mountain, after remaining a short time, sold his claim and left. George Andrews sold his claim early the following spring to Mr. J. P. Miller.

Mr. Bourgeois and Mr. McGalpin built a shanty on the east shore of Wayzata bay, on a spot now known as "Bourgeois' Mound." There they remained until the spring of 1853, when they moved into what afterwards became the village of Minnetonka.

Here Mr. Bourgeois built the first blacksmith shop west of St. Anthony. That same spring Simon Stevens, Calvin Tuttle, Horace Webster and others began the erection of a saw mill, which they completed and had in operation that fall, on the site now occupied by the Minnetonka Mills.

Mrs. James Shaver, the pioneer woman of the town, did the cooking for the men who worked on the mill. From the 5th of November, 1852, until the 24th of Jan., 1853, she never saw a white woman. At that time Mr. O. E. Garrison and A. B. Robinson came with their families and settled on the present site of Wayzata. Mr. Robinson building his shanty on the spot where the Arlington House now stands. Later in 1853, came Mr. J. P. Miller, Pascal Spafford, W. S. Chowen, W. B. Harrington, A. N. Gray, Samuel Bartow, Horace Webster, R. E. McKinney, and D. E. Dow. Pascal Spafford built the second building in the village of Minnetonka, and occupied it as a store, which was the first store in the town. Some of the early settlers have left the town, among whom are O. E. Garrison, now in St. Cloud, Simon Stevens at Clearwater, Horace Webster near the same place, Calvin Tuttle at Two Rivers, and W. B. Harrington who died at Hutchinson, McLeod county several years ago. Most of the others are still living in the town. Many incidents connected with the early history of the town might be mentioned would the limits of this work permit. One, however, is deserving of special notice. The Indian chief, Little Six, and his band of braves, camped on Wayzata Bay, near the present site of Wayzata village, during the winter of 1852 and 1853, returning every winter following until the outbreak of the Sioux in 1862. Although they were not considered particularly dangerous, they were a constant source of annoyance on account of their begging and pilfering propensities. Little Six was considered an exemplary Indian, who was cleanly, manly and brave, but his son, Little Six, as frequently happens with the sons of white sires, was of a different type. He was a drunken, worthless vagabond. Let him see a bottle, and a demand for it was immediately in order, no matter what was in it, especially if it was in the possession of a woman. This was the fatal snare he fell into, after the massacre. Knowing this habit, a bottle was drugged and given to a woman who lived where he was supposed to be sure of visiting. He came, saw the bottle, demanded it, and eagerly drank of its contents and was soon under the influence of the drug, when he was secured and afterwards hung with "Medicine Bottle" at Fort Snelling.

In the spring of 1854, settlement became more rapid, and the town began to take on the appearance of civilization. As each new settler came, he added strength to the number, as well as increasing its material prosperity. One remarkable as well as pleasing feature in connection with the history of this town, is the fact that the people have very little use for a Justice of the Peace, or a Constable. Their office has been almost entirely nominal.

The first white children born in the town were Bayard T. and Bernard G. Shaver, twin sons of James and Sarah C. Shaver, in August, 1853. Bayard teaches school in the winter and works on the farmer in the summer. Bernard is a carpenter and joiner. No more births occurred until February 1855, when S. M. Bartow was born.

The first death occurred in June, 1855; that of Mr. Waters, who had just arrived with his family from Pennsylvania, having contracted the cholera on board the boat upon which he took passage. It occurred about a week after his arrival. Like all new communities, the people heartily sympathized with his bereaved family, doing all they could to ameliorate their sad condition. Nearly the entire population attended the funeral. The coffin was made by Mr. A. N. Gray, and the body buried in Groveland Cemetery. His wife, now living in Excelsior, has since been twice married. A few days later a Mr. Jordan died of the same disease, and soon after a young man at Wayzata, followed in a few days by the mother of Mr. O. E. Garrison. The latter death was caused by fright, she being an old lady and quite feeble.

The first marriage in the town, was Newton Sperry to Mrs. Waters, in the spring of 1857, at the house of W. S. Chowen. The ceremony was performed by James Shaver, Justice of the Peace, he being the first one to hold that office in the town previous to its organization.

The first citizen of the town elected to the state legislature was W. S. Chowen, who was elected in the fall of 1857, and served until March, 1858.

ORGANIZATION.

The first meeting for the organization of the township occurred on the eleventh of May, 1858, at what was then the Minnetonka Hotel, part of which is now the residence of C. H. Burwell, and Samuel Bartow was chosen chairman, pro tem., B. M. Vanalstine, clerk, pro tem., with L. W. Eastman for moderator. On motion, it was voted unanimously, that Minnetonka be the name of the town. The electors then proceeded to ballot for town officers, and elected for Supervisors, Frederick Bassett, chairman, B. M. Vanalstine and J. P. Miller; Clerk, George McKinley; Assessor, L. W. Eastman; Collector, H. R. Eddy; Overseer of the Poor, John McGinn; Constables, M. B. Stone, A. R. Richards; Justices of the Peace, A. B. Robinson, J. C. Clay; Road Overseer, John McKenzie. The first meeting of the board was held at the office of the Town Clerk, in the village of Minnetonka, May 28th, 1858. No business of importance was transacted, and they adjourned to meet June 21, 1858. At this meeting the road districts of the town were divided, and numbered, one, two, three, and four, respectively. The second town meeting was held in the village of Minnetonka, April 5th, 1859, at the Minnetonka Hotel. The first wagon road laid out by the town, was called the Harrington road. It was surveyed by B. F. Christleib, and reported by him to the town board, January 21st, 1860. It began at J. S. Harrington's house, near the lake shore, and ran in a northeasterly direction, until it intersected the Watertown road, about a mile west of the village of Wayzata.

POST OFFICES.

The first post office in the town was established at Minnetonka early in the year of 1855, and Pascal Spafford appointed the first postmaster. He was succeeded by George McKinley, who held it until 1861, when A. B. Robinson was appointed, and held it until he enlisted in the army. Then Calvin A. Tuttle was appointed. Late in 1861, Thomas Morse was appointed, and the office was moved to his residence, on the east side of section 17. In 1867, M. A. Page was appointed and the office moved back to Minnetonka, where it has since remained. E. R. Perkins was appointed in April 1868, followed by H. M. Vroman in 1870, George Browning in 1871, H. M. Vroman again in 1875 and C. H. Burwell in 1876; he is the present postmaster.

The second post office in the town was established at Wayzata in 1855, and a Mr. Chapman appointed postmaster, with A. W. Day, deputy, who subsequently was appointed postmaster, his wife attending to the duties of the office. Of her, many amusing stories are told. One of them was, that when parties called for their mail, the old lady would reach down into the capacious depths of her pocket and draw out the package of letters, carefully look them over and give out the letters, if any, and return the rest to her "petticoated" post office. She also had a very inquisitive mind. Well, what woman has not? Particularly, when an unopened letter is passing through her hands. Wm. Dudley was appointed to the office in 1858, and continued until 1862, when it was discontinued. In the spring of 1865, the office was re-established and named Freeport, and A. O. Matson appointed postmaster. The people doing business through the office, particularly the old settlers, were not pleased with the new name, and it was finally changed to Wayzata again, late in 1866. In 1867 Mr. C. R. Stimpson was appointed, and remained until July, 1869. He was succeeded by J. S. Harrington in 1870, J. T. Dudley in 1872, G. W. Hedderly in 1874; November 16, 1874, A.

K. Richards; May 8th, 1879, G. W. Hedderly was again appointed, and now holds the office.

South Plymouth post office was established soon after the office at Wayzata was vacated, and located about a mile and a half east. F. A. Clay was appointed postmaster, and held the office until the re-establishment of the office at Wayzata, when the South Plymouth office was discontinued.

The village of Wayzata is located in the north-western part of the town, on the Breckenridge division of the St. P., M. & M. R. R., and was laid out by O. E. Garrison in 1854, who erected a steam saw-mill and run it about a year, then sold it to parties who took it down and moved it. After making a few other improvements, he sold his interest to L. C. After his death in 1862, the property was in such a condition that it could not be sold until a few years ago. Since then a little increase in the population has been made. Has one general store and one grocery and confectionery store. Arlington, Gleason, and Minnetonka Hotels, open only for summer visitors. A temperance society was organized in 1877 with about fifty members. There is a fine school-house, which was erected in 1870, with sixty scholars attending. The third school in the town was taught here.

Excelsior is situated in the southwestern part of the county, the south line of the township separating Hennepin and Carver counties. Nearly one-half of the area of the township is covered by the waters of Lake Minnetonka, leaving but 5,221 acres of land.

The surface of the land is rolling and heavily timbered, with here and there small marshes, a few of which are utilized for the production of wild hay. The soil is a close clay, and very productive.

The lake was named soon after the first settlements were made on its shores. Governor Ramsey, in his official capacity, as Governor of the territory, visited the lake in company with a large party, and during this visit, it was given its appropriate name, Minnetonka, the word being derived from the Dahkota, minne meaning water, and tonka meaning large.

Lake Minnetonka is noted for the beauty of the scenery of its surrounding shores. Numerous points of land project into the lake, some of which are a mile or more in length. They are named from settlers and owners of land on them. Ferguson's and Gibson's on the east shore, Wayzata and Sunrise points on the west shore of the lower lake. In the upper lake, Locke's, Howard and Carman's points derive their names from owners of land thereon. Between these points are bays, some deep, others shallow, the waters of which are plentifully stocked with fish. These bays are known as Robinson, near Wayzata; Carson, on the east shore; St. Alban's, Excelsior and Gideon's on the south, and Holmes Bay on the north. The only one of note in the upper lake, within the limits of Excelsior, is Carman's.

There are several islands within the boundary lines of the town. The largest of these is Big, or Morse's Island, in the lower lake. Brightwood, a small round island, is owned and occupied as a summer residence by H. A. Gale, of Minneapolis. In the upper lake are situated Enchanted Island, Shady Isle, Spray and Wild Goose Islands.

The upper and lower lakes are connected by what is known as Hull's Narrows, originally a small creek, but since widened and deepened to allow the passage of the large steamers plying on the lake.

The lakes in the township of Excelsior, aside from Minnetonka, are Lakes Christmas and Galpin, both named in honor of early settlers; the former for Charles W. Christmas, the first county surveyor, and the latter for Rev. Charles Galpin, the first minister in Excelsior. Lake Christmas is located on sections 35 and 36, and is about one mile in length. Galpin Lake is a small body of water just south of the village.

SETTLEMENT.

Excelsior was among the first townships in the county, to attract the attention of the prospector in search of a home. The first visit of whites to Lake Minnetonka, was in 1822, when a party from Fort Snelling explored its shores. The first settler in Excelsior was Stephen Hull, who located his claim in February, 1853, selecting for his home the site now known as the Lake Park Grounds. He was followed by William Lithgrow, in the spring of '53, who made a claim of the land now occupied by the "State Fruit Farm." Lithgrow was drowned in the lake in 1854. R. B. McGrath came in May 1853, and still resides in Excelsior. He is the oldest living settler in the town. The town of Excelsior owes its name and settlement to a colony, under the title of the "Excelsior Pioneer Association." They were headed by George M. Bertram and arrived in the summer of 1853. The following "Preamble" to the constitution adopted November 12th, 1852, serves to show that Lake Minnetonka and its surrounding territory, had acquired at that early period, a portion of the notoriety which to-day makes it famous.

"Preamble. Whereas we, the undersigned, having associated ourselves into a body to remove to Minnesota Territory next summer, and occupy some of the government lands now vacated by the late treaty with the Sioux Indians, and having been on a tour through the Western states last summer, have selected a site for a village and farming country, that for healthfulness of climate, fertility of soil, beauty of scenery and nearness to markets, cannot be surpassed by any other locality in the country: being within twelve or fifteen miles of two of the most important towns in the territory (St. Paul and St. Anthony Falls) and having a front on a lake, navigable for steam and other boats over forty miles, its waters as clear as crystal and abound with fish. The land around the lake is also supplied with natural meadow, the country is gently rolling and interspersed with the most beautiful growth of timber that the eye could wish to look upon, consisting of sugar maple, black walnut, butternut, white and red oak, and a variety of others; also with wild fruit, grapes and berries of almost every kind. The whole country in fact, possessing almost everything that the heart of man could wish for. Therefore, in order to avail ourselves of all the advantages of an old settled country, and secure ourselves such increase of value as must result from a concentration of numbers upon the land, together with our own efforts in its improvement, erection of a village and settling the farms thereupon, and all the blessings of life; We, each and all of us, who subscribe in the following constitution, do combine ourselves, our means and our energies, in this enterprise and agree to support and carry into effect its laws. Officers: President, Geo. M. Bertram; Vice-President, John L. Willis; Secretary, Samuel F. Blodgett; Treasurer, Edward Bond. Any person at a distance wishing to become a member of this association, or wishing information, can have all the information he requires by addressing the President at 268 Grand street, New York."

The constitution and by-laws, provided that each person becoming a member, should pay a fee of eight dollars, and one dollar per week as dues, from November 12th, 1852, to July 17th, 1853. That each member should be entitled to a farm, and one village lot of not less than one acre, the farms and lots to be drawn by numbers. Mr. George M. Bertram, the originator of the scheme, visited Lake Minnetonka in the summer of 1852, selected the site of the present village of Excelsior, returned to New York and organized the Association. While at St. Paul, en route for the East, he met R. B. McGrath, then a resident of Dubuque, Iowa, who became a member of the colony, soon after its organization. About May 1st, 1853, Mr. McGrath started for Minnetonka in advance of Bertram and the remainder of the company. In St. Anthony he met John H. Stevens, then acting as agent for the new colony, and received from him instructions to proceed to the site selected, and erect a house for the use of Bertram upon his arrival. A few days later he and R. C. Wiley, set out in company with a surveying party which was to locate a government road from St. Anthony to Fort Ridgely. They went as far as Lake Christmas, and there the surveying party turned back, leaving McGrath and Wiley to find their way alone. A snow-storm arose and they suffered much from exposure. After searching two days they found Stephen Hull, who pointed out to them the site selected by Bertram. They at once commenced the erection of a log house, and put up a shanty for their own use while building the house. The house was ready for occupancy the first week in June. It was two stories in height, built of basswood logs and roofed with shingles procured in St. Anthony. A number of prospectors had visited McGrath and Wiley while building the house, and they often suffered for want of provisions, their generosity leading them to share their supplies with the land seekers. The first of the colonists to arrive was Rev. Charles Galpin, who founded the first church in Excelsior. He was soon followed by Bertram, who arrived with a number of families. The association immediately took a claim embracing 160 acres, on the south shore of the lake. This claim was at once platted into village lots, and was the foundation of the present flourishing village of Excelsior. Mr. McGrath built a frame house and soon after, a carpenter shop, the latter used for public meetings. The house still stands. During the winter of 1853-4, a meeting was called by President Bertram, at which the name of Excelsior was adopted unanimously.

FIRST SETTLERS.

Peter M. Gideon and A. P. Beeman were among the settlers of 1853. William Harvey, Silas A. Seamans, Z. D. Spaulding, William Ferguson and others settled in 1854. Among those who arrived in 1855-'6 and took claims were Elijah Carson, Rev. C. B. Sheldon, Enos Day, W. B. Jones and Silas Howard. From this time on the settlement was rapid and the growth of Excelsior was an assured fact. Of these early settlers, William Ferguson was drowned in 1857. Enos Day died here in 1874. Bertram, after remaining two or three years with his colony, removed to Minneapolis and from there to Monticello, Wright county, where he died. Nearly all the others, of those mentioned, have remained in the homes they have created out of the wilderness. The substantial farm-houses and residences, pleasantly located on the shores of the lake, bear evidence of the prosperity which has attended those who ventured here in early days.

EARLY EVENTS.—1855 TO 1858.

The first store was established by M. H. Pease, in 1855. The first mill was erected the same year, by a stock company composed of citizens of the town. It was a steam saw-mill, and occupied the site on which May's grist-mill now stands. This mill was destroyed by fire in 1858. April 26th, 1858, a newspaper was started by Fred W. Crosby and Henry O. Hammond, called the "Excelsior Enterprise." It was short lived as they succeeded in publishing but one number.

SAINT ALBANS.

In 1856, Morris and Hargin platted a village on the south-east shore of Saint Alban's bay, which they called Saint Albans. A hotel was built by John McKenzie, and a saw-mill erected by Morris and Hargin. The saw-mill burned in 1859. For a short time this village flourished, but the financial crisis of 1857, proved too much for its proprietors, and the village succumbed, and now no trace of it exists. The following is related by an actor in the scene: The proprietors of the village, in order to record their plat were required to produce evidence by a creditable witness, that certain improvements had been made. The gentleman referred to, was taken out from Minneapolis to view the "city" and testify that the improvements required by law had been made. He arrived at the "city" was shown house number one, then taken out into the woods a short distance, turned round a few times and shown house number two. This was repeated until six houses had been visited. There was but one house in the place and he had been taken to it six times from different directions. One of his visits was to the school (?). Half a dozen urchins had been hastily collected. These were placed in the house during his absence in the woods, and on his return were busily poring over their books. The saw-mill was a pile of machinery thrown together. Incidents of this kind were of frequent occurrence in those days.

CIVIL HISTORY.

April 10th, 1858, the Board of County Commissioners designated township No. 117 north, range 23 west, as the town of Excelsior. The first election was held at the house of John Green, May 11th, 1858. Dr. E. Snell was chosen Moderator, and M. H. Pease, Clerk for the day. The officers elected were: Supervisors, R. B. McGrath, chairman, Lewis Thompson and E. Bennett; Town Clerk, Chas. B. Sheldon; Assessor, Wm. B. Jones; Collector, M. H. Pease; Constables, H. L. Beeman and P. M. Gideon; Justices, Stephen Hull and Orville Wilcox; Road Commissioner, Morris Powers. List of Chairmen of Supervisors: 1859, Geo. Galpin; 1860, S. Norramon; 1861-'62, Lewis Thompson; 1863, Charles Galpin; 1864, H. L. Beeman; 1865-'66-'67, A. H. Jenkins; 1868-'69, C. F. Adams; 1870, J. H. Clark; 1871-'72, F. G. Gould; 1873-'74, L. F. Sampson; 1875, O. C. Meaker; 1876-'77, Charles May; 1878, R. B. McGrath; 1879, F. G. Gould. The officers elected in 1880 were: Supervisors, L. F. Sampson, chairman, F. G. Gould and A. E. Apgar. Clerk, A. W. Latham; Treasurer, J. H. Lelson; Assessor, G. A. Slater; Justice, W. H. Levan; Constable, H. H. Beers.

The boundary lines of Excelsior remained as originally designated by the county commissioners, until March 2d, 1868, at which time the Board detached the territory north of the lake and added the same to the town of Medina. This was done in accordance with the petition of a majority of the voters. The north line of Excelsior was made to follow, as nearly as possible, the middle of the northern part of Lake Minnetonka.

At a special town meeting, held November 6th, 1877, the question of giving a subsidy of six thousand dollars to a certain railroad, was defeated. February 15th, 1878, the town voted aid, to the amount of four thousand dollars, to the Minneapolis & Northwestern railroad. The assessed valuation of real estate in the town, exclusive of village lots, was in 1880, $155,191. Personal property, $58,716. Total amount of taxes in 1880, $1,061. The population of the township, including the village, is 930.

CHURCHES.

The first Congregational church, was organized July 17, 1853, with the following members: Rev. Charles Galpin, pastor, George M. and Julia Bertram, Samuel Staples, Joshua and Hannah Moore, Clarrisa Cleveland, George M. Powers, David Griffiths and James Phillips. The first services were held in the parlor of the hotel; after that, they occupied a school house, then the hall over Pease's store, until 1857. From that time until 1871, the upper room of the school building was used. In the latter year the society erected a church at a cost of $1,500. The membership now numbers 105. Rev. Charles Galpin had charge until November, 1855, when he was succeeded by Rev. Chas. B. Sheldon, who has since continued in the pastorate without interruption.

Episcopal. The first building erected expressly for a church, was put up by the Episcopal society, in 1862. It was a neat log structure. Services were held by the Rev. J. S. Chamberlain previous to the erection of the church. No regular services are maintained.

The Methodist society have held occasional services, but have no church edifice and no regular organization.

SCHOOLS.

The first school was held in a small log building erected for the purpose, and taught by Miss Jane Wolcott during the summer of 1854. This building was used until 1857, when the two story frame building now in use was erected. The second story was used for church services on Sunday, and during the week by Rev. Chas. Galpin, who kept a private school known as the "Excelsior Institute." The Institute ceased in 1867, and the Congregational church society used the room until 1871. Since then the entire building has been used for school purposes, and a graded school maintained.

Outside of the village, the township has two entire districts, and one joint district with Minnetonka. District No. 116 has a house located on section 17, in the north part of the town. School district No. 59 has a house located near the county line, on section 32. Good schools are sustained in all the districts.

THE EXCELSIOR GRIST MILL.

Was built by C. May, in 1876, at a cost of $8,000. It has three runs of stone, with a capacity of fifty barrels per day. In connection with this mill is a stave mill, producing annually one million barrel staves, with heads to match. The product was formerly two million staves a year, but owing to scarcity of lumber it has been reduced. The expense of operating these mills is about one hundred dollars per day. A six horse-power engine drives the machinery. Both mills are owned and managed by Charles May.

NURSERIES.

The township has three nurseries. One established by F. G. Gould, in 1867, has about ten acres under cultivation. Sales extend through Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Dakota Territory.

A. W. Latham established one in 1870, with one acre, and now has eight acres. In 1873, began planting a vineyard, and now has five acres of grapes under cultivation.

A. Bonjour has a nursery east of the village, containing ten acres, mainly grapes. He has about two-thirds of an acre planted with strawberries, producing several varieties of excellent fruit.

STATE FRUIT FARM.

In 1853 Peter M. Gideon made his claim, and the following year began experimenting in fruit culture. He continued perseveringly, though meeting with reverses and often entire failure. In 1878, the state purchased 160 acres of land adjoining Gideon's farm on the north, and established an experimental fruit farm, placing Mr. Gideon in charge. He is, under the patronage of the state, meeting with flattering success in raising fruit of all kinds, making a specialty of apples of hardy stock, adapted to this climate.

RAILROADS.

The Minneapolis & Northwestern surveyed a line in 1878, which passess through the township from east to west, south of the lake. No work has been done on this line. The Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway have a line, projected in 1880, completed from Hopkins Station, on the main line, to a point in Excelsior near the St. Louis Hotel. On the north side of the township, the St. P., M. & M. R. R. have a line, surveyed in 1880, called the North Shore Branch, leaving the main line near Wayzata, and passing through the northern part of Excelsior to a point on section 17, where the company purpose erecting a mammoth hotel in 1881.

SUMMER HOTELS.

The St. Louis hotel was erected in 1879, on the eastern shore of Lake Minnetonka. It is furnished with all modern conveniences, and accommodates four hundred guests. The Lake Park Hotel is located on the south shore of the lake, on the ground laid out by the Northwestern Sunday-school Association, known as the Lake Park Grounds. It was built by this association in 1879. Now owned by Seeley & Griswold. The grounds around the hotel are tastefully laid out in lots, with drives and walks. These lots are occupied by cottages of summer visitors. The hotel occupies an eminence commanding a fine view of the lake. The Hotel Harrow is located on Rockwell Island, in the upper lake, and was built in 1880. This building is finely situated, and has rooms for one hundred and fifty guests.

THE VILLAGE OF EXCELSIOR.

Excelsior was the first point of settlement in the township. Here was located the post-office, the first stores, shops, etc., forming the nucleus around which the early settlers located their claims and made their homes. The village was platted in 1853, but remained under the township government until 1877, when it was incorporated by act of legislature.

The first election was held April 16th, 1877, at which the following officers were elected: President, C. May; Trustees, L. F. Sampson, Eli Small, Jr., and James Letson; Recorder, A. Millner; Treasurer, E. H. Page. The village now contains three stores, which carry stocks of dry goods and general merchandise, one grocery store, two meat markets, three blacksmith shops, one harness shop, one hardware store, and one shoe store.

Excelsior has become one of the principal points of interest to the tourists, who flock to Lake Minnetonka in summer, and the people find themselves sometimes taxed to accommodate their visitors.

HOTELS.

The "Excelsior House" was built by George Galpin in 1854, and was at that time of small proportions. The original building is now used as a kitchen for the present hotel. John Green purchased the house and made some additions. The ownership then reverted to Galpin, who sold it to a Mr. Beckford. He managed it about four years, since which time it has been owned by the Wait family. The building has been enlarged from time to time, until it now contains room for 150 guests. It is kept open summer and winter.

The "Long View," located on what is known as the "Water Cure" lot, was built in 1863, and accommodates fifty guests. It is owned and managed by Daniel Connor.

The "White House" is a two-story frame building erected, in 1872. It has a capacity for thirty people, and is conducted by William Simpson.

The "Slater House" is also a frame building of two stories, erected in 1880. It has room for fifty guests.

The "Appledore" House is run by H. H. Beers. It is pleasantly located, and accommodates thirty guests comfortably. It was built in 1878.

"May's House," a three-story frame, was built in 1877. It occupies a fine site overlooking the lake.

There are a number of boarding houses, among them the "DeGroot" house, and "Pleasant Grove" house.

SOCIETIES.

Masonic Lodge number 113, A. F. and A. M., of Excelsior, was organized in July, 1874, and a charter granted by the Grand Lodge of the state in the year 1875. The first officers were: O. C. Meaker, W. M.; D. C. Hunt, S. W.; Wm. Milner, J. W.; H. S. Eldridge, Secretary; M. Maynard, Treasurer. This society has been in a flourishing condition since its organization. Until the fall of 1880, they met in the hall over the post-office. They now occupy a room in a building erected for the lodge by Wm. Simpson.

A Good Templars society was organized in March, 1866, with a charter granted by the Grand Lodge of the state. This society disbanded in 1867. Another society was organized in 1877, by John Dunham, which remained in existence but one year.

BOATS.

The first steamboat to ply on Lake Minnetonka was built by Rev. Chas. Galpin, in 1855, and called the "Governor Ramsey". She remained in service until 1862, when becoming loosened from her moorings during a storm, she floated out on the lake and sank. She was afterwards raised, and her machinery is now doing service in the Rambler. The hull was rebuilt and is used as a barge.

The Sue Gardner was the next boat. She was brought to the lake by Charles Gardner in the year 1868, and remained about three years.

The May Queen was launched in 1873 and was in service until June 29th, 1879, when she was destroyed by the explosion of her boiler at Rockwell's Island. This explosion was attended with loss of life.

The Hattie May is a stern-wheel boat, 100 feet long and eighteen feet wide. She is owned by C. May, and was launched in 1878. The City of Minneapolis is a propeller built in 1880, also owned by C. May. The steamer Mary was launched in 1876, and was in active use until July 1st, 1880, when her boiler exploded as she was lying at the St. Louis Hotel landing. This explosion was also attended with loss of life. The Mary was rebuilt by Major Halsted, in the winter of 1880-'81. The Saucy Kate, formerly the Katie May, was launched in 1878, and exploded her boiler soon after. She was rebuilt, and is now owned by Capt. Shepard. The steamer Rambler is used as a freight-boat. There are several sail-boats owned in Excelsior; the largest of these is the Coquette, built by A. Westlake in 1879.

Several fleets of small boats, for the use of visitors, are owned in Excelsior, and at each of the summer hotels.

GRAPHICAL.

Minnetrista is located in the extreme south-western corner of Hennepin county. It is bounded on the north by Independence, west and south by Carver county, east by Excelsior and Medina. The surface is gently undulating, with an occasional abruptness, which tends to enhance its general appearance and take from it all evidence of monotony. Originally, it was covered with a heavy growth of hard and soft maple, white and red oak, basswood and elm. But these somewhat formidable barriers have yielded to the advancing stroke of settlement and civilization, and at the present time, but a small portion of the original timber remains, the settlers having cleared it for farming purposes. The town is dotted here and there, with lakes, the largest one being Whale Tail Lake, so called on account of its shape. No fish, like the one that gave Jonah his pre-historic notoriety, swim its pure waters; but the modern sizes are found in abundance, which grow, perhaps, with reference to the size of the modern frying pan. Ox Yoke lake, which derived its name from being in the form of an ox yoke; Long Lake, so named because of its length, which is more than one mile; Dutch lake, so named in an early day on account of there being a settlement of Germans on its borders. Here they settled, bringing with them the manners and customs of the Father-land, only to be crystallized into the American manners and customs. Langdon Lake, in honor of R. V. Langdon, the first clerk of this town; Woodward lake, in honor of D. Woodward who located on its banks. Sanders Lake, named for N. H. Sanders, who settled on land lying between Halsted's Bay and the lake bearing his name. He was one of the pioneer settlers of the south-eastern part of the town, which is almost entirely covered by Lake Minnetonka and small bays, prominent among which are "Halsted's" bay, in honor of Frank W. Halsted, an old settler, and "Cook's" bay, named in honor of M. S. Cook who is one of the pioneers.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The different parts of the town of Minnetrista, seem to have been settled, at or near the same time. In the south-western part two brothers, Joseph and John Merz, made a claim of 320 acres, on section thirty-two, some time during the fall of 1853, but did not locate here until the spring of 1854. During the same year a claim of 141 acres was made by John Carman (then living in Excelsior) for M. S. Cook. This claim was made on section thirteen, on what is now known as Cook's Bay. In the spring of 1854, N. H. Sanders and J. P. Buck, arrived and made claims in this part of the township. They at once erected a log-house on Sander's claim, in which they lived the first summer. In the fall of this year M. S. Cook arrived and built a house on his claim. The first settlement made in the north-western part of the town, was by Samuel L. Merriman, who made a claim of 120 acres on section six in the spring of 1857.

EARLY SETTLERS.

Among the very earliest settlers on Upper Lake Minnetonka was Frank William Halsted, who, in the summer of 1855 built his first home, "Rough and Ready" cabin, on the west shore of that beautiful bay, designated on the map of Lake Minnetonka in honor of him, as "Halsted's Bay." The clearing, about an acre, and the cellar of that cabin, yet mark the spot; around, the grand old woods yet remain, as when he for many years viewed and enjoyed them. Likewise the beautiful water views in front of his cabin home. Capt. Halsted was born in Newark, New Jersey, in 1833, and was the youngest son of the late Chancellor, Oliver Spencer Halsted, of New Jersey. When sixteen years old, having a taste for the sea, he adopted Greeley's advice, "Go west, young man," and went to that Ultima Thule, California, by way of Cape Horn, three brothers accompanying him. Returning in 1850, he next sought the West, overland, coming to Minnesota in 1855. He remained until the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, when, feeling competent to serve his country in the naval service, he obtained a commission in June or July of that year, as master's mate, and served under Flag Officers Stringham and Goldsborough, most of the time in command of a vessel comprising part of that fleet. At the capture of Hatteras Inlet, August 28th and 29th, 1861, he with his brother, Major G. B. Halsted the latter then secretary to Flag Officer Stringham, were on board the flagship Minnesota. One of the pictures in the Hermitage is a very fine view of that famous ship and fight. Dissatisfied with Flag Officer Goldsborough, whose loyalty and courage they doubted, both the brothers resigned, the elder, the secretary, now the major, November 9th, 1861, joining the army November 11th, 1861, as lieutenant and aide-camp to "fighting Phil Kearney," was in the war to the end, being at Appomattox Court-House when Lee surrendered. Frank resigned later, at Hampton Roads, refusing to serve longer under Goldsborough, whom he told on the deck of the Minnesota, "By your vulgar and foul-mouthed profanity you violate, every day, in the presence of this ship's crew, the articles of war you have read to them on Sunday." His resignation then and there, was not done with the intention of remaining inactive while war was going on against the government beloved. Soon after, he enlisted as an able seaman, in Chicago, and was sent the same day, in charge of a squad of men, to the receiving ship, of the Mississippi squadron, at Cairo. Not long after joining, he went before a board of officers, appointed for the purpose of examining and selecting any then in the service who might prove competent for promotion. He was appointed acting master in the U. S. Navy, which took him in one step, from the fore-castle, past the steerage, into the ward-room, thus soon finding in this squadron, higher rank than he had held in the North Atlantic squadron. He has related an incident, occurring soon after his promotion, when, on being detailed to sit as member of a court martial, he found beside him at the table the officer to whom, but a short time before, he had enlisted as an able seaman, who, with a look of great surprise, inquired how he came there; to which came the prompt reply, "By the same orders which brought you here." Most of the time in the Mississippi squadron he was in command of the steamer General Pillow, stationed at Mound City, surrounded by and in the care and charge of a great number of vessels, loaded with all kinds of ammunition, for the destruction of which the "Johnny Rebs" were constantly devising schemes; in which, however, owing to the care and vigilance of Capt. Halsted, they were foiled. While here, his own steamer, General Pillow, took fire, and an eye witness, on the vessel at the time, heard from officers and men warm praise of the gallantry and daring of their commander, who, taking the hose in his own hands, going below where the fire was located, not far from the magazine, remained until the fire was extinguished. After the close of the war, being honorably discharged, he returned to his loved Minnesota home, and, in 1866, built his larger cabin, on the main lake, well known as "The Hermitage."

Here he resided until the time of his sad death in 1876. Though often solicited by his admiring neighbors to accept public positions in civil life, he declined, with the exception of Justice of the Peace, and on another occasion serving as one of a commission for the improvement of navigation on Lake Minnetonka.

We think it would be found on investigation that the first marriage in the town of Minnetrista, was solemnized by Justice Halsted. We have heard him laugh over his experience in joining together his two German neighbors, making the two, one. Dwelling alone for many years, nay, all the time on Lake Minnetonka, except occasional visits of relatives from the East, he acquired the name of "Hermit of Lake Minnetonka" and his cabin, "The Hermitage." Yet those who knew him then, and recall him now, easily remember, there was not much of the accepted attributes of the old time Hermit, in Captain Frank (as he was often called) whose companionable qualities of heart and head, were well known to all having the pleasure of his acquaintance.

His cabin had more charms for its owner than the city could offer, and he here passed much of his time in company, as he said, of the best of men and women, his favorite authors; his shelves being well supplied with copies of the American and English classic authors, both in poetry and prose. He was an excellent sailor and kept a small sloop yacht, which was always ready for his friends, who could with safety trust themselves to his skillful pilotage. No one on Lake Minnetonka was more popular with summer visitors, or more respected by inhabitants of its shores, old and young, than Frank Halsted.

In the winter of 1875-6, he built, near "The Hermitage," the beautiful steamer "Mary," called by this name in honor of the kindest of mothers, then deceased. Before she was fully completed, in June 1876, the subject of this sketch, disappeared from his home, and after several days his body was found in the Lake, near Crane Island, under such circumstances as induced the Jury of Inquest to conclude it was a case of suicide.

In compliance with an oft expressed wish, that when he died, he wanted to be buried on the bank of the lake he loved so well, he was buried at "The Hermitage." The true cause of this much lamented and melancholy occurrence, must ever remain a mystery. The Captain died, and made no sign. Those who knew him best, and his highly refined and sensitive nature, and especially his repugnance to indebtedness, believe that he became despondent over an undertaking less for pecuniary gain, or the hope thereof, than for providing increased facilities and boat accommodations for the rapidly increasing influx of summer visitors to Lake Minnetonka. Owe no man anything, was his motto. He felt the truth of the text, "the debtor is slave to the creditor." In building the "Mary" he incurred debts, which, to ordinary business men, would have been a trifle; to him it was a load more than he could bear. He died lamented by all who knew him, and is yet held in most pleasing remembrance.

John Carman, one of the early settlers of this county, was born in New Jersey, in 1801, where he remained for twelve years, when he moved to Pennsylvania, and worked on a farm until twenty years of age. He was married to Miss Susan Cope, of Pennsylvania, and afterward moved his family to Mahoning county, Ohio, where he remained until 1853, when he moved to Minnesota, stopping a few months in Ramsey county; thence to Minnetonka, in September, of the same year, and pre-empted what is now known as "Carman's Point," on Upper Lake Minnetonka, where the beautiful resort, "Spring Park," is located. He lived there until 1860, when he sold and moved to the place now known as "Maple Shade." In 1868 he returned to New Jersey, where he died, December 13, 1877. His family consisted of seven children: Ann, William, Carry, Benton, Mary, Frank, Emma and Lizzie. His son Frank was born in Ohio, and now lives at Mound City. Is one of the navigators of the Lake, and runs a steam freight boat from Mound City to Wayzata.

Mathias S. Cook, one of the early pioneers of the town, was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, May 19th, 1830; lived with his parents, Job and Mary A. Cook, until twenty years of age. He was married in 1850, to Miss Anna W., daughter of John and Susan Carman, of Ohio. In 1854, he moved to Minnesota, and settled on the claim where he now lives. His first dwelling was a log cabin, 14x20, one and one-half stories high, it being the third house built on the upper lake, and was the stopping place for the weary traveller in those early days. His buildings are now 56x42 feet, and three stories high. Situated on the north margin of "Cook's Bay," known through all this region as "Cook's Landing." Mr. Cook has, with many others, had his full share of the hardships known only to those who lived here in those early days: is now an honored and respected citizen of his town, and has filled many offices of public trust.

Frederick A. Jennings, one of the early settlers of the town, was born in London, England, May 19th, 1807. His father, an officer in the British army, died in 1819. In 1822, the subject of this sketch, emigrated to America, and in 1828 married Miss Mary Moulton, who died in 1830. Mr. Jennings embarked in commission business, dealing largely in iron. In connection with this, he operated the first and only rolling mill near Philadelphia. He also introduced the first process of puddling iron by stone coal heat, which was a great economy in its manufacture; which business he continued up to 1842, when he moved to Centre county, Pennsylvania, establishing a large mercantile trade, conducting a furnace, and running several freight boats to Philadelphia. This business he conducted for ten years, then made a visit to England, being appointed by Secretary Webster to bear messages to England; remained there one year. Returned, and lived in Pittsburgh, engaging with Harvy Childs & Co. for several years. In the fall of 1855, his family moved to Minnesota and settled on the farm he now owns. In 1857, he joined his family in their new wild home, on what is now known as "Jennings Bay," Lake Minnetonka, one of the attractive views of this famous resort. He remained with his family until 1861, when he was appointed to a fourth class clerkship in the United States Treasury Department at Washington, where he remained until 1877, when he returned to his pleasant home in Minnetrista, to live free from the strain of commercial and political life. His second marriage, to Mary A. Parrish, occurred July, 1832. He has five children living: Frederick A., Elizabeth P., Annie P., Susan J., and James G. His son Fred, served in the First Minnesota, also in the Second, and ranked as 1st Lieutenant; was in New Mexico, on garrison duty; at the end of the rebellion mustered out at St. Louis, Missouri; now lives in Minneapolis.

Samuel L. Merriman, one of the earliest settlers of Minnetrista, was born in Alleghany county, New York, 1825. When twenty years old learned the shoemakers trade, which he followed for five years, then bought half interest in a lumbering mill and operated under the name of Merriman and Moorehouse for two years, when he sold his interest and moved to Cumberland county, Illinois, and engaged in farming and other pursuits till the spring of 1856, when he came to what is now Minnetrista and pre-empted the farm on which he now lives. Like many other pioneers of the northern wilds he suffered many hardships during the early years of his life here. May, 1851, was married to Miss Marian, daughter of Lovet H. and Nancy Obert, of Alleghany county, New York, who died February, 1877.

ORGANIZATION.

April 10, 1858, Town 117, Range 24, was set apart by the county commissioners as "German Home." This name was retained until the organization of the town, which occurred in the spring of 1859, when the legal voters met at the house of M. S. Cook and took steps for the organization of the same. Several names were proposed and rejected. The name of Minnetrista was finally proposed and accepted. Minne (meaning waters) and trista (meaning crooked), and from the fact that the town contained so many crooked lakes, this name was considered as the most appropriate, and was accepted. The first election was held at this time, when the following officers were elected: Supervisors, Peter Mitchels, chairman, M. S. Cook, Ephraim Dudley; Town clerk, R. V. Langdon.

At a special meeting held December 31, 1864, it was voted to raise fifteen dollars for each family wherein were drafted men. The following received that amount: Warren Merriman, A. Black, Cyrus Beaman, Martin Ort, John Keiser, Henry Trues, John Adelberger, Joseph Ebert, A. Ebert, Joseph Ball, A. Schneider, F. Merz, John Hirschberger, Wm. Schuler, Joseph Schmidt, James Bailey and Ephraim Dudley. The town levied a tax for the extermination of squirrels. March 14, 1876, resolved, that two cents each be paid, for rat, gopher and chipmunk tails. The town contains 18,576 acres. Assessed valuation of real estate in 1880, $219,359. Personal property, $33,806. Total amount of taxes, 1880, $2,540, with a population of 811.

CHURCHES.

The German Baptist Church, located on Section 32, was organized November 22, 1858, and the present church, a log structure, was built in 1865, at a cost of about $150. It has services every Sunday, also a Sunday School, which is well maintained.

St. Bonifacius Catholic Church, built in 1859, is a log structure, and was organized by Father Shearer, now of Hastings. In connection with the above church is a parish school, which was started, and the building erected, in 1861.

SCHOOLS.

This town was divided by the Town Supervisors in 1861, into three districts. It now has five,

Schools had been held, however, previous to this time; one at the house of a Mr. Gribble, near where Mound City now stands, in the summer of 1860, and taught by Miss Celia Sturman. Another was held in the house of Peter Mitchels, and taught by Miss Emma Carman. School No. 85, located on section 13, was the first school house built in the town, is a log structure, and still stands. School No. 96 is located on Section 32. School No. 84, is located on Section 5. School No. 83, (joint Minnetrista and Independence) located on Section 2, in the north part of the town.

HOTELS.

Mr. M. S. Cook has "kept hotel" ever since his first settlement, and may be truly called the pioneer hotel man of the Upper Lake. Is now owner of the "Lake View" house, so called from its fine view of the Upper Lake. Many of the summer tourists find their way to this beautiful retreat, beguiling the time in fishing on the lake, or hunting in the woodlands that surround "Cook's."

Chapman House was built by S. Chapman, in 1875; a structure 32 x 44 feet, three stories high. In 1876 an addition, 26 x 32 feet, three stories high, was made, and in 1878 a dining-hall, 22 x 64, with an L, 17 x 34 feet, capable of seating three hundred people, was added, making it large, airy and commodious.

STEAM MILLS.

Mr. Cook built a flour and feed mill in 1880, 14 x 20 feet, engine room 12 x 24 feet, one run of stone, which is found to be a great convenience. S. L. Merriman, also runs a small feed-mill during the winter time, for the accommodation of the neighborhood.

POST-OFFICES.

The first post-office in the town was established in 1856, and named St. Bonifacius. John Merz appointed postmaster. It was moved one mile north of the village in 1873. —BIOGRAPHICAL.

Independence is situated in the western part of the county, and derives its name from Lake Independence, a large lake lying partly in this town and partly in Medina. The surface is mainly rolling and timbered. A belt of nearly level land, however, extends around Maple Plain, and to the southwest. The town is well supplied with wild meadow land, and has many small marshes. Nearly a dozen lakes dot the surface, and two streams flow through it. Lake Independence is the largest of the lakes, and is situated a mile from the little village of Maple Plain. It is a beautiful sheet of water, about two miles in length, and one in width, with good fishing. The scenery around the lake is very charming, noticeable features of which are, Cedar Point, at the north, and Pickerel Point, at the southwest. The lake derived its name from a party of Fourth of July excursionists. Kelsey Hinman, one of the party, named it Lake Independence, in honor of the national holiday, on which their excursion took place. In the northern part of the lake is a small island, which was once covered with red cedar, and has several times been inhabited for a short time. The outlet of Lake Independence is Pioneer Creek, the principal stream of the town. This stream flows in a southwesterly course across the town, into one of the small lakes, which, in this county, are frequently united in a chain by small creeks, until, at last, their waters are discharged into the boundary rivers. The soil of the town is a close clay, of grayish color. The timber is hard wood, with a liberal intermixture of basswood.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The town was first settled in 1854-5, by Job Moffat, Irvin Shrewsbury, John R. McGary, E. Hoisington, John M. Williams, J. B. Perkins, E. Brandon, William Fogleman and others. The death of Mr. Lewis was the first in the present limits of the town. The first white child born in the town was Lizzie, daughter of Daniel and Margaret Styner. She is now Mrs. E. B. Dodd, and resides in Minneapolis. The first marriage was that of Kelsey Hinman and Miss Lydia Ann Moffat, in the spring of 1856. The mother of the bride, Mrs. Job Moffat, was the first white woman in the town. The family removed, several years since. Mrs. Win. Fogleman is the oldest settler of those now remaining. Her family came originally from North Carolina, but had lived twenty years in Indiana before coming to Minnesota.

They reached the present site of Wayzata, May 12th, 1855, cutting their own road a portion of the way from Minneapolis. They made a claim on Long Lake, but soon left it for their present location, near Maple Plain. Among the old settlers of Independence was William Cox, who made and improved a claim, now owned by Joshua Styner, on section 22. He came here from Indiana, in 1856, and had never seen a railroad until the present line was built through his farm; although over sixty years old. About two years after the road was built he moved to Iowa, and died soon after. One mile west of Maple Plain, and lying partly on the original claim of Mr. Cox, is Armstrong, a flag station, now little used, and having no agent.

In 1857, John and Needham Perkins, laid out a village plat on the south bank of Lake Independence, a part of which is now in Medina. They each built a frame dwelling-house. These were the first frame buildings in this region, and are still standing. Needham Perkins also built a saw-mill, and opened a small store, both of which were abandoned after about two years. A school-house was also erected in the present limits of Medina.

Aside from the inconveniences incident to western emigration, the early settlers of Independence suffered from two causes not usual—Indians and grasshoppers. These two pests caused inconvenience and the latter especially hardship. Hordes of Sioux, not at this time positively hostile, hovered around the settlements, rendering themselves obnoxious as beggars and pilferers. In the winter of 1856-7, about 300 of them were encamped on Pioneer Lake, and the following winter about double the number wintered on the same camping ground. Shakopee, a sub-chief, was their leader, who fell at the battle of Wood Lake, near the Yellowstone, in an engagement with General Sibley's expedition, in 1862. Their circle hunts swept the game in the near vicinity out of the reach of the settlers, and deprived them of even a fair share. During the first winter of their unwelcome visit, they killed 209 deer, in the near vicinity of their camp.

The grasshopper scourge was, however, the greatest hardship. Late in July, 1856, invading swarms came from the northwest, and began overspreading the country. In the fall, vast swarms invaded this town, and remained until the following June. No green leaf or herb escaped the voracious insects, either in the fall or spring, and starvation seemed imminent. Fortunately, relief came to the afflicted settlers from a novel source. There arose a demand for an unusual article, the ginseng root, with which the woods abounded. Agents were stationed at various points, to purchase it for shipment to China. The settlers seem to have been provided for by a dispensation almost as miraculous as the feeding of the children of Israel with manna. They collected large amounts of the root, and by money received from its sale, tided over the hardship.

TOWN ORGANIZATION, ETC.

The town was organized in 1858, and the first town meeting held on Tuesday, May 11th, at the house of J. Wilson. The meeting was called to order by Richard McGary. Robert P. Stinson was chosen Moderator and William C. Hazleton, Clerk. The whole number of votes cast was 18, and the following officers chosen. Supervisors:

Irvin Shrewsbury, Chairman, Daniel Styner and Ebenezer Brandon; Clerk, Norman Shook; Assessor, William C. Hazleton; Collector, N. E. McGary; Justices of the Peace, Robert P. Stinson and Henry Swingle; Constables, Wesley Hall and Earl Hoisington; Overseer of Highways, John C. Williams. The first regular meeting of the new Board was held May 19th, at which meeting, it was ordered that each 160 acres of land in the town be assessed at $500, and that a tax of thirty cents per $100 be levied upon such lands for roads and highways; also ordered, "that each and every inhabitant over the age of twenty-one and under the age of fifty years, shall perform two days work as directed by the Overseer of Roads and Highways." At a meeting of the Board to audit accounts, March 29th, 1859, the orders delivered and audited amounted to $98.59, which amount represented the town expenses for its first year. We also give a comparison of the amount of mail matter, ten years ago and now as a significant item. Ten years ago, when George W. Smith first became postmaster at Maple Plain, one pigeon-hole, 3½x4 inches, furnished ample storage for all mail matter. Now, two hundred weekly papers and seven dailies are received, with a proportional increase in other mail matter. The town officers at present are: Supervisors, William W. Budd, Chairman, John Batdorf, John R. Stinson; Clerk, R. M. Mills; Assessor and Treasurer, John H. McGary.

STATISTICS.

The population of Independence by the census of 1880, is 811. Number of acres, exclusive of town lots, 21,344. Assessed valuation of the same in 1869, $85,936; in 1875, $138,127; in 1880, $228,671. Personal property at assessed valuation, in 1869, $16,855; in 1875, $24,211; in 1880, $35,999. Taxes in 1869, $2,763; in 1875, $2,942; in 1880, $4,022. Horses in 1869, 86; in 1875, 121; in 1880, 218. Cattle over two years old, in 1869, 413; in 1875, 588; in 1880, 512. VILLAGES.

After the railroad was fairly in progress in 1868, a small village plat was laid out during the summer, by H. C. and W. Budd, and later, another adjoining the first on the west, by William H. Marsh. This second plat is now the village of Maple Plain, and the business part of the town. It lies in section 24, while the original plat was in section 25. Here are the hotels, stores, blacksmith shops, mills, etc.

MANUFACTURING.

The town has two steam saw-mills, also a syrup manufactory, run by a stationary engine. The capacity of the syrup factory is 225 gallons per day. During the season of 1880, it manufactured 3,055 gallons. Mr. E. D. Burnett owns a small steam saw-mill on Pioneer Creek, a little north of Armstrong station. A blacksmith shop and a wagon shop complete the record of mills and shops.

There are two hotels, two stores and an elevator. The elevator is owned by the Elevator Company. It is little used except as a storehouse. A church, school house and Good Templar's hall comprise the public buildings.

POST OFFICE.

Mr. Irvin Shrewsbury, who in 1860, represented the district in the Legislature, was the first postmaster. The office was established in 1856 and located at his residence, near the centre of section 26. The mail was brought weekly from Minneapolis. This was the terminus of the route until an office was established at Watertown.

RAILROAD.

In 1868 a railroad, now known as the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, was built through the town, and in September the station, Maple Plain, was established.

SCHOOLS.

The first school house in Independence, was near the present site of school No. 81, and was built in the spring of 1858. A log building 14x18 feet was first built, but after a few years it was replaced by a larger building of hewn logs, which in 1878, gave place to the present structure, a neat frame building, 26x44 feet, well finished and furnished with patent desks, seats, etc., etc. The first school was taught in the winter of 1857-8, by Norman Shook, in a dwelling left vacant by the death of William Lewis and the removal of his family. Schools are also sustained in four other districts. No. 80 in section 2, No. 79 in section 17, No. 82 in section 30, No. 102 in section 3, a joint district, part of which is in the town of Greenwood. There are also three other joint districts, No. 61, with Medina; No. 83, with Minnetrista and No. 112 with Greenwood.

CHURCHES.

Methodist. The first religious meeting was held, in 1855, by Rev. J. J. Camp, a Methodist clergyman, under whose guidance a class was formed, of which Mr. Irvin Shrewsbury was leader. This society still preserves its organization and, though not large, holds regular meetings in the school house of district No. 81.

Presbyterian. The only church edifice in the town is the Presbyterian church, at Maple Plain. This is a substantial frame building, well finished inside. It is 26x40 feet in size, built in 1872-3. The society was organized in 1871 by Rev. Charles Thayer. G. W. Smith and C. W. Ingerson were chosen elders, which office they still hold. The membership was twelve, at the time of organization. Mr. Thayer resigned his pastorate September 20, 1875. Rev. Benson followed Mr. Thayer, remaining about one year. Revs. Hall, Higgins, Wood and McCahan have in turn succeeded to the charge, remaining but short terms. The church is without stated preaching at the writing of this sketch.

The Good Templars Lodge was organized in April, 1874. Its present membership is about forty and steadily gaining. Meetings are held every Saturday evening.

in 1818. From that state he went to Indiana, where he remained until 1855, when he came to Independence, and pre-empted a claim of 160 acres. He was the second man who moved into this town, and has since resided here. In 1848, he enlisted, and served one year in the Mexican war. James, Allie, Harvey, Moses, George, and Imogene are children by his first marriage. His present wife was a Miss Wright, to whom he was married in 1873.

George Washington was born in Virginia, in 1813, and remained there until 1849, when he removed with his parents to Tennessee, and in 1863 came to Minnesota. He was married in 1879, to Phoebe Yancey, by whom he has one child, Willie, born, March 21st, 1880. Mr. Washington is engaged in farming, and is the owner of eighty acres of land on section fifteen.

CADE—BIOGRAPHICAL.

TOWNS, though tracing their settlement and origin to the same general causes, perhaps the same dates, are, nevertheless, found to possess historic data differing from their immediate neighbors, as widely as do the lives of individuals. Some furnish little, save the prosaic record of settlement and growth, the current flowing smoothly on, its surface scarcely rippled by an incident or legend. In others the tide is swollen with such plenteous accumulations of fact and fancy, that the chief difficulty encountered by the historian, is the selection of such items as will be of the greatest general interest, since the limits of space in this volume, consigns many noteworthy facts to the uncertain custody of future tradition. The latter is the case with Medina, and it is a matter of no little regret that so few of the interesting events pertaining to its early history can here be given.

SITUATION AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Medina is an interior town, embracing, in addition to the original township, that portion of Excelsior lying north of Lake Minnetonka, and has an area of 26,023 acres. Its surface is uneven, and in the northwestern portion somewhat hilly. Several clear lakes dot the surface. On the west, and lying partly in the town bearing its name, is Lake Independence. This and the larger lake mentioned as forming the southern boundary, are the principal bodies of water. Long Lake, from which the only village of the town is named, is of peculiar beauty. A few small streams furnish outlets for nearly all the interior lakes. The town is heavily timbered, excepting a small belt skirting the north-western portion.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first permanent settlers came here in 1854. A marked character among them was Stephen Bean, who came from Maine, and settled about a mile west of Long Lake. He was a kind neighbor, hospitable, open-hearted, generous, and had a wonderfully fertile imagination. Karl and William Charles Kassube came in 1854. A. T. French came from Ohio and settled on the north side of Crystal Bay, a point commanding one of the finest views of the lake; he has seen all the lights and shadows of fortunes, changes.

Mr. French, Vincent Cox and the Foglemans brought the first horses into this region. Newton French, William Carman, Evan Templin and Richard Danforth came from Ohio; Theodore A. Norris, Wallace Hatter and Judson Beach from Michigan; James Dumbreck, David Lydiard, Eleazer Dickey and Daniel Thompson from Nova Scotia, and John Mattison from Illinois, all taking claims near Long Lake. In the same year came William Russell from New York and Fred A. Jennings from Ohio. The location selected by Mr. Russell was in section seventeen, on the west shore of one of the numerous bays now partly in Medina and Excelsior. Here he laid the foundation for a city which never came, and "Island City" waited in vain for the state capital. Fred A. Jennings was a man whose daring nearly cost him his life by drowning in Lake Minnetonka, and once, lost him in the wilderness between the lake and his home.

EVENTS OF 1855.

Prominent among the arrivals this year, were Isaac A. Christlieb, R. H. and J. L. Knette, B. C. Haines and John Schaffer, from Pennsylvania; Vincent Cox, William and Henry Fogleman and Edward Turnham, from Indiana; Asa Kelley and Kelsey Hinman from Ohio; E. F. Walsh, Jas. Dillman, Samuel Lydiard and Miles Bayers, from Nova Scotia; Shepherd Barnes from Maine; Hon. A. J. Underwood (now editor of the Fergus Falls Journal) from Ohio; Henry Stubbs, Allen Grave, George, James and F. R. Maxwell from Illinois. Mr. Grave's and Mr. Stubbs' daughters were the first young ladies in the settlement, and their advent produced quite a ripple in the bachelor element. The Maxwell brothers brought their father with them; one of Napoleon's trained veterans, who followed the fortunes of the great Captain through many of his campaigns. John Schmidt, built and owns the "Medina House," which he now rents to A. J. Rosander. This year about fifty German families, settled in the north part of the town; prominent among them were Matthias Miller, John Wolsfeld, Phillip Klein, and C. W. Burchfield. Mr. Miller was the "Peacemaker" and one of the founders of Medina, whose death in 1880, was mourned by the entire community. Mr. Wolsfeld, while returning from Minneapolis seven years ago, was attacked by a man named Wirth, and so severely beaten that he lost his eyesight. Wirth was arrested, tried, and sentenced to seven years imprisonment. The enraged citizens wanted to save the state the expense of the trial. Miss Emma Maxwell was the first child born in Medina. She is now Mrs. Melvina Smith. Elkanah Cox, who died at the residence of his brother, on the farm now owned by I. A. Christlieb, was the first death. The Wayzata road, from Minneapolis to a point near the western margin of the county, where it intersects another established road, was located by O. E. Garrison. A few additional names are given of those who settled here from 1855 to 1860. Isaac Sharth, Bradford Wakefield, Perry Parrish, from Ohio; Gibson Teas, J. B. & O. B. Brown, from Indiana; E. M. Snow and B. F. Christlieb from Pennsylvania; James Johnson, W. A. Spafford, A. Kruikshanks, Valerous Chilson and B. Gasper. In 1862 they were followed by William and Joseph Lydiard, Andrew Brown, C. Dittman, and others, all settling in or near the present village of Long Lake. Alonzo Coleman was an early settler and prominent in town affairs.

EVENTS OF 1856.

Claim jumping was one of the initial events; one Kohler, thus attempted to gain possession of C. E. Dickey's claim, on section 26. He built his cabin, and took possession when the neighbors, led by Samuel Lydiard, drove the intruder away and demolished his castle; he, however, compromised, and purchased the claim he would have jumped. It was again attempted on a mulatto, named Alfred, but his "backers" were too many, and the invader wisely retreated. No written contract existed between the settlers of Medina, but there was a distinct understanding that each actual settler should be protected in his rights; this fact being known, put an end to claim jumping. The first marriage was that of Sebastian Kohler to Miss Baumeister. The first school, was taught by Charles Christlieb, in an old claim shanty on section 34, owned by George Knettle, his wages being paid by subscription. A school house was built on section 1, but never used. In 1858 another was built on section 31, known as the Hursh school house, in which a school, supported by tax, was opened by Miss Jane Cowden of Ashtabula, Ohio.

EVENTS OF 1857.

During this year, the old Territorial Road, known as the Minneapolis and Fort Ridgely road, was laid through the town. The route was suggested by L. A. Christlieb, who, with the assistance of Samuel Lydiard, secured the survey by R. J. Mendenhall. George Knettle built a small steam saw mill a short distance west of the present village, and also built a house and a hotel. This was the foundation for his "City of Cumberland." D. A. Keyes and Frank Fleming built houses within the limits of the city, and there its growth ended. A lyceum was organized in one of the buildings, where the Solons met and discussed the questions of those times. Another city was located on the town line between Medina and Independence, by John and Needham Perkins, and called Perkinsville. A store, hotel and a few dwellings marked its greatest growth. It struggled for metropolitan honors, but finally went down, and now exists only in memory.

This year was one of want, occasioned by the ravages of the grasshoppers. The prices of what was left of the crop were so low that the settlers were driven to the verge of despair. They were relieved by the sudden demand for the ginseng root, which grew abundantly in the woods. All went to gathering it, and were temporarily relieved.

EVENTS OF 1858.

In this year was established the first post-office, the first school house was built, and the town organized. Henry Stubbs secured the establishment of a post office on section 23, called Tamarac, which was continued there until 1861, when it was removed to Long Lake, and John A. Coleman appointed postmaster. The name was changed from Tamarac to Long Lake, in 1867. The mail came from Minneapolis once a week, until the building of the railroad in 1868; since then they have had a daily mail.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

April 10th, 1858, township 118, range 23, was designated by the County Commissioners as Hamburg, and the first town records appear under that name.

On the 11th of May, 1858, the first town meeting was held at the house of Valerous Chilson, at which thirty-seven voters were present. Mr. Chilson was called to the chair, Andrew Scherer elected Moderator, and W. F. Hillman Clerk. The following officers were then elected: Supervisors, Valerous Chilson, Chairman, C. W. Burchfield, George Reiser; Town Clerk, W. F. Hillman; Assessor, L. Lenzen; Collector, Andrew Scherer; Overseer of Poor, Jos. Lenzen; Justices, Wm. Archibald and James Crowe; Constables, Leo Stumpf and Adolph Buttz; Overseer of Roads, B. Gasper. Resolutions were offered to organize school districts, defining legal fences, and regulating the running at large of stock. George Reiser offered a resolution to change the name of the town to Medina, which was unanimously adopted. The town then embraced but one regular township, and remained so until 1868, when that part of Excelsior lying north of Lake Minnetonka was added, by act of County Commissioners, March 2d. This was proposed in 1863, but rejected by a vote of sixty to fifteen.

LATER EVENTS.

In December, 1859, Shakopee (Little Six) and his band, including the notorious Cut Nose, camped on the south shore of Long Lake, on the grounds now in use as the village cemetery, where they remained about a month, and would have remained much longer, but for a ruse adopted by Selden Coleman and John B. Wakefield. They started a rumor that the Chippewas were massing in the vicinity. The ruse had the desired effect, and the camp was quickly deserted. The same Coleman afterward recognized both Shakopee and Cut Nose in the band captured by Gen. Sibley in his raid across the plains.

The massacre of 1862 filled the community with excitement and alarm. A stockade was built where now stands the residence of John McCormick, in the village of Long Lake, and at several other points, where the people gathered nights for mutual protection. Many from farther west flocked here for safety. The dwellings of L. A. Christleib, George Knettle, and James Johnson (old Cumberland House) were converted into semi-fortresses for defence. In 1863 came another scare, from the fact that Little Crow, with a few braves, was seen skulking in the vicinity. Whatever might have been his intentions, they were not accomplished, and on his way back to the plains he was met by a Mr. Lampson, near Hutchinson, who shot him at sight, and ended the life of this cunning leader. During all these exciting times, Mrs. Matthias Miller was the only woman who did not leave her home, but with Spartan courage remained at her post, exhibiting a coolness that would do honor to the sterner sex.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS—1859-1869.

The first regular preaching was in the school house at Cumberland, about 1858, by Rev. Geo. Galpin, a Methodist.

Free Thinkers' Club. This name was adopted by a small society formed in 1860; numbering at one time about thirty; at present it has about half that membership. They own a hall 28x40 feet, with basement for culinary use on social occasions. It was built in 1874.

In 1860 a post-office was established in the north-east part of the town through the efforts of L. Lenzen, who was the first postmaster. The office was named in honor of its founder—"Lenz." J. O. Hamel is the present postmaster.

Presbyterian Church. In 1863 Rev. James Hunter commenced preaching at Long Lake, and in 1869 a church was built. It is open to all denominations. Rev. Charles Thayer has been the principal pastor since it was opened.

St. Peter's and St. Paul's Catholic Church was organized about 1862, and a small structure built, which was replaced by the present edifice in 1867. The society is now large and sustains weekly service.

German Catholic Church. In 1863 a society was formed and a small building erected on section twenty-four, which, in 1876 gave place to the present structure, the old building being remodeled as a residence for the priest. The society is now large, and sustains weekly services, Rev. P. Magnus M. Mayr officiating.

Good Templars. A lodge of Good Templars was organized several years ago, which is now steadily increasing in numbers, holding their meetings in "Free Thinkers' Hall" on Friday evening of each week.

Union Cemetery. In 1861 a cemetery association was formed, and a site selected on the south bank of Long Lake, affording a fine view of the lake and surrounding country. A portion of it is platted and laid out into walks and carriage drives, a charming spot. The first burial was an infant child of Bradford Wakefield, in 1862.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

In 1866, Mills, Cutler & Co., built a stave factory at Long Lake, and sold it in 1868 to Chas. May & Co., who operated it for ten years. Since that time it has only run at intervals. In 1867 Mills, Condit & Co., opened a general store near the west end of Long Lake; it was the only store at that time. They sold to Low, May & Co., who sold to other parties. Its building was due to the prospect of the speedy completion of the St. P. & P. R. R., which was surveyed in 1865. Grading was commenced in 1866, and in 1868, the cars were running, a depot built, and the village of Long Lake began to grow. In 1855, the Hon. Lewis Harrington stood at a land corner on section 33, and with prophetic accuracy said: "Gentlemen, when a road is built through this region, it can not go far from where we now stand." The right of way now includes that identical spot.

THE LAST DECADE—1870-80.

Saint Anna Church, French Catholic. This structure was commenced in 1874, and completed in 1879. The first regular service was held in May, same year. Rev. Z. G. Chandonnet was its first pastor, and remained until January 1st, 1880. He was succeeded by Rev. Peter Boucher, the present incumbent. The society numbers about five hundred.

MEDINA MILL COMPANY.

In January, 1875, a stock company was formed for the purpose of building a first-class flouring mill. The incorporators were: Samuel, David and Joseph Lydiard, E. and B. Dickey, I. A. Christlieb, Robert Logan, Wm. Braden, C. W. Weeks, John Burns and E. M. Snow. It was rented for a term of years to B. M. Smith, who operated it only two years. After passing through various changes of ownership, it came into the hands of its present owners, Syme & DeMott. It is about sixty feet square, five stories high, and run by a Corliss condensing engine, of 150 horse power. The mill has a capacity for 350 barrels per day, and furnishes employment to twenty-five workmen. They own and operate a cooper shop where they manufacture their barrels, and have a side track, for receiving and discharging freight. The quality of the flour made at this mill, with its new and improved machinery, is not excelled by any in the Northwest.

LENZ GRIST MILL.

was built in 1876, by Francis Huot. It is two stories high, and has two runs of stone, driven by a twenty-five horse-power engine, and is doing a thriving business.

TOWN HOUSE.

In 1878, a Town House was built on the southwest corner of Section 22, a location selected with especial reference to the accommodation of the majority of voters. Medina now has a population of 1,162 inhabitants, with a real estate valuation of $319,633, with $21,285 in the village of Long Lake, and an assessed valuation of $17,661 in personal property. Its taxes for 1880 were $1,765. Its stock reports for 1880, show 370 horses, 565 cattle over two years old, 783 sheep, 495 hogs. The reports also show 2,960 acres sown to wheat the same year. The village of Long Lake contains a good school building, erected in 1878, where a graded school is supported, nine months in the year. It has a seating capacity for about one hundred. The other schools of the town have houses located as follows: Joint District No. 60, (Medina and Corcoran,) section 5; District No. 63, section 11; District No. 7, section 23; District No. 62, section 8; District No. 91, section 32; all in town 118; and District No. 91, ection 4, Township 117, the portion formerly belonging to Excelsior.

OFFICIAL ROSTER.

The following are the names of the Chairmen of Board of Supervisors, since the town organization: 1858, Valerous Chilson; 1859 to 1863, John A. Coleman; 1864, Saml. Lydiard; 1865, I. A. Christlieb; 1866, A. Buttz; 1867, Samuel Lydiard; 1868, J. P. Meurer; 1869 to 1871, D. A. Keyes; 1872, C. W. Gordon; 1873, A. P. Bills; 1874-5, N. J. Stubbs; 1876 to 1878, Peter Miller; 1879, Peter Maurer; 1880, Peter Miller. The other officers for 1880, were, Supervisors, Benj. Maxon and Nelson Barnes; Clerk, R. B. Dickey; Treasurer, B. F. Christlieb; Assessor, J. P. Meurer; Justices, A. C. Bailey and J. P. Meurer; Constables, J. A. Coleman and Geo. Reiser. In 1865-6, by a misapprehension of the law, the time of holding town meetings was changed from April to March. The error was discovered in the latter year, and another election held April 14th. This is called a special meeting in the old town records, but was in fact the regular meeting.

CRYSTAL LAKE.

CHAPTER XLIV.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION — SETTLEMENT — CIVIL HISTORY — MANUFACTURING INTERESTS — CHURCHES — SCHOOLS — RAILROAD — BIOGRAPHICAL.

This is one of the eastern tier of townships, bordering on the Mississippi River. The surface is undulating, or rolling, and is lightly wooded, except in the western part where the quality of the soil is better, and merges into a beautiful prairie. The area of brick clay extends along the river, and is utilized as seen under the head of manufactures. Four lakes and one creek, represent the internal waters of the town. Twin lake is far the largest, formed, as its name would indicate, by the union of two bodies of water by a narrow strait. The shores of this lake are considerably marshy. Crystal lake is smaller, but has a good depth of water and better shores. These lakes are well stocked with fish; pickerel, bass, etc. Armstrong lake is quite small, with shores mostly hard. Crandall lake has no inlet or outlet, and is gradually drying up. Shingle creek flows through the eastern part of the town and affords a water-power near its mouth.

SETTLEMENT OF CRYSTAL LAKE.

The first settlement was made in 1852, and the first settler was John Ware Dow, who came March 26th. John C. Bohanon came March 27th. Later, the same year came Mrs. Rhoda Bean and family, Joel and Eben Howe, John M. Snow, Hiram Armstrong, David Smith, George Camp, Mr. McNair, and Leonard Gould. Mr. John Wesley Dow, son of John Ware Dow, made his claim July 5th of the same year. About the same time and later, came Mr. N. P. Warren, Josiah Dutton, Wyman McCumber, L. Wagner, John Gearty, and Rev. Lyman Palmer. Other names of early settlers are Rufus Farnham, D.

C. Crandall, George Giebenhain, Peter Schuller, Z. Gillespie, David Morgan, E. McCausland, H. R. Stillman, and J. S. Mallon.

The first death occurred in the family of Mr. Bohanon — a little boy, Frederick, aged six months. He was born in St. Anthony, and was about two months old at the time the claim was entered. The second death was that of Mrs. Bohanon, who died January 11th, 1853.

In 1857, a few were left destitute by the ravages of grasshoppers, but this town suffered much less than others adjacent. After the reduction of the Military Reservation, and the consequent settlement of Minneapolis, Crystal Lake, as well as the other towns near by, developed rapidly. The present population of the town is 1023. Acres of land, 14,550. Assessed valuation of land in 1869, $88,588; 1875, $343,035; 1880, $489,194. Personal property in 1869, $27,562; 1875, $37,257; 1880, $69,693. Total taxes, 1869, $2,927; 1875, $3,733; 1880, $4,376. Horses over two years old, in 1869, 222; 1875, 285; 1880, 361. Cattle over two years old, in 1869, 493; 1875, 636; 1880, 415. Sheep, 1869, 381; 1875, 248; 1880, 281. Hogs, 1869, 443; 1875, 411; 1880, 212. Bushels of wheat in 1869, 11,416; 1875, 15,731; 1880, acreage, 2,314.

The northern part of Crystal Lake was once called Farmersville, embracing the three northern tiers of sections of the township. Previous to the establishment of Farmersville, two of the four tiers of sections which now constitute the town Crystal Lake, belonged to the town of Brooklyn, and two to the town of Minneapolis. The town of Farmersville was set apart by the county commissioners, July 8th, 1858, by taking two tiers of sections from Brooklyn and one from Minneapolis. At a subsequent meeting this action was re-considered and Farmersville was never organized, but lapsed, and the boundaries remained as established April 10th, 1858. In 1860, Crystal Lake was formed, by taking two tiers of sections from Brooklyn and two from Minneapolis.

CIVIL HISTORY.

The caucus for the nomination of the first officers of the town, was held at the house of J. S. Malbon, March 24th, 1860, and the first election was held at the same place, April 3d. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Malbon and H. S. Camp was elected temporary chairman; Moderator, N. R. Thompson; Clerk, H. S. Camp; Judges of Election, James Brown, J. S. Malbon and Z. Gillespie. The oath was administered by H. S. Camp, notary public. The following officers were elected: Supervisors, Henry S. Plummer, chairman, John B. Johnson, Lorenzo P. Warren; Treasurer, Zachariah Gillespie; Assessor, Luther M. Bartlow; Justices, H. S. Camp and David W. Jones; Constables, Warren Willy and J. S. Wales; Superintendent of Schools, N. R. Thompson. The total number of votes cast at this election, was fifty-five. The supervisors were authorized to levy a tax of $200, on the "polls" and "real estate" to defray incidental expenses for the year of 1860. April 30th, Josiah Dutton was appointed assessor, Mr. Bartlow having failed to qualify. The town officers for 1880 were: Supervisors, Phillip Hynes, chairman, Phillip Kuch and George L. Brimhall; Clerk, N. F. Russ; Treasurer, J. P. Shumway; Assessor, Theodore Kirkwood.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

David Morgan built the first flouring mill in Crystal Lake, in 1859. It was 30x40 feet, two stories high and had two runs of stone. The mill stood on the north-east quarter of section four, near the present site of H. Oswald's house. A dam was built on the creek, and a race, about twenty-five rods in length, cut to it. The race has now disappeared, but the dam remains. Mr. Morgan sold the old mill, with the improvements he had made, to parties who built the new one on its present site. The old machinery was used and new material added. It was purchased in 1872, by Oswald and Bingenheimer, and since the death of the latter, in 1873, it has been owned and operated by Mr. Oswald. The mill is located near the Mississippi river, on Shingle creek. The main building is 40x47 feet, with one addition for the shafting and water wheel, and another for an engine. It has a seventeen and a half inch turbine wheel and an engine of sixty horse power. The engine has been recently added.

The mill has four runs of stone, one crusher, three middlings purifiers and five bolting reels. All the machinery is new and complete. The capacity of the mill is about one hundred barrels in twenty-four hours.

Morrison's Brick Yard. In 1876 this yard was opened by Messrs. S. D. Morrison and V. Truesdell, and operated by them three years. It has four mills for grinding clay, and employs about twenty men. The capital employed is about $6,000, and the product of the yard, in 1880, was 1,800,000 brick, which found a ready market in Minneapolis.

Brick Yard of Johnson and Berg. This yard was formerly carried on by Todd and Johnson, but is now owned and operated by Johnson and Berg. It employs four clay grinding mills and about twenty men. The capital employed is about $5,000. The brick manufactured in this and the neighboring yards, are the light-colored brick common to this vicinity.

Weithoff's Brick Yard. This yard is located on section twelve and is owned and operated by Mr. William Weithoff. It employs two machines for grinding clay, and about eight men. Its product is 600,000 brick annually.

Shops. E. L. Higgins' blacksmith shop is the only one in town. It was built long ago, but has been occupied only two years by Mr. Higgins.

Only one small store is found in town, which carries the usual stock of dry goods and groceries. It is located at Shingle Creek. In 1875, Anton Wolf built a hotel on section six. It is located four miles from Minneapolis, near the banks of Crystal Lake, and is frequented by sportsmen in the hunting season. The post-office is at Shingle Creek. As this town borders on the city of Minneapolis, nearly all of the south half of section ten has been platted in town lots, as an addition to that city, and the streets are numbered and laid out regularly as a part thereof, though not embraced under the city government.

Witt's stock yards and slaughter house. Chas. Witt, built and put in operation this institution, in 1879, since which time it has been growing rapidly in favor. The stock yards are the largest in this part of the state, and are situated corner of 2d street and 26th Avenue North, on the south line of the town. The business of the yard during the last year, has been over six thousand head of cattle, besides a general commission business in live stock. The sheds afford accommodation for eight hundred head of cattle, and telephone connection with the city enables Mr. Witt to send men promptly to the depots and markets, for removing stock, and other purposes. The slaughter house is open to the use of all dealers in meats in the city, and is already used by many. It affords facilities for killing sixty head per day, is well equipped, and kept in a neat condition by the proprietor, furnishing every convenience for the transaction of business. In connection with it, is kept a neat hotel, for the accommodation of customers and the general public.

CHURCHES.

Three church organizations are sustained in the town: the "Methodist Episcopal," "Free Will Baptist," and "Catholic." The Methodist organization, began by the forming of a class, in 1867, under Rev. Jesse Smith, at the school house, where preaching was had once in two weeks. Rev. Mr. Smith continued one year. His successors were Revs. J. H. Macomber, three years; Henry Brook, two years; David Brooks, one year; F. H. Tubbs, two years; L. P. Smith, two years; O. E. Stoddard, eight months. Rev. Mr. Stoddard died while in charge, and Rev. J. W. Cornish finished that year. Rev. Boyd Phelps, the next pastor, remained one year, and Rev. Levi Gleason, one year. Rev. J. Teter is the present pastor. In March, 1879, the church building was commenced: it was completed and dedicated November 30th, 1879. It is a frame building, veneered with brick, in size 30 x 46 feet, with a vestibule 8 x 16 feet, and twenty feet posts. It is finished in pine and black walnut, is heated by a furnace, has a good organ, and cost about $2,100. The cemetery is near the church, on the south.

The Crystal Lake and Brooklyn Free Will Baptist church, was organized, May 27th, 1860, with six members, by Rev. W. Hayden and A. D. Sandborn. It had no pastor, but only occasional preaching until March, 1862. About this time, Rev. R. W. Bryant, of Minneapolis, commenced visiting the church, holding occasional evening meetings, and Rev. H. N. Herrick preached every two weeks. Rev. Mr. Bryant was pastor from this time until May, 1864, when he was succeeded by Rev. J. Elliot. Rev. W. Hayden was pastor, during 1869, and Rev. C. L. Russell, in 1870-71. From this date to 1876, the church was partially supplied by Rev. H. N. Herrick; then followed Rev. J. C. Robinson for one year, Rev. A. J. Davis, until the fall of 1878, and Rev. A. H. Hanscome for one year. A vacancy then occurred, until April 1880, when the present pastor Rev. D. D. Mitchell took the charge. The membership is now thirty, and the officers are, clerk, J. P. Shumway; deacons, D. W. Jones and William M. Stinchfield. The church was built in 1875-6, on section 5 and is about 30x40 feet, with 18 feet posts. It is a neat structure, completely finished within, and cost about $2,200.

St. Mary's Catholic Church has about twenty members. The building is of wood, and was built for a German Catholic school-house in 1863. The original building was about 20x30, but in 1873, when it began to be used as a church, an addition was made about two-thirds the size of the original building and it then received its present name. The first priest was Father Eberhart and the present, Father P. Bartholomews. The first baptism, was that of Matthias Reichert, May 10th, 1863. A cemetery adjoins the church on the east.

SCHOOLS.

January 3d, 1853, John Ware Dow was notified by John H. Stevens, then clerk of the Board of County Commissioners, that a school district called No. 2, had been formed and he was requested to notify the legal voters therein and call a meeting. The district at that time included nearly all the north half of the county. A line running west from the river, about a mile north of the south line of Crystal Lake township to the west boundary of the county, was the south line of the district. A school was held that year in a claim shanty on land that now belongs to J. Gillespie, and taught by Miss Smith. This was probably the first school in the northern part of the county. The old school building was located near the site of the present one, belonging to No. 26. A school system has grown up, embracing at the present time, five school districts and several joint districts: No. 23 on section 18, house built in 1863; No. 24 on section 16, house built in 1867; No. 25 on section 10, house built 1872; No. 26 at Shingle creek, house built about 1863; No. 118 on section 2, house built in 1877. The buildings with the exception of that on section 18 are good, and are all furnished with patent desks.

RAILROAD.

The Minneapolis and North-western branch of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway is now in process of construction. It enters from the south, near the east corner of section 7, and passes diagonally across the township, and out on the north line of section 5, west of the center. The location of the road is extremely unfavorable, and a source of great annoyance to the farmers along a portion of the line.

BROOKLYN.

CHAPTER XLV.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—EARLY SETTLEMENT—
POLITICAL RECORD—CHURCHES—SCHOOLS—
BIOGRAPHICAL.

Brooklyn is situated in the north-eastern part of the county, on the Mississippi river. The original boundaries of the town were established April 10th, 1858, and embraced, in addition to township 119, range 21, the two northern tiers of sections in 118, 21, which now form a part of Crystal Lake. At a session of the board of county commissioners, July 8th, 1858, the boundaries were changed to the present limits, by the establishment of the town of Farmersville. This took off the two southern tiers of sections. At a subsequent meeting of the board, the action with regard to the formation of Farmersville, was reconsidered, and the boundary of Brooklyn was left as originally established until the organization of the town of Crystal Lake.

The surface is very level and consequently nearly destitute of lakes, to which the other towns of the county owe much of their beauty. The few that exist are shallow, with low, marshy shores. Palmer Lake, in section 26, through which Shingle Creek flows, is the largest. A variation from the uniform level occurs in the south-west, where a small corner reaches on the rolling clay beyond the sandy belt, in which the rest of the township lies. The extensive marshes yield abundance of good wild hay, most of which can be cut by machines. The prairie land is divided in four distinct praires, known as Bottineau, Long, Jenkins and Getchell prairies. The first, named from Pierre Bottineau, an early settler, is about a mile in width and three in length. Long, took its name from its shape and is four miles in length by one and a half in width. The two last, bear the names of early settlers. Jenkins is one and a half and Getchell, one mile in width. The timber is small, though a little of larger growth is found in the north-east near the river, and in the south-west on the clay. The bluffs along the river are low and sandy. The Mississippi is navigable here and small steamers ply up and down. Shingle Creek flows across the township from west to east.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the spring of 1852, Washington Getchell, his son Winslow, Amos Berry, and Jacob Longfellow, made claims at the same time on what is now called Getchell Prairie, in the southern part of the township. Winslow Getchell remained but a few months, and returned to St. Anthony. On the first day of July, Joseph Potvin, P. Bottineau, Peter Raiche, and Peter Garvais made claims on Bottineau Prairie, and camped on their claims the first night. Ezra Hanscom, who came to St. Anthony, from Maine, in 1850, took a claim near the Getchells, July 20, 1852; began his house in April, and completed it in July, 1853. With Ezra Hanscom came his two brothers-in-law, N. S. Grover and John W. Brown, who took claims, but abandoned them. These were, without doubt, the first actual settlers in the township. In the spring of 1853, no improvements had been made, and all was wild. Indian trails supplied the place of roads, and the red men were found in great numbers. The Chippewas were the more numerous, and the tribes were continually at war with each other. They were not, however, hostile to the whites, and only caused annoyance by pilfering, and frightening women and children.

In the fall of 1853, Allen B. Chaffee and a colony of fourteen families came from Adrian, Michigan, and that vicinity. In the spring following, some returned and brought out additional settlers to the colony.

The following were of the Adrian colony: H. H. Smith, Thomas Keeley, D. B. Thayer, Otis H. Brown, Seneca B. Jeremiah, John and Job Brown, Homer, Rowell and Stephen Roberts and another brother, Stephen Caner, and John Clark, who all settled within a radius of three or four miles of Osseo. At the time of settlement the land was not surveyed, and when afterward, in 1855, the survey was made, part found themselves in Brooklyn and part in Maple Grove. Most of the members of this colony are still living in town. John Fogerson, father of Allen Fogerson, Job Brown and others, drove a team and stock through for Chaffee and Smith. They were six or seven weeks on the road, while those who came without delay, consumed about two weeks in the journey. Their route was by railroad to Rock Island, and thence by boat to St. Paul. At Minneapolis they crossed the river by ferry, and found the first store on the west side just building, on the corner of First Street and Bridge Square, but could not buy a pound of nails or sugar on the west side of the river. On reaching their claims, Smith, Keeley and Thayer built, at first, a shanty in company, the roof of which was so poor that tin-pans were used to catch the water as it came through from the rain. Soon, however, each had his own house, more thoroughly built. Mr. Thayer died three years since. Mr. Smith now lives in Minneapolis, where he practices as a magnetic physician. Daniel Chase and Alonzo Bragdon reached Long Prairie about a week sooner than the Adrian settlers. A. H. Benson bought and improved a claim in 1854, and moved on it in 1855. Jonathan Estes, J. M. Durnam, N. Crooker, L. R. Palmer and J. P. Plummer, settled here in 1853-54. The first settlers on Long Prairie were Hiram Smith, Job Kenneston, Charles Miles, James H. W. Brown, Stephen Howe, William Cate and J. D. Hervey. Of the first settlers on Getchell Prairie, Washington Getchell and his son, Winslow, are now in California. Jacob Longfellow has always remained in the town, and Amos Berry lives in California. Ezra Hanscom still lives on his original claim.

Of the early settlers on Long Prairie, Mr. Miller is now in Anoka county, Job Kenneston, in Todd county, and Charles Miles in Minneapolis. Brown enlisted in the First Minnesota Infantry, and was several times wounded. He had both legs and one arm broken in different engagements. He was taken prisoner at the battle in front of Petersburg, and exchanged after three months. He then went to England to obtain property, to which he had become an heir, but found on arrival that it had reverted to the crown, in default of a claimant within the prescribed time. He returned to America, took a claim at Holmes City, and died there twelve years since. Stephen Howe lives in Anoka city. William Cate lives in Iowa, and Hervey went back to Massachusetts six years ago.

The grasshopper scourge, from which many of the towns suffered, was felt in a slight degree by this town. In 1857 a narrow strip of country from the Northwest part of the town, extending as far as Ezra Hanscom's, near the center, was devastated by grasshoppers. At this point their destruction ceased abruptly, and their sudden flight would be regarded remarkable, had similar caprices never been reported elsewhere.

POLITICAL RECORD.

The first town meeting was held at the house of Ezra Hanscom, May 11th, 1858. At this meeting, one hundred and twenty-eight votes were cast, resulting in the election of Supervisors, E. T. Alling, chairman, William Stinchfield and J. P. Plummer; Clerk, L. T. B. Andrews; Assessor, Ezra Hanscom; Collector, James McRay; Overseer of Poor, James Norris; Justices of the Peace, H. H. Smith, and A. H. Benson; Constables, J. M. Durnam and W. D. Getchell. The officers of the town for 1880, were, Supervisors, Levi L. Getchell, chairman, Ole Halverson and T. R. Doten; Clerk, E. R. Norris; Assessor, Ezra Hanscom; Treasurer, William Stinchfield; Justice of the Peace, E. R. Norris; Constables, William A. Howe and Warren Fletcher.

The settlement of this town went on rapidly from 1853. Within two years the town was well settled. In 1854, nearly all the land had been taken. "Claim jumping" was common, and led to stirring times and some excitement.

The following statistics will show the present status and growth of the town. The number of acres of land, according to the report of 1880, is 20,414. The assessed valuation of real estate, exclusive of town lots, for 1869, was $112,316; for 1875, $258,326; for 1880, $346,715; of personal property for 1869, $41,566; for 1875, $52,497; for 1880, $53,738. Total amount of taxes for 1869, $4,111; for 1875, $4,592; for 1880, $3,764. Horses over two years old, in 1869, 343; in 1875, 446; in 1880, 463. Cattle over two years old, in 1869, 559; in 1875, 703; in 1880, 459. Sheep, in 1869, 351; in 1875, 279; in 1880, 326. Hogs, in 1869, 127; in 1875, 160; in 1880, 198. Wheat, in 1869, 14,714 bushels; in 1875, 24,640 bushels; in 1880, 3,466 acres.

The population, from the census of 1880, is 1,060.

CHURCHES.

Two organizations, "The Methodist Episcopal" and "Baptist" are sustained. "The Methodist" church, began by the formation of a class, in the Spring of 1855. Rev. J. B. Mills was the first pastor. Rev. David Brown was the Presiding Elder. The class consisted of eight members, and the leader was Rev. J. W. Dow, who was soon followed by A. H. Benson. The first preaching in town was at the residences of members, sometimes at Mr. Dow's and sometimes at J. P. Plummer's. Mr. Dow lived in a log shanty and Mr. Plummer in a cabin, 12x16 feet. The class gradually increased, and from it three other classes were formed. The church at the corners was built, and dedicated September 26th, 1866, while Rev. J. D. Rich was pastor. The church is of wood, 23x40 feet. The dedicatory services were conducted by Presiding Elder J. F. Chaffee. A parsonage was built the following year. The present membership is fifty-four. The pastor for 1880-1, is Rev. J. G. Teter. He also has charge of the church at Shingle Creek, preaching Sunday morning at Brooklyn and in the evening at Shingle Creek. Sabbath school is held every Sunday, with an attendance of about sixty scholars.

The Brooklyn Centre Baptist church was built in 1868, and dedicated in September of that year. It cost $2,200 and the parsonage, since built, about $700. The size of the church is 25x38 feet, with a vestibule six feet square. Rev. L. C. Hall is now pastor and the church numbers twenty-five members.

Mound Cemetery was established, about 1860, by an association duly organized as the "Mound Cemetery Association." Lots are sold to all applicants, irrespective of denomination. It was named from an Indian mound in the vicinity.

An examination of the mound revealed bones, pottery, arrow-heads, tomahawks, etc. The mound is about two rods in diameter at the base, ten feet high, and is circular in form.

SOCIETIES.

I. O. of G. T. The first attempt to organize a Good Templars Lodge was sixteen or seventeen years ago, but it continued only three or four years. A new organization took place December 19th, 1874, with about thirty charter members, and officers as follow: H. G. Abbott, W. C. T.; Miss Lillie Williams, W. V. T.; Robert W. Norris, L. D. Meetings were first held in the Grange Hall, and continued to be held until about a year ago, since which time meetings have been held over the post-office. The lodge at present, numbers about ninety members, with officers: Fred A. Hanscom, W. C. T.; Miss Maggie Monser, W. V. T.; Fred Libby, L. D.

Patrons of Husbandry. Bohanon Grange No. 145. This society has a hall located at Brooklyn Centre. It has received some additions since it was first built, and is at present 22x42 feet, one story. The society was organized February 25, 1875, with about twenty charter members, which number increased to seventy-five in two or three weeks. The membership at present, is about twenty-five, with N. G. Abbott, W. M.

SCHOOLS.

The first school was held in 1854, and, therefore, before the town organization, which took place four years later. It was kept on Long prairie in a board shanty, with a board roof and two half-windows. Ten pupils attended. The teacher was Miss Augusta McLaughlin, who came from Portland, Maine, on account of consumptive tendencies, hoping here to recover her health. She died, however, in the spring following. The next teacher was Miss Amelia Griggs, in 1855. The settlement in the mean time grew, the shanty was discarded and a substantial school-house built. The shanty was built by contribution and the effort for the new house was begun in the same manner, but the organization of a school district, the bounds of which are uncertain, enabled the movers to complete it by direct tax.

During the fall of 1854, a school was held on Getchell Prairie, taught by Miss Mary Huff, afterward Mrs. Joel F. Howe, now residing in Minneapolis. This school was taught in a temporary building on section 28. In 1859 a school-house was built on the present site, section 27; sold in 1872 and a more commodious building erected.

The first school-house in the township was built on section 18, near Osseo, in what was known as the Smith district, in the summer of 1855. Miss Sylvia Rowe was teacher. She was succeeded by H. H. Smith, who taught several successive terms, of three months in winter and three in summer. This house was burned in 1864.

In the summer of 1855, a school was opened in the south-west part of the township, by the wife of Rev. Partridge. She was unable to finish it, on account of sickness, and the term was completed by Mary Smith. The building where the school was held, was a shed, covered with straw, with ground floor and stalls for horses. Mr. Partridge removed the stalls, and laid a rough board floor, but the straw roof remained. All the early schools were held in buildings of nearly as rude a character as that above described. The first school in the south-east part of the town, was held in the winter of 1855-6, at the house of Mr. J. Reidhead. This was also taught by Miss Mary Huff. Schools were held at various private houses in the district until 1859, when the first school house was built. The present building is a fine structure, and a model country school-house. It is situated on section 25, and belongs to district 29. Seven school houses are located in the township: No. 27, a joint district, located on section 32; No. 28, entire district, house built in 1872, on section 28; District No. 29, house built in 1872, on section 25; District No. 30, built in 1873, on section 11; No. 31, located on section 9, built in 1858, since remodeled. No. 32, located on section 17, built in 1878. No. 33, a joint district, house on section 6, built in 1880. There are, in addition to those named, three joint districts, with school-houses located in other towns.

MILLS, STORES, HOTELS, ETC.

In 1859 or '60, a saw mill was built at the Mississippi river, on section 36, by a company called "The Industrial Mill Company," of which J. C. Post was manager, and a town platted, called Industriana. The mill did not prove profitable, and the whole enterprise met a tragic end by the explosion of the mill, about two years after it was built, crippling the engineer for life and throwing the boiler about eighty rods. Thus ended the "Industrial Mill Company" and "Industriana." A similar experience was had on sections 11 and 12, where a mill was built in 1856-7, and one hundred and sixty acres platted in town lots and called "Harrisburg." A hotel, several dwellings and one or two stores were built. The whole was short lived. The mill was torn down, a few years after, one house burned, and the remainder removed, so that no trace of the village now remains. A portion, however, has not been vacated, and is still assessed in blocks and lots. The plow runs over a portion and the rest is grown up to brush.

At Brooklyn Centre, a small store and post-office is united, under C. R. Howe, who has been postmaster since the office was established, in 1873. It is on the Minneapolis and Monticello route and has a tri-weekly mail. The first post-office was on the river road, established about fifteen years ago, but was discontinued about the time of the establishment of the post-office at the centre. Cyrus Hillman was postmaster and the route was special, with a weekly mail. The town hall, completed, in 1871, is situated nearly in the center of the town; its size is 26x36 feet.

RAILROAD.

The Minneapolis & North-western branch of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railway, passes through a portion of the town. It enters on the south line of section 32, thence in a direct line to the village of Osseo, on section 18, where it leaves the township.

CHAPTER XLVI

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—EARLY SETTLEMENT—
CHURCHES—SOCIETIES—SCHOOLS—HOTELS—
BUSINESS ENTERPRISES—BIOGRAPHICAL.

Osseo is situated in the north-eastern part of the county, its territory being taken from the townships of Brooklyn and Maple Grove. It occupies a part of the level prairie known as "Bottineau Prairie," so called from Pierre Bottineau, who, in July, 1852, made his claim here. With him came Joseph Potvin, Peter Raiche and Peter Garvais, all making claims near Bottineau.

The village of Osseo was platted in 1856, by Warren Sampson and Isaac Labosiniere. Soon after, another village was laid out by A. B. Chaffee, adjoining Osseo on the south-east, called "City of Attraction." This is now included in the limits of Osseo.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Osseo was settled in 1851, by Warren Sampson, Isaac Labosiniere, Clark Ellsworth, Seneca Brown, James McRay and D. B. Thayer. Sampson built, and opened a store, and was post master of the office, then called Palestine. During 1855-6, the surrounding country was occupied by settlers, among whom were A. B. Chaffee, D. C. Smith and others. After the village was laid out, in 1856, the settlement was rapid. A wood market was established by Sampson in 1855, which has been kept up since. The merchants buy green wood, and sell to parties in the city of Minneapolis, after holding it one season. There are now a number engaged in the wood business, handling an aggregate of one hundred cords per day during the wood season. The first blacksmith shop was established in 1855, by Clark Ellsworth; Eli Haviland became his partner two years later. The latter still conducts the business. Rudolph Nigler kept the first hotel in the village. Previous to this, Chaffee and McRay "kept travelers." McRay established the second store in the place.

ST. LOUIS CATHOLIC CHURCH.

This society was organized in 1853, in charge of Father Hirth, who remained seven or eight years. He was succeeded by Father Genis, who officiated here and at Dayton for about five years. Father Nicholas next had charge, remaining three years. He was followed by Father Manner who had charge four years, then Father Lechner officiated one year. Father Maesfranx, one and one-half years. He was succeeded by Father Labriere, the present incumbent. In 1865, the society built a frame church, 35x54 feet, situated in the northern part of the village on the main street. The priest's residence, adjoining the church, was built in 1869. In 1880, additions were made to the church, giving a sanctuary 16x20 feet, and in the rear of that, a sacristy 16x28. The society now numbers one hundred families. They have a cemetery of one acre located in the township of Brooklyn and adjoining Osseo.

LUTHERAN CHURCH.

This society was organized in 1865, the first minister being the Rev. Mr. Jahn, who remained two years. He was followed by Rev. Mr. Rehkopf, who remained in charge until his death, which occurred in 1871. A young man from Germany next took the pastorate, but remained only one year. Since then the society has been without a regular pastor, but has preaching every third Sunday, the pulpit being supplied from Minneapolis. The society numbers about twelve families. They have a cemetery of one acre in the southern part of the village.

SOCIETIES.

In early days a small society of spiritualists existed. They built a hall, and for a time held regular meetings. They were superseded by the "Osseo Society of Liberalists," who now own the hall known as Liberty Hall.

Osseo Liederkranz, a musical and religious society, was organized in 1867, and continued until 1879, when they were succeeded by the Osseo Turnverein Society. The first society built a hall, which is now used by their successors. They number about twelve members, and meet one evening in each week; also keep up a Sunday-school for their children.

Osseo Dramatic Club. This society has been in existence about three years. They have a good library in connection, purchased with proceeds of dramatic entertainments. The Good Templars also contributed to the purchase of books. The officers of the club are: President, Eugene Smith; Treasurer, Miss Susie E. Curtis; Secretary, Della M. Johnson.

Good Templars. An organization was formed about 1867, under the title, Rose of Sharon Lodge, and at one time numbered 150 members. During the first winter the attendance averaged one hundred. This lodge continued four or five years, and was re-organized, after a lapse of eighteen months, as the Osseo Union Lodge. This society continued until 1880, when they disbanded.

Society of Free Thinkers was organized about 1866, and numbers about a dozen members. They meet four times a year.

Winslow Lodge No. 125, A. F. and A. M., was organized in 1875, with Stiles Gray, W. M.; G. W. Savage, S. W. and Clark Ellsworth, J. W. The lodge has a membership of forty-three, and holds meetings in Liberty Hall, over Eli Haviland's blacksmith shop. The charter was granted by the Grand Lodge of the state, January 10th, 1877. The present officers are: A. D. Fogerson, W. M.; John Williams and William Krueger, Wardens, and H. C. Black, Secretary. The society is in a sound financial condition, having a surplus of over $400 in the treasury.

SCHOOLS.

The first school was held in the summer of 1856, in the hall erected by the Society of Spiritualists, and taught by Miss Sylvia Rowe. About two years later, the Spiritualists disbanded, and sold the hall to the school district, which then embraced a large section each side of the village.

The hall was used for school purposes about six years, moved twice, then destroyed by fire. After this, another hall, Sampson's, was used for six years, and then the present building was erected. It is thirty feet square, with posts eighteen feet high. A graded school has been maintained for the past two years, though two teachers had been employed for twelve years previous. The school numbers about one hundred pupils.

HOTELS.

In 1867, Rudolph Niggler, who had previously kept a small house for boarders and transient guests, erected a hotel at a cost of nearly $4,000. It was not a good investment, as there was not business enough to sustain it. This house was burned in 1870.

The International Hotel was built by Fritz Schmidt in 1874. It is two-stories in height and has rooms for thirty guests. It has been conducted by Mr. Schmidt since its opening.

The Temperance House is kept by Z. Labrasch.

CHAMPLIN.

CHAPTER XLVII.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—SETTLEMENT—INDIAN
MOUNDS—EARLY INCIDENTS—ORGANIZATION —SCHOOLS—CHURCHES—SOCIETIES—MILL—
BIOGRAPHICAL.

This township is located in the north-eastern part of the county, on the Mississippi river, which forms its northern and eastern boundary. Its surface is varied. Along the river are heavily-timbered bottom-lands, back of which are high bluffs. The western portion of the town is covered with a growth of light timber. The central and southern portions are level prairies. The soil is in all parts good and productive. This township, unlike many others in the county, has no large lakes. There are two small bodies of water known as Leman's Lake and Bond Lake, the former on section 25 and the latter on section 36. Hayden's Lake, which is located mainly in the town of Dayton, projects a short distance into Champlin on the west. Elm Creek flows from Hayden's Lake across the northern part of the town, and empties into the Mississippi, just below the village. This creek furnishes an excellent water-power, which is utilized.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The history of Champlin dates from 1852, when Charles Miles located near the junction of Elm Creek and the river, and opened a trading post for Indians. He was the first white settler in the township. The following spring, Joseph and Augustus Holt arrived, and made claims where the village is now located. During the summer of 1853, Augustus Holt erected a frame house, the first in the village. In the summer of 1853, John Pike, Benjamin E. Messer, and a Mr. Stevens, built houses near the river above the village. In June of that year, Rev. Lewis Atkinson located on section 33. He came with teams from Illinois. The same year, R. H. Miller, F. Thorn-dyke and John Shumway, made claims west of the village: Colby Emery settled on section 30. William Milhollin made a claim on section 33, March 2d, 1854. He came with his family from Ohio to St. Anthony, in July, 1853, and after remaining in St. Anthony until the following March, located in Champlin. In 1854, quite a number settled in the town, among them Rev. W. Hayden and Samuel Colburn, both of whom still reside on their original claims. In 1855, Joseph McCann built just above Miles, and during the succeeding two years, several others located near. From this time the settlement went on rapidly. Prominent among the early settlers here, was John G. Howell, who came in 1854. His claim was in Brooklyn, but his home in Champlin. He was a young man, a general favorite, and a leader in social gatherings and church meetings. He left in 1856, and after considerable travel, located in California, where he has held several prominent positions.

The Winnebago Indians roamed over Champlin, at the time of its first settlement. Their village was located near Dayton. They were peaceable, and did not molest the settlers, except to beg. On one occasion, during a "big drunk," they stole a canoe from William Milhollin, but it was promptly returned by the women. The first settlers in Champlin had to buy their supplies in St. Anthony, and in order to reach that place, would often fasten two or three logs together, forming a raft, on which they would float down the river. This did very well, going down, but the return trip was more difficult, as it had to be made on foot, following Indian trails. This township was surveyed in 1855.

INDIAN MOUND AND GRAVE.

Near the mouth of Elm Creek was at one time a mound, called the "Indian Mound," on which was planted a red staff, from which floated a red flag of small size. The mound has nearly disappeared, owing to excavations made in search of relics. In the village near the hotel was a grave, surrounded by a rude fence of logs. This was supposed to be the grave of a chief, as it was ornamented by a red staff, on the top of which was a red flag, or rag.

EARLY INCIDENTS.

A ferry across the Mississippi, was put in operation by Joseph Holt, in 1855. McCann's locating near the mouth of Elm Creek, led to a dispute between him and Miles, in regard to the ownership of the water-power.

The contest was carried to the Land Office at Washington, for final decision, and resulted in Miles holding the claim. Both men were nearly ruined by the contest, and soon after, McCann moved to Anoka, where he still resides, and Miles to Minneapolis, where he died in 1878. The first birth in the township was in 1854, a child of Mr. and Mrs. Stevens; the second birth was a daughter to J. B. Holt and wife, November, 1854.

The first death was that of a young man—a new-comer named Charles Teag, in 1856. He was buried in a field on Mr. Miller's land. The first marriage was in 1857, the contracting parties being Cyrus Rollin and Miss Clark.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

In 1858, the County Commissioners set apart the territory embraced in township 120, range 22, and the fractional township 120, range 21, as Marshall. A meeting was held at Champlin village; May 11th, 1858, and officers chosen for the town. At this meeting the question of a division of Marshall, into Dayton and Champlin arose, and finally resulted in designating the following boundaries; Champlin, all of fractional township 120, range 21, and the eastern tier of sections of township 120, range 22. Dayton, all of township 120, range 22, excepting the eastern tier of sections. The first Town Meeting for Champlin was held April 5th, 1859. At this meeting, Wentworth Hayden presided as Moderator, and J. B. Hunt acted as Clerk, pro tem. The following officers were elected. Supervisors, Wentworth Hayden, Chairman, Samuel Briggs and S. D. Leman; Town Clerk, J. B. Holt; Assessor, J.

A. Linscott; Collector, Job Kenneston; Overseer of Poor, J. D. Hank; Justices, S. Colburn, Alvah Hills; Constables, Joseph Downs, George Hills. Officers in 1880; Supervisors, Harry Ghostly, Chairman, J. B. Hinkley and John Stewart; Town Clerk, S. Colburn; Assessor, J. B. Hinkley; Treasurer, O. S. Miller; Justices, Samuel Colburn and J. B. Hinkley; Constables, Geo. A. Hills and William Dowlin.

The Township contains 5,310 acres of land, the assessed valuation of which, was in 1880, $77,596. The valuation of personal property was $14,348. Total amount of taxes for 1880, $1,252. The population of the town is 456.

SCHOOLS.

The first school in the town of Champlin, was held in an old shanty above the village, in 1855. Miss Emily Thorndyke (now Mrs. Lum of Minneapolis) was teacher. A school house was built in 1860, the first teacher being Chandler B. Adams. There are now three schools sustained in the town. A graded school in the village, school district number 35, house located on section 30, and district number 99, joint district with Brooklyn, school house located on section 34, Champlin. All the school houses are good buildings.

CHURCHES.

The Free-Will Baptist church was organized in 1854, as a branch of the Minneapolis church, by Rev. C. G. Ames. It was supplied by Rev. W. Hayden and others, until the following year. The first members of the branch organization were, Betsy Shumway, W. W. Cate, Sarah C. Cate, W. W. Woodman and wife. The first meetings were held in a school-house, and on an unfinished steamboat, which lay on the river bank at this point. In 1855 the church was organized independently, and named Elm Creek church, under which name it continued until 1858, when it was changed to Anoka and Champlin church, its present name. They have a frame building, erected in 1871 at a cost of $1,650. It is located in the village of Champlin, on an eminence overlooking the river. The first regular pastor was W. Hayden, who officiated until 1863, when owing to ill-health he was compelled to resign, and the church was without a pastor for two years, though occasional services were held. In 1865 Rev. S. S. Paine took the charge, and remained until 1870, when he was succeeded by Rev. C. L. Russell, the present pastor. There has been a Sabbath-school in connection with the church since its organization, and it is now in a flourishing condition.

The Methodist Episcopal Church. A class was formed in 1872, by Rev. John Stafford. The year following they erected a church, about 30 x 50 feet in size. They have no resident minister, the church being included in the circuit with Anoka. A Sabbath-school is maintained in connection with the church.

SOCIETIES.

A Literary Society and Lyceum, organized in the fall of 1880, meets every Friday evening in the school-house of district No. 99. This society is well attended.

In 1879 a circulating library was established in the village, containing three hundred volumes. It is kept at the post-office, and is patronized by the citizens of the township generally.

CHAMPLIN MILL.

This mill is located on Elm Creek, near its junction with the river, below the village. The first mill at this point was built by A. P. Lane & Co., in 1867. The township records for that year show that two town bonds, of $250 each, were issued in favor of this firm, to assist in building a dam and bridge, in connection with the mill. All were built, but were swept away and destroyed by high water. The present mill was built in 1874, by Clark and Smith, and after several changes came into the possession of R. M. Pratt & Co., the present proprietors. It is in size, 30 x 40 feet, and two stories high above the basement, with an addition for offices and ware-rooms, 25 x 18 feet. Its machinery consists of five runs of stone, five middlings purifiers, besides the necessary minor machinery. It is driven by an American turbine wheel, forty-two inches in diameter, of seventy-five horse-power. Its capacity is forty barrels per day.

VILLAGE OF CHAMPLIN.

Joseph Holt laid out a village on the west bank of the river, and had it surveyed and platted by Hugh Spence. This was in 1853. A hotel was erected in 1855, by George Rollins, and opened by Hugh Spence. Several changes in ownership have since taken place. It is now conducted by F. Thorndyke. The first store was opened by J. B. Holt, in 1856. The post-office was established in 1858, with J. B. Holt as post-master. George Hills now occupies that office. There are three stores, with stocks of general merchandise, three blacksmith shops, two wagon shops, one goldsmith, one millinery, and one flouring mill. The assessed valuation in 1880, of town lots and structures thereon, was $7,302. The nearest railway point for citizens of Champlin township, is Anoka, directly opposite the village of Champlin, and connected with it by ferry across the Mississippi river. At one time, steamboats plied on the river, landing at Champlin; the river is not navigated regularly at the present time.

DAYTON.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—FIRST SETTLEMENT—
TOWN ORGANIZATION—VILLAGES—SCHOOLS—
MILLS—OFFICERS—BIOGRAPHICAL.

Dayton is situated in the extreme northern part of Hennepin county. It is bounded on the north by the Mississippi River, east by Champlin, south by Maple Grove, and west by Hassan and Wright county. Its surface is rolling; in some portions of the town there is a succession of rounded elevations, amounting to hills in some instances. It is well timbered, with a heavy growth of maple, oak, basswood, and elm, excepting in the northeast, where it includes a part of Long Prairie, extending west from Champlin. The soil is a deep, black loam, lying upon a magnesium limestone, which underlies the whole town excepting in the north-eastern part, where the St. Peter sandstone is found in a narrow belt along the river. The north-eastern boundary is formed by the Mississippi River, whose high bluffs tower a hundred feet above the majestic river that washes their base. The northern part of the western boundary is washed by the Crow River, which empties into the Mississippi at Dayton village.

Diamond Lake, on sections 17 and 18, is the largest body of water in the town. It was named Diamond on account of the purity of its water. French Lake, the next in size, located on sections 19 and 30, took its name from a French settlement near it, in an early day. The smaller lakes are Laura, on section 2, and Powers, on section 34. A small creek rises in Diamond Lake and flows easterly across the town, and empties into Hayden's Lake, which is located on section 26.

Paul Godine is supposed to be the oldest living settler in the town. He is a Frenchman by birth, and settled here in 1851. He was a man of some notoriety among the Indians in those early days, wielding a magical kind of influence over them, which at times was so potent that he could chastise them with his fist or club or any other article which came first to hand, as occasion required, and they would quietly submit to it, and continue to trade with him. They looked upon him through the dim light of their untutored minds, as an avenging spirit, sent upon them by the "Great Spirit," hence their submission.

John Veine made a claim where the village of Dayton now stands, and built a small cabin on it in 1853, which he sold to E. H. Robinson in 1854, who used it for a trading post, trading almost entirely with the Indians who were principally Chippewas.

Marcelles Boulee, Benj. Leveillier, and others, settled along the river in 1853. Soon after, a few French families settled on or near the Lake named French Lake, whose names were Daniel Lavallee, Anthony Gelinis, Louis Bibeault, Moses Desjarlais, Joel Desjarlais, Fabien Desjarlais and Edward Greenwood. Other portions of the town were settled soon after, by the French.

A hotel was built at Dayton in 1854, by James Haselton and George Mosier, situated on the bank of the main river. It was moved at a later period, to its present site on higher ground, and is now owned and occupied as a hotel by George Slater, who settled here in 1856.

Neil McNeil was one of the early settlers, who came to Dayton and took at once, a front rank in shaping the business of the infant settlement. For three years, he had the entire control of Lyman Dayton's business, his intelligent brain, directed by a master hand, was felt in every thing he touched. Not only was his genius felt in civil life, but he made it felt in military tactics also; showing himself not an unworthy descendant ent of that race whose prowess, like Bruce's, has adorned and embellished the pages of Scottish history. When the Indian outbreak, in 1862, burst upon the frightened settlers, carrying rapine and butchery in its gory track, he left the peaceful pursuits of life, and aided by that determined look which the earnest man carries, raised a squad of men and hastened to join Captain Strout's command. They marched to the seat of war through Forest City to Acton, where they met the "Bloody Devils," and gave them fight. He there received a wound through his right arm, but with his spartan band of sixty-four, fighting for their firesides, and the little prattlers around them, thought not of the eight hundred fiends they were fighting, all the way from Acton to Hutchinson. Before reaching Hutchinson, they were reinforced, adding more strength, but no more courage; when they made a Waterloo, scattering the Indians in every direction. Returning from the Indian war, and with a country still imperiled, he joined Gen. Thomas' command in 1863, and remained until honorably discharged, when he returned again to Dayton and engaged in the more congenial and peaceful pursuits of life, enjoying the confidence of his fellow-citizens, filling the office of supervisor for ten years, and constable seven years. He was the first constable elected in the town.

In 1855, A. C. Kimball settled near French Lake, on the north shore, and was the first American settler back from the river. He relates the fact, that the Chippewa Indians passed near his home on their way to the fight near Shakopee, in May, 1858, with their old enemies the Sioux. They came down the Mississippi River and went about a mile up the Crow River, took their canoes ashore, sold two or three to the settlers, and destroyed the rest.

EARLY EVENTS.

In 1856, E. H. Robinson built a blacksmith shop for his own business, doing some custom work for his few neighbors. The same year, he and his partner, John Baxter, built a steam saw-mill on the banks of the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Crow River, which was the first saw-mill built in the town.

The first religious services in town, were held at the house of J. B. Hinkley, in the summer of 1855, by the Rev. Winthrop Hayden. The next services were held at the house of J. B. Hinkley in 1855; sermon by David Brooks.

The first white child born, was George Dayton Slater, September, 1856, who died at the age of four years.

The first death was a Mr. Twombly, who was killed by the falling limb of a tree. The second death was Job Green, an old man, who died in 1857, and was buried by the roadside, and subsequently removed to the cemetery, in the east part of the village plat, upon its establishment in 1858.

The first marriage was that of E. H. Robinson to Mrs. Sarah L. Gardner, June 29th, 1856.

J. B. Hinkley was the first justice of the peace. He was appointed by the territorial government. He was also the first representative from his district to the legislature elected in 1857, and took an active part in forming the state government.

The "Five Million Loan Bill" was voted on by the town, in the spring of 1858, and carried by a decided majority.

The first post office was established in 1855, and J. Baxter appointed post master. He was succeeded by Mr. Hinkley, in 1856, who made R. R. Hurlbut deputy for two years. Hurlbut was then appointed post master, and remained in office several years.

The first school was taught in the summer of 1857, by Miss Cynthia Slater, on the west side of Crow River. The water, washing the bridge away, the scholars could not cross, and she moved to Mr. Hinkley's, and later, to Mr. Baxter's house, where the term was finished.

CHURCHES.

The French Catholic Church was organized in 1857, and a church built the same year, on the farm of Paul Godine, section 5. Father Jennis officiated at the organization. In 1862, Father Nicholas supplied the church for a time. In 1865, the society commenced the erection of a larger church, in the village of Dayton, and completed it in 1866. It is 50x75 feet. The society contains one hundred and twenty families. Father Morrell has officiated since 1866, and closed his labors in the fall of 1880. The society has a cemetery of about two acres, located on the north-west corner of section 8.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

Dayton and Champlin, were formerly organized as a voting precinct, and called Marshall. It was divided in 1858, and the name of Dayton adopted, in honor of Mr. Lyman Dayton. The meeting for the organization of the town, was held at Champlin, May 11th, 1858. Elected for Supervisors, A. C. Kimball, chairman, W. H. Edwards, J. D. H. Hervey; Town Clerk, John Baxter; Assessor, J. M. Thompson; Collector, W. P. Ives; Overseer of Poor, Daniel Fife; Justices of the Peace, D. L. Herrick and Alvah Hills; Constables, J. Downs and A. M. Kimball. After the election of officers and other business incident to the new organization, and the change of the name of the town, the amicable settlement of the question at one time appeared very formidable, adjourned to exchange mutual congratulations over the successful issue.

VILLAGES.

There were three town sites selected, but not laid out, but claimed, and held with the intention of making plats. Waterville, held by Charles Aydt, was located mostly on the west side, and included the site where the present saw mill is located. Portland was claimed by Robinson and Baxter, and included the site on which the present village is located. Lyman Dayton had eighty acres south of the present village, and had it platted and surveyed, but afterwards vacated. The present village was first platted in 1855, and again in 1856, reducing lots from one-quarter to one-eighth of an acre in a lot, owing to the advance in the price of land. The platting was done by Lyman Dayton who had bought of Robinson and Baxter an undivided half of the town site. This settled the location of the village, but the more difficult question was yet to come, that of naming it. Mr. Dayton and his friends desired to call it Dayton, while that part of the settlers who came from Maine, were as anxious to call it Portland. Both parties felt their ability and strength to call it by their chosen name, whilst each doubted the others' strength, and a meeting was called to settle the vexed question by vote. On the day appointed, the "hosts" were marshalled, but justice always recedes before advancing force, and the "Dayton" party proved too strong for the "Mainites," and named it Dayton, in 1868. This is the only village in the town, and includes a small plat of ground on the opposite bank of Crow river, in Wright county, and is situated at the junction of the Mississippi and Crow rivers. It is a flourishing village, containing three stores, carrying a general stock of goods, E. O. Perkins's being the largest; three blacksmith shops, one furniture and carriage shop, one millinery establishment, where the latest fashions are tastefully displayed, two boot and shoe establishments, two carpenters, who "know how to make a house," two meat markets, one lumber mill, one tannery, a brickyard and a post-office, with W. D. Brimmer for postmaster.

The second post-office was established in the South-west part of the town about 1866, and called "Maple Grove," a Mr. Permit being appointed post-master.

SCHOOLS.

The first male teacher was Thomas McLeod, who taught after the organization of the town, in the winter of 1859-60. The first school was taught in a vacant store-room built by E. B. Ames, of Minneapolis, who failed in trade, and the room was used till 1868, when the present village school building was erected, in the village of Dayton. Besides this, there are four school buildings, all in good condition, located as follows: School No. 37, on section 14; No. 41, on section 29; No. 40, on section 7; and No. 36, on section 28. Two joint districts are included in the above.

MILLS.

The Dayton flour-mill was first built by Frank Weitzel in 1860, for a three run custom mill. In 1874 he built a new merchant mill with five runs, 35x65 feet, three-stories and basement. He sold a half interest to W. F. Hurlbut, and in 1878 sold his remaining interest to R. R. Hurlbut. In 1879 the firm of Hurlbut and son built an addition 20x50 feet, with two runs of stone for a custom mill. They have added all the late improvements, making it a first-class Merchant and Custom mill, with a reputation second to none. The mill gives employment to twenty-six men.

W. D. Brimmer, has a Saw-mill and Stave Factory, located on the Crow river, and is now using the steam machinery, put in by Robinson in 1860; supposed to be the first in the north-west.

OFFICIAL ROSTER.

The present town officers are, Supervisors, A. C. Kimball, chairman, C. E. Evans, and M. F. Taylor; Town Clerk, C. F. Dugas; Assessor, M. F. Taylor; Treasurer, Henry Duhlheimer; Justices of the Peace, C. E. Evans and Nicholas Engel; Constables, Albert Lewis and A. A. Laflin.

A Town House was built in 1873 at the cross-roads in south part of section 17, size 20x30 feet. The Cemetery is located in the south-west corner of section 8.

The town has 14,811 acres with a land valuation of $170,220. Valuation of personal property, $42,096. Town lots, $7,384. Taxes for 1880, from the above valuations, $2,585.

The population of the township, including the village is 698.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

William Dugas, one of the pioneers of Hennepin county, was born at Three Rivers, Canada, May 17th, 1809. He learned the trade of millwright, and at the age of twenty-two went to New York city, then started for Africa, engaging as ship-carpenter. At New Orleans he abandoned the trip, as his ship did not sail. He then came up the Mississippi river to Saint Louis, thence to Chicago, and after a stay there of four years, went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, via the Missouri river, with Bourbonais, who had charge of the Pottawattamie Indians. Then returned to Chicago, and had charge of a crew of men on the canal then being opened there. Three years later, he removed to Galena, Illinois, and then went to Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, where he married Sophia Stromm, who died twenty-one months later, leaving one child, Charles, who is now town clerk of Dayton. In the spring of 1844 he removed to Saint Paul, where he remained over two years, and married, in January, 1846, Miss Susanna Raiche. The same year he made a claim at Saint Anthony, near Cheever's claim, which he afterwards sold to Franklin Steele. He returned to Saint Paul in May, 1849, and was elected to the Territorial Legislature the following fall. After remaining in Saint Paul two years, engaged in the hotel business, he sold out, returned to Saint Anthony, and established a ferry about half a mile above the present upper bridge. He, and others, procured a charter for a bridge, but it was not built. In 1857 he sold the ferry and moved to Bottineau Prairie, and engaged in farming until 1866, when he removed to Dayton, where he has since resided. His second wife bore him three children, two of whom are living; John, aged twenty-three and Louis, aged twenty-one.

Nicholas Engel was born in Prussia, in 1820. Learned the trade of shoemaking. He was drafted into the army at twenty, and served two years. He emigrated to America in 1852, and settled at Port Washington, Wisconsin, working at his trade. Moved to Plattsmouth, Nebraska, in 1858, and followed his trade. In 1875, went to Frankfort, Wright county, and in 1876 came to Dayton. Has held the office of Justice of the Peace for two years. Married, in 1863, to Catharine Schluentz. They have had five children, four are now living.

F. Gamache, born in Canada, in 1830. Moved to Michigan in 1850, and engaged in mining, three years. He located on his present farm in 1854. Married, in 1852, Margaret Gandrow, who died in 1864. He was married again, in 1867, to Julia Lambert. They have had eight children. He has been Town Supervisor and School Director. He is one of the pioneers of this town. His, was the first team brought to Dayton.

R. R. Hurlbut, born in Vermont, in 1830. Followed railroading when young. He was married in 1852, to Mary Stebbins, and moved to Minnesota in 1855. Located in Hassan for one year; thence to Dayton, where he engaged in mercantile business for two years. Located where he now lives in 1870—a fine location in Wright county, opposite Dayton. Purchased, in 1878, one-half interest in the Dayton Flour Mills, which, with his farm, occupies his entire attention. He has two children: William F. and Rodman R.

William F. Hurlbut, son of R. R. Hurlbut, was born in Vermont, in 1853. He remained with his parents until 1870, when he entered the State University at Minneapolis, at the same time taking a commercial course. Returned to Dayton in 1874 and purchased a half interest in the Dayton Flour Mills, and also carried on a general merchandizing business in connection with his milling. In 1880 he married Jennie E. Nixon, of Pennsylvania.

N. McNeil was born in Scotland, in 1830. In 1831 he emigrated with his parents to America. He moved to Boston, Massachusetts, in 1852, and worked three years in the Navy Yard. Moved to Minnesota in 1856, and lived in St. Paul one year, when he moved to Dayton and worked seven years for Lyman Dayton. In 1863, joined Gen. Thomas' command, was mustered out in 1865, and returned to Dayton and engaged in the stock business. He married, in 1857, Sarah Sweeney. They have had nine children. Mr. McNeil held the office of Supervisor ten years, and was Constable for seven years.

Charles Mayer was born in Germany, in 1818, where he taught school for twenty years. He emigrated to America in 1856, and settled in St. Bernard, Ohio, and taught school two years; then taught eight years in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, four years at Utica, and three years in Jefferson City, Missouri. He is the organist at the Catholic church in Dayton, and also teaches music. Married the first time, in 1842, to Veronica Seiberlich, who died in 1856. Married again to, Kate Oberle. He has six children living.

George Slater, born in England, in 1821. Emigrated to America, and settled in Gloversville, Fulton county, New York, in 1824. Worked at glove-making for twenty years. Moved to Minnesota, and settled in Dayton, in 1856, and commenced the manufacture of gloves and mittens. Enlisted in Company C, Independent Battalion, under General Hatch, in 1864, and was ordered to the frontier. Was mustered out in 1865. Returned to Dayton, and opened his farm. His health failing, he purchased the hotel which he now keeps. Married, in 1845, to Catharine Kelly. They have four children now living. Mr. Slater found many relics near the junction of the Crow and Mississippi rivers, which indicated that there had been, at some time, a French or Spanish settlement at that point.

Abraham Twombly was born in Canada, in 1808. Moved to Champlain, New York. Lived there several years. Married, at twenty-two, to Rosabel Rose. He moved to Bottineau Prairie in 1857, and lived with his wife in a tent three months. Sold his first claim on the Prairie, and bought one in the woods, where he has since lived. Mr. and Mrs. T. Celebrated their golden wedding, November 8th, 1880. They have 108 children and grandchildren.

E. H. Robinson, a native of Gardiner, Maine, was born in 1829. He remained with his parents on the farm, until seventeen years of age; then learned the mason's trade. In 1849, he, with his brother, moved to Wisconsin, and worked at his trade during the summer, and in the pine-ries through the winter. In the fall of 1850, he returned to Maine, and the following year, his father and family moved to Wisconsin, locating in Portage county. In the spring of 1853, E. H. came to Minneapolis, and purchased twenty-five dollars' worth of goods, which he hired a Frenchman to take up to the mouth of Crow River, in a canoe. They reached their destination in two days, and found but one white man, John Veine, of whom he secured the use of a log cabin for his store. He opened a trade with the Indians, whose reservation was on the west side of Crow River. In the spring of 1854, he succeeded in purchasing Veine's claim, which included the site of the present village of Dayton. Mr. Veine left, and Mr. Robinson was for ten months alone with the Indians, at whose hands he came near losing his life, on several occasions. He sold John Baxter one-half interest in his store, and in 1855, they sold Lyman Dayton, of St. Paul, an undivided interest in a portion of their land. In 1856, they sold Mr. Dayton an interest in the water-power and land adjoining. In the fall of 1856, they erected a steam saw-mill near the mouth of Crow River. Soon after, Mr. Robinson bought his partner's interest in the store, and in 1857, bought his interest in the mill. He then sold to Mr. Dayton his entire interest in the water-power, and the following spring, sold his stock of goods. In the fall of 1858, he purchased another stock of goods, and in 1861, took as partner in the milling business, Frank Crocker, and continued thus two years, when he bought Crocker's interest, and in 1866, sold the entire establishment to a firm who failed, and the mill was taken away. In 1870, he built a new steam saw-mill near the site of the old one. In 1877, he sold the mill to H. A. Bennett, and it was burned the following year. Mr. Robinson's wife was Mrs. Sarah Gilson of New York, whom he married in 1856. They have had three children: George H., Horace R. and Frank L.

HASSAN.

CHAPTER XLIX.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—SETTLEMENT—FIRST BIRTH AND DEATH—A PAPER TOWN—EVENTS OF 1856-7-8—CHURCHES—ORGANIZATION—INDIAN SCARE—OUTLOOK—SAW-MILL—BIOGRAPHICAL.

This is one of the extreme northern towns of Hennepin county, and embraces all of township 120 north, ranges 23 and 24 west, lying east of Crow River, covering an area of 17,184 acres. It is washed by the Crow River on the west and north, the stream making the boundary between it and Wright county. It was surveyed in 1855, the first year of its settlement. Its surface is rolling and heavily timbered, except Bigelow's Prairie, a small tract of about fifty acres, in section 16, on Crow river. Several tracts of marsh, or wild meadow, occur at intervals throughout the town, but are little used, being too soft for pasturage, and affording but an indifferent quality of hay. Peat bog is found in most of the marshy ground, which may yet give it value. In the uplands, the soil is a dark loam, with clay subsoil and well adapted to general agricultural purposes.

The only streams in the interior are Rush Creek, which flows through the south-east corner, and a small, unnamed rivulet which rises in section 22, flows north-west, and empties into Crow River in section 16. A stream shown upon the early maps, in the south-west part of the town, is only a ravine through which surface water finds its way to the Crow River in times of freshet.

Several small lakes dot the surface of the town, mainly in the western half, the most noticeable of which are here described. Sylvan Lake lies in section 20, and is the largest body of water in the town. It covers an area of about two hundred acres, is of more than ordinary depth, with sandy or gravelly margin on the north, but soft along the southern half. It is well stocked with fish, principally pickerel and bass. North-east of this is Cowley, better known as Parslow's Lake, in sections 16 and 21. It has sandy margins and hard bottom, but is quite shallow, and contains a rank growth of water plants, which, though not reaching the surface, are too near to admit of trolling for fish, with which its waters abound.

Lake Harry lies mainly in the south-east corner of section 29, but extends its waters to the three sections joining at this corner. It is of irregular shape, shallow, with low, marshy shores on the north, but hard on the south. It is destitute of fish, and is gradually drying up. In 1855, Jasper Hawkins, one of the early settlers here, found a fine, large canoe floating upon the waters of this lake, which incident has occasioned no little speculation regarding its early ownership. It was of pine, nearly new, and neatly hewn from a sound log or tree, and not over an inch thick except at the points. No owner ever appeared to claim this mysterious craft, and pioneer settlers disagree as to its origin; whether it was of Indian manufacture, or the handiwork of white men. In any event, it must have been prepared in the forests of the upper Mississippi, brought down that stream and up the Crow river several miles, and dragged across the country for not less than one and one-half miles, before launching upon the shallow waters of this lake, which, as it afforded no fishing, leaves the subject as much in the dark as ever. The old canoe is now in a useless, half-decayed condition, and partly buried in the mud and water of a smaller lake, appropriately named Mud Lake, near the residence of Mr. Hawkins in section 21.

SETTLEMENT.

The first settler in the northern part of the town was Alexander Borthwick, who came in 1854, and made his claim on section 12, and later, another on section 1, the farm now owned by Frank Weitzel. He remained until 1867, when he removed to Otsego, Wright county, and has since resided there. He came from St. Paul to Dayton, crossed the river there, made his claim, and boarded with Robinson and Baxter, through the winter. Harvey Hicks came about one month later than Borthwick, and bought the latter's claim on section 12. He brought the first team and wagon into this town, coming up on the west side of the river and cutting his road through the timber. Dennis Ford, Alpheus Maservy, and Joseph Green came the same fall. Maservy is now in Maine Prairie, Stearns county. In 1855, Mortimer and Patrick Hynes, Thomas Rogers and William Demery, located claims in the northern part of the town. John Mitchell and Samuel Gowell settled north of the centre. John Keegan, who came the same year, still resides in the town. Others who came about this time were, Patrick Burke and Owen McCabe. Among those who located in the central and southern portion of the town in 1855 were, George and Ariel Bigelow, A. Woodman and Harvey S. Norton, who came from Ohio, and settled on or near section 16, on the Crow river. Their claims embraced the small prairie tract previously referred to, which gave it the name it has since borne. There were no roads leading into this wood-land region then, and they were forced to cut their way as they advanced, making but slow progress, though only stopping to remove such obstructions as could neither be overcome or avoided. They remained here but a few years, then removed to other parts. Ariel Bigelow, after about six years residence here, removed to Maple Grove, thence to Minneapolis, and later, to his former place in Ohio. He subsequently returned to this State, and is now at Princeton, Mille Laes county. Geo. Bigelow left his claim here about the same time, but afterwards returned and located a little east of the old location, from which he soon after removed to Santiago, Sherburne county, where he was drowned several years since.

Early in the year, Jasper and Horatio Hawkins settled near the central part of the town, having first engaged in farming in what is now Crystal Lake. They were from England, and through their influence others were led to seek homes in this locality. Among them were Septimus, Charles and John Parslow, the first two, brothers, the latter their nephew. Henry Ghostly also arrived about this time, and all took claims in one neighborhood, where most of them still reside. About this time the names of Charles Tucker and James and John Noon were added to the brief roll of pioneers; they came from Ohio, the former from Cincinnati. Late in the fall, Freeman D. James arrived from New York and located on section fifteen, where he now resides. When he reached Winona, navigation suddenly closed, and he was forced to pursue his journey on foot, which he did, coming by way of St. Paul and Dayton.

EARLY EVENTS.

First Birth and Death. The first white child born within the limits of the town was a daughter, Mary, born to Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bigelow soon after their arrival here. Her brief life terminated near Christmas of that year; the first grave succeeding the first cradle.

A Paper Town. Early in the summer of 1855, the excellent water-power upon the Crow River, on section thirteen, attracted the notice of Harvey S. Norton, and suggested the founding of a village there. He accordingly employed a surveyor, and laid out a town plat of fair proportions, and decided to name it Hassan, if it was ever born. But it never was; and the name remained unused until the following year, when the establishment of a post-office, furnished an object to which it has since attached. In the fall of this year occurred the first religious services, by Rev. J. S. Chamberlain, rector of the Episcopal church in Minneapolis.

EVENTS OF 1856-8.

The first year of pioneer work wrought noticeable changes in this forest region. Cabins sprang up as if by magic, and happy homes and firesides were seen on every hand, where before was observed naught save the campfire of the red man, or the ever-shifting wigwam, which marked his temporary home.

With an energy characteristic of the sturdy pioneer element of which this community was composed, a post-office was secured in the summer of 1856, and Septimus Parslow received the appointment of Postmaster, the office being at his residence on section twenty-one.

The name designed for Norton's proposed city was here called into requisition, and Hassan was recorded in the list of frontier post-offices. The first mail was received July 4th, 1856, and came in good old primitive style—the carrier making the trip on horseback.

About this time the Territorial road from Minneapolis to Monticello was opened, and the saddle soon gave place to a wheeled vehicle, for the accommodation of passengers. Not long after, tri-weekly mail service was secured, which has since been maintained. The post office is still retained by Mr. Parslow.

The territorial road referred to was the first legitimate outlet for this section, only "trespass roads" existing before, and they, neither numerous or in good condition.

In the year 1856, occurred the first marriage in the town—that of Charles Tucker and Miss Elizabeth Hawkins. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. S. Chamberlain. They are yet living on their original claim, in section 22.

The first school was taught by Miss Sarah Ward, in a small log building, in the west part of town, not far from the present school-house in district No. 72, in the year 1857. She was followed by Miss Helen Tilton, the next season.

In 1857-'8, this young community, in common with others, suffered severely from the ravages of grasshoppers, but have since been spared from such annoyance. In 1858, with the admission of the state, the territory now embraced in this town was designated by the County Commissioners, and given its present name—Hassan. The town organization occurred two years later.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH—EPISCOPAL.

This neat little edifice was begun in 1858, but not completed until a later period. It is located in section 21, near Septimus Parslow's residence, and upon ground donated by him for that purpose. The tract included five acres, a portion of which was set apart for a cemetery, in which have been twenty-one interments.

The history of the society dates back to the fall of 1855, when monthly services were begun at the residence of Septimus Parslow, by Rev. J. S. Chamberlain, and continued in this place until the building of the church, in 1858. The real organization of the society occurred on Easter Monday, in the spring of 1857, under the rectorship of Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, who faithfully administered to the church during the first five years of its organization. His successors were Revs. D. B. Knickerbacker, William Polk, George Case, John Scott, S. T. G. Crump; and since June, 1878, Rev. Dr. Knickerbacker has had charge; assisted by Curate W. T. Pise to date of June, 1880, since then by Curate J. Q. Bevington. Bishop Whipple has held service at irregular intervals since 1860. In May, 1858, Bishop Kemper, of Wisconsin, visited the society, and laid the corner-stone of the church edifice. Seven members were added to the church by confirmation during his visit here. There was then no Bishop in Minnesota. The original membership was only four, which has since increased to fifty. Monthly services are maintained, and a flourishing Sabbath-school is connected with the church.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

The meeting at which the township organization was effected, was held April 3, 1860. No special measures were adopted at this meeting, beyond the usual transactions incident to a new organization, and the election of the following officers: Supervisors, Gideon Reeves, chairman, Hawley Hicks, Richard Quinn; Town Clerk, C. J. Parslow; Treasurer, Septimus Parslow; Assessor, A. Borthwick; Justice of the Peace, Henry Ghostly; Constables, Patrick Hynes, John Parslow; Superintendent of Schools, B. Wright. The latter resigned in July, and was succeeded by H. C. Parslow.

INDIAN SCARE.

In August, 1862, the panic which spread over this entire region, at news of the recent massacre, so terrified the settlers of Hassan that numbers of them fled to Minneapolis, others to Fort Snelling, and some even left the state. About three weeks after the first scare, another rumor of butchery and bloodshed was wafted to the ears of the partially quieted citizens, and another panic ensued. It was of short duration, however, and the "troubled waters" soon resumed their wonted tranquility.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

In the winter of 1873-4, a Grange was organized, whose membership soon reached forty, but though well attended for a time, soon lost its original interest, and in 1878 was wholly abandoned.

PRESENT OUTLOOK.

By slow but steady progress, Hassan has reached a degree of development in striking contrast with earlier conditions noted in this chapter, as the following statistics, gleaned from the official reports of 1880 will show. The assessed value of lands is given at $191,610; of personal property, $22,333, on which taxes were levied to the amount of $1,918. The population of the township is 735.

Five school houses are located at convenient distances, affording the ordinary facilities for a common school education. District No. 72, has a frame building on section 19, near the site of the first school in the town. The building is of moderate dimensions, and in good condition. The other school buildings are: District No. 73, house in section 21, log building; No. 69, on section 21, frame house in good condition; No. 70, frame house on section 11, above the average size of country school houses, and in fine condition; and No. 68, on section 35—joint district with Corcoran—frame house, small, but in fair condition.

A Town Hall is conveniently situated in section 21, opposite the residence of Charles Parslow.

A saw-mill is about being put in operation in section eighteen, on Crow River, by A. Berning, whose residence is on the opposite shore, in Wright county, an enterprise that can not fail to greatly benefit the farmers of the adjacent territory, upon whose farms may be found an excellent quality of hard wood for lumber, square timber, etc.

Thus is briefly given a sketch of the settlement and rapid growth of the town, which closes with the following list of town officers for 1880: Supervisors, John Russell, chairman, Charles J. Ghostly, Thomas Flynn; Clerk, C. J. Parslow; Treasurer, Charles Tucker; Assessor, G. Jackins; Justice of the Peace, Jasper S. Hawkins; Constable, Edward Tucker.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Aaron Hoag, a native of New Hampshire, was born in 1806. In 1835 he moved to Bangor, Maine, and followed teaming for twelve years; then he bought a farm at South Gardner, which he occupied for six years. In 1858 he came with his youngest daughter to Minnesota, prospecting—and in 1859 bought part of the land he now lives on. The same year his family sold out and joined him. He married in 1830, Annie Wiggins. They have four children. His son Charles lives with him and was married December 1877, to Mary A. Inveen. Their children are George and Ida.

Horatio Hawkins, a native of England, was born in 1827. He learned the trade of shoemaking. In 1853 he emigrated to America, moved to Minnesota and settled in Crystal Lake. In 1856 he came to Hassan, and in 1858 made a claim, where he has since lived. In 1864 he enlisted in Eleventh Minnesota, Company G, went south and was discharged in June, 1865. He was married in England to Martha Powell, in the year 1850. They have five children living.

Jasper Hawkins was born in England, in 1829. He emigrated to America in 1853, and moved directly to St. Anthony, where he worked as clerk eighteen months, for John G. Lennon. In 1854 he bought a claim in Crystal Lake, and held it fifteen months. Made a claim in Hassan in 1855, and has since lived here. In 1862 he enlisted in Ninth Minnesota, Company B, was clerk in Quartermasters department a few months, and was then ordered to General Commandery Central District of Missouri; joined his regiment as clerk for Col. Marsh, until discharged at Davenport, Iowa, in 1865. He was married in 1869, to Alice M. Matthey. Four children have been born to them.

Freeman D. James was born in Chautauqua county, New York, in 1822, where he lived twenty-seven years, much of the time engaged in lumbering. He went to California in 1853, met with considerable success, and returned to New York. In 1855 he came to Minnesota and settled in the town of Hassan, where he now lives. He has served the town as supervisor and constable. In September, 1864, he enlisted in Second Battery, Minnesota volunteers, was mustered out in July, 1865, at St. Paul, and returned to his farm. He married, in 1843, Mary B. Strong, who died February, 1876, leaving three children. Mr. James has done much for the cause of education.

CHAPTER I.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—EARLY HISTORY—OLD

—BIOGRAPHICAL.

This town embraces that portion of township 119 north, range 24 west, lying east of Crow river. It was set apart by the county commissioners April 10th, 1858, and named from the village then located in the south-western part. The origin of the name was the charming appearance of the wood-lands, as seen by the first settlers, in the early days of summer.

The surface is broken and hilly, and covered with a heavy growth of hard wood timber, interspersed by a few small tracts of marsh-land. The soil, as in other timbered portions, is a dark loam with clay subsoil, the lightest portion being found near the old site of the village. A few small lakes are found in the central portion of the town, and in the southern part, and lying partly in Independence, are lakes Sarah and Rebecca, of larger proportions. The former is about three miles long, and finds an outlet to the Crow river through Edgar creek. The latter is about one mile in length, and connected with the Crow river by a small stream running through the north-western part of Independence, and the extreme south-western part of Greenwood, where it unites with the main stream.

EARLY HISTORY.

Although separated from the Mississippi, the only course of travel at that date, by miles of dense woodland and morass, this town was among the first in the county to attract the attention of pioneer settlers. The first claims were made in the northern part of the town in 1854. Among these early claimants was Mathias Harff, who located on section 1, and opened a farm upon which he lived till 1866, then sold, and purchased a farm on section 10, where he still resides. Mr. Harff is without doubt the oldest living settler in Greenwood. His coming was illustrative of the rugged pathway, by which so many have reached their present easy, though perhaps not happier, condition, and of that determined energy and courage, to which the county owes its present growth and prosperity. He gave one of the two sacks of flour which constituted his principal commissary stock, to a teamster in exchange for transportation from St. Paul to Dayton, then took his wife and aged mother in a "dug out," and "paddled his own canoe" up the Crow river to the nearest accessible point to his claim, from where the remainder of the journey was performed on foot. Here, in a small, rude cabin, subsisting chiefly upon wild game, and with no implements but an ax and common grub hoe, he began the difficult task of opening a farm in this almost unknown forest. His success in overcoming the manifold difficulties which beset his pathway, and the degree of prosperity to which he has attained, furnish a noteworthy example of the unfailing reward of persistent energy and perseverance. Mr. Harff has been identified with the growth and development of the town, and was one of its supervisors for several years.

The first settlers in the south part of the town were E. O. Newton, Thomas Holmes, J. M. Burt, Robert Kennedy, Samuel Allen, Matthew and Albert Taisey and Messrs. Bucklin and Chase, all of whom settled in or near the south-west part of the town, early in 1855. Mr. Newton came from Massachusetts, stopping a short time at Chaska, from which point he came to Greenwood the last of March, with an ox team and an old-fashioned wood-shod sled. In February previous, he had visited the locality and selected his claim, as had also the others named. He wearied of frontier life after about a year's experience, and returned to his former home in the old Bay State. Those from Shakopee arrived in May, 1855, and the next month the town was subdivided into sections, by government survey. Others who came in May were James D. Young, William C. Gould and John B. Edgar, the former bringing the first wagon to this part of the country. In September of this year, John F. Powers and A. W. Dorman settled in the south-west part of the town, near the Crow river. Other settlers of 1855 were Robert Gustine, A. S. Lindsay, Henry Greeling and August Kuhn. Among those who came soon after, were George F. Ames, Thomas R. Briggs, Andrew Thompson and his widowed sister, Mrs. Ann Cunningham, Christian Sipe, Carl Haftten, Benjamin Lawrence, Martin Conzet, W. W. Hall, Adam Hohenstein, Albert Roberts, W. P. C. Hawk, E. L. Allars, Nathaniel Moore and John O'Mera, some of whom figure conspicuously in the history of the town and deserve even more than the further mention yet in reserve in these pages. Before entering into further personal detail, however, it is necessary to devote some space to the rise and fall of the ephemeral "city," which now exists only in tradition. In the early winter of 1856-7, the few who came from Shakopee surveyed and platted about 200 acres on the south bank of Crow river, which was duly recorded as the "City of Greenwood," and in token of the sincerity of their intentions, those residing within the corporate limits, proceeded to the election of the following officers: Mayor, Matthew Taisey; Councilmen, Samuel Allen, Robert Gustine, John F. Powers; Recorder, A. S. Lindsay; Marshal, James D. Young.

The first habitable house on the town site was built by Matthew and Albert Taisey in 1855. The next year J. M. Burt opened a general store, in which a thriving business was carried on for some time. After about a year he sold to Albert Taisey, and he to Thos. R. Briggs, who closed out the stock in the fall of 1858.

In the winter of 1856-7 large quantities of logs were hauled to the site of a contemplated saw-mill, on the bank of the Crow river. The mill was never built, however, and the logs were removed and used for other purposes, or perished from age and exposure.

In 1857, a mill was built on the north side of the Crow river, opposite Greenwood, to which fact was due the failure of the project just noted.

A town site was also platted, but never recorded, and the subsequent location of the village of Rockford, effectually strangled this projected borough.

Of course Greenwood needed a hotel, and so a commodious edifice was erected by Matthew and Albert Taisey, and given the euphonious title, "Beaver House." In 1862, when the Indian "scare" was at its height, the settlers converted this into a fortress, and for their better protection in case of an attack, tamarac poles were brought, and a stockade built, inclosing outbuildings and stable, and allowing space for teams and stock. Several families from Wright county nestled under the protecting wings of this fort, in addition to those of Greenwood, and occasional detachments of cavalry from Fort Snelling halted here while scouring the country for traces or tidings of the enemy. Many of the first historic events of the town occurred within the limits of the city.

In the spring of 1856, the first school was taught in a small building erected by a Mr. Peasley, as a residence, and jestingly called "Peasley's Hall." The estimable lady to whom is due the credit of first directing the youthful minds of this infant community, was Miss Ruth A. Powers, daughter of John F. Powers, and now Mrs. Jas. D. Young, of Delano, Wright county.

The next to preside over this early band of students, was Miss Mary Ball, daughter of Mrs. A. W. Dorman, by a former husband. In the fall of 1856, occurred the first death, and the first grave made by white men was opened to receive the remains of an infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Allen. The little one's name was Jennie.

The first preaching in town was in the winter of 1856-7, by Rev. Charles Galpin, of Excelsior, at the residence of John F. Powers. The same winter, Rev. Mr. Camp, an invalid spending the winter at Excelsior, held religious services at the home of Mr. Powers, on several occasions.

In 1857, the census showed the population of the city as seventy-six.

In this year occurred the first marriage, James D. Young and Miss Ruth A. Powers, the marriage dating September 17th, 1857. They are now living in Delano, and their eldest daughter, Miss Katie, is remembered as the first white child born in Greenwood, her birth occurring June 15th, 1860.

About 1857, after considerable effort on the part of the citizens, a post-office was established at Greenwood, and Albert Taisey appointed postmaster. Soon after, it passed into the hands of Mr. Powers, who retained it until his removal from Greenwood, in 1868, when he left it with his deputy, Mrs. Taisey. She had charge until 1869, when it was discontinued.

In 1857 a society known as the Independent Order Nobilium Fratrum, was organized in Greenwood, and reached a large membership in a short time. It was a select organization, its principal tenets being fraternal fellowship, and the promotion of literature and music.

A lyceum was started about the same time, and was well sustained for a season. In 1858 both it and the I. O. N. F. withered and died from lack of vital force.

The village of Rockford was founded about 1857, and proved a fatal drain upon the young city, whose auspicious opening bore promise of a better fortune.

Thus, one by one its roses faded, until the location of the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad, at some distance south of the town, gave the last fatal blow, and the "City of Greenwood" was numbered with the things that were.

Some recompense for this loss, however, is found in the establishment of Rockford, a thriving village situated on the opposite side of the river, about a mile below the old site of Greenwood, which not only affords a trading point, but has good flour and lumber mills, and on the Greenwood side, a fine woolen factory, which is yearly gaining in public favor.

THE OLD SETTLERS.

Some further recognition is due the pioneer settlers of Greenwood, and a brief record of their fortunes can not fail to interest the general reader. Thomas Holmes was a man of unusual energy and activity. He was one of the founders of Janesville, Wisconsin, and later of Shakopee, this state. He also figured quite prominently in the early development of the cities of Milwaukee and Chicago. He made several trips to Montana, as guide to emigrant companies. He is now living in northern Georgia.

John M. Burt is now a resident of Chemung county, New York. He visited this section about three years ago, and could but marvel at the changes time had wrought during his absence.

Samuel Allen is now a resident of Howard Lake, Wright county. Kennedy, Bucklin and Chase never became residents here, although largely interested in the town site. Mathew Taisey is now in Missouri, whither he removed several years since. Albert Taisey removed to Lake City, and has distinguished himself as a prominent organizer of societies of the Labor League throughout the state, notably so during the year 1880. A brother of Albert (Milton Nobles Taisey) is well remembered by the old settlers of Greenwood, as an active young man, with more apparent relish for the city than the forest. His dramatic talent led him to seek a place behind the footlights, and for that purpose he left the rural home, and for a time was lost to his former friends and associates; but a few years ago he appeared as the manager of a theatrical troupe, under the name of Milton Nobles, having dropped the family name, Taisey.

John B. Edgar died on his farm east of the old town site about eight years ago.

Geo. F. Ames made a claim opposite the present village of Rockford in the fall of 1855, and moved his family here early the following year. The first year or two he lived on the Rockford side, but afterward built a house on the Greenwood side, where he lived, leading an active life until his death in the fall of 1878. It was his capital and energy that built and put in operation the Rockford Mills, to which the place is largely indebted for its present growth and prosperity. He also built the first carding-mill, which has since developed into the present Rockford Woolen Mills. He first built a small shop for general work, and put in machinery for turning broom-handles and other light articles. To this he soon added a carding-machine, from which small beginning the factory has grown. Mrs. Ames still occupies the old homestead, from which pleasant location can be seen the monuments of her deceased partner's industry and enterprise.

John F. Powers remained at Greenwood until 1868, when he removed to Delano, Wright county, at the time the railroad reached that place, and opened the first hotel at that station. The building was moved from Greenwood, and did service at its new location until supplanted by one of more generous proportions. Mr. Powers is still a resident of Delano, though not actively engaged in business.

Jas. D. Young, removed to Minneapolis in 1857, remaining something more than a year, during which time he was largely engaged in surveying and platting in the city, west of the river. In 1858 he returned to Greenwood, and in 1862, purchased a farm south of the town site, upon which he resided until 1871, when he removed to Delano, and rented the hotel of John F. Powers. He afterward purchased the building, and in 1879, built in its stead the fine hotel he now occupies.

Wm. C. Gould has remained in the town since his first coming, except a short residence in Rockford, during the war. He is now located on a farm on section 28, west of Rockford. L. Allars removed to Rockford some years since, and in 1876 built and opened the Centennial Hotel, which he still occupies. Thos. R. Briggs removed to Wright county, and is now a prominent lawyer at Howard Lake. Andrew Thompson, still owns a fine, well cultivated farm on section 28, east of Rockford, but has removed with his family to the west part of the State, where he and his sons have secured quite a large tract of land, which they are fast developing into a fine grain and stock farm. Christian Sipe is still a resident of the town, and in the enjoyment of the comforts secured by his early effort and enterprise.

W. W. Hall is pleasantly located on the north shore of Lake Sarah, section 31. He has been an active member of the community, and always interested in matters pertaining to the welfare of the town.

Martin Conzet has also been one of the active citizens of the town, and is now pleasantly located near the south line of section 33.

W. P. C. Hawk removed several years ago to Wright county, and is now a farmer near Wilmar, Kandiyohi county.

Adam Hohenstein located on section 11, where he now resides upon his original claim, which his industry has developed into one of the best farms in the town.

Nathaniel Moore first located near the present village of Cokato, in Wright county, and the tract since known as Moore's Prairie, still serves to perpetuate the remembrance of this sturdy pioneer, and honored citizen. Two of his sons, A. P. and Henry, are still residents of Wright county, and among its most prominent citizens. Their father removed to Greenwood at an early date, and settled on section 27, where he died several years since. His widow still occupies the old homestead.

Mrs. Ann Cunningham still occupies the old place on section 28, and her declining years are rendered pleasant by the faithful care and solicitude of her son, John Cunningham, who also ranks among the early settlers, and has, for several years past, held the office of town clerk.

Henry Greeing, on section 10, is among the earliest settlers, and has always been active in advancing the general interests of the community, and holds a prominent place in the German element of the town.

Carl Hafften settled on section 23, near the lake which bears his name. Adjoining his farm is that of Christian Schendel, whose land also borders upon a lake bearing his name, and connected with Hafften Lake by small stream of about eighty rods length.

Benjamin Lawrence settled on section 34, and has since opened up three other farms, finally settling upon his present place, on section 28. Few, if any, of the early settlers can recall more hardships or privations endured than his record shows, among which was the total loss of his household goods, provisions, etc., by fire, which destroyed his house while the family were absent from home.

John O'Mera came here early in 1858, first renting a farm for one year, then purchasing his present farm, on section 28. He has held the office of Supervisor for two years, Town clerk fifteen years, and Clerk of his school district for eighteen years. His farm is one of the best in the county, and he is fast gaining prominence as a successful stock grower, to which his principal attention is now given.

A. B. Dorman is comfortably located on section 31, the only remaining one of the original settlers on the old town site of the defunct city of Greenwood, and the ground once designed for a busy mart is turned by his plow-share, in the cultivation of his farm, of which it forms a part. About one-half the original plat is included in his farm; the balance is owned by other parties. Mr. Dor-man has been almost constantly in the service of the town in some official capacity, serving as supervisor for several years, and Justice of the Peace for the past twenty years, besides his official connection with the public schools. In 1840, he married Mrs. Susan C. Northup, who has borne him three children: Homer W., Harriet E., and Willie N. Of these, Harriet E. married O. C. Willcutt, and, in 1870, died. Homer is now on the farm with his father, as is also Willie, who is married. Mr. Dorman is now seventy years old, but in the full possession of his faculties, and as genial a companion as in the earlier days of his manhood.

A. J. Roberts settled his family here as early as 1857, but did not settle down to farming, himself, until about 1864, being engaged in trapping and trading previous to that date. Albert Roberts, his son, settled here in 1866, and soon became one of the prominent public men of the town. He has twice been elected chairman of the town board, eight times elected assessor, and was the census enumerator for his town in the years 1875 and 1880. In the fall of 1880, he was elected as representative of his district to the state legislature, on the Republican ticket.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

Like most of the towns throughout the county, Greenwood hastened to embrace the privilege afforded by the admission of the state, and a legal organization was effected at a meeting held on the 11th of May, 1858, at which the following officers were elected: Supervisors, J. R. Ames, chairman, H. G. Ferrell, William C. Hawk; Clerk, Thomas R. Briggs; Assessor, Benjamin Lawrence; Collector, R. W. Currier; Justices, D. R. Farnham and Clinton Howe; Constables, John O'Mera and Volney S. Britt; Overseer of Poor, Andrew Thompson. The town expenses for the first year were $115. Several of the above list of officers are now residents of Wright county, a few only remaining in Greenwood.

CHURCHES.

The American element of Greenwood mainly find church affiliation at Rockford. The German element is about equally divided between the Lutheran, and Methodist churches, and both have erected houses of worship.

CHURCH BUILDINGS.

The German Methodist society have a comfortable building on section 12, erected about eight years since. The society is quite numerous, and weekly service is maintained in their church.

The Lutheran church, on section 11, was built four years ago. It is a commodious wood structure, and furnishes ample room for the congregation which assembles for service each Sabbath. A parsonage has been erected near the church, on the opposite side of the road, and on the north is the cemetery, established about the time the society was organized.

SCHOOLS.

From the little band of juveniles who formed the first school, in 1856, the increased population now supports four entire school districts, and shares jointly with two others located mainly in Independence. District No. 76 has a good school building on section 28; District No. 77, on section 25; District No. 75, on section 14; and District No. 74, on section 12.

STATISTICAL.

Greenwood has an area of 13,460 acres, the assessed valuation of which is $157,947. Its personal property is assessed at $20,088, and its taxes for 1880 were $1,956, all showing a healthy development since its first settlement in the not distant past.

OFFICIAL ROSTER.

The officers elected for 1880 were: Supervisors, George W. Shelley, chairman, John Jacobs and Mathias Harff; Clerk, John Cunningham; Assessor, A. Roberts; Justices, A. W. Dorman and Ephraim Sipe; Constables, George Shelley and Geo. Hohenstein.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Martin Conzet, a native of Switzerland, was born in the year 1829, and emigrated to America in 1847. He worked at the carpenter's trade in Dubuque, Iowa, six years, removed to St. Anthony in 1853, and worked at carpentry and cabinet-making until 1856, when he kept a boarding house. The same year he made a claim, where he now lives. He was elected constable at St. Anthony in 1855, and held the office two years; has held the office of town assessor ten years. They have four children: Ida, Martha, Louisa and Christian. Mr. Hohenstein has held the office of constable for eight years.

Carl Hafften was born in Germany in 1828. His father died in 1849, and in 1852, Carl went with his mother to Canada. In 1857, they moved to Minnesota, and settled in Greenwood, where he has since lived. He has a fine farm located near lakes Hafften and Schendel. He has been engaged, for the past five seasons, in the manufacture of Amber Cane Syrup, turning out from eight hundred to one thousand gallons per year. In 1852, he married Maria Holtz of Germany. They have had sixteen children. Those living are: Charles, August, John, William, Louis, Albert, Robert, Emma, Frederick, Matilda, Henry and Mary.

John Jacobs, one of the early settlers of this county, is a native of Wales, born in 1835. He emigrated to the United States, with his parents, in 1843, and located in Oneida county, New York, where his father died. He removed to Wisconsin in 1851, and engaged in lumbering until 1858, when he removed to Minneapolis, Minnesota. He enlisted in Comp. B, 6th Regt. Inf., and served against the Indians until 1864, when he went South, where he was taken sick, and mustered out. He was married in 1864, to Miss Matilda McKinley of Wright county. They have had four children, three of whom are living: William, Nettie and Belle. Lizzie R. died. Mr. Jacobs has held the office of town supervisor, two years.

His school advantages were limited to a period of fifteen months, but by close application he has gained knowledge sufficient to fill the different offices with credit. In 1880 he married Margaret Husted, of Corcoran, who was born April 29th, 1863.

CORCORAN.

CHAPTER LI.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—FIRST SETTLEMENT—
EARLY EVENTS—ORGANIZATION—CHURCHES —SCHOOL—POST-OFFICES—STORES—OFFICIAL ROSTER—STATISTICS—BIOGRAPHICAL.

The township of Corcoran is located in the north-western part of Hennepin county, and is bounded on the north by Hassan, east by Maple Grove, south by Medina and west by Greenwood. Its surface is rolling, in the south part bluffly. It is heavily timbered with hard and soft maple, oak, elm and basswood. There are occasional patches of wild meadow-land, which produce a good quality of grass. The soil is light in the south part, in the central part it is a heavy black loam, and lighter in the north part, with a clay subsoil throughout, producing wheat, barley, oats and corn abundantly. Amber cane is grown to some extent. Jubert's Lake, the largest body of water in the town, is located on sections twenty-nine and thirty-two; there are two other small lakes that are unnamed, one located in the southern part, and the other in the western part of the town.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

Benjamin Pounder, was the first man to enter the unbroken wilderness, and commenced in 1855 to lay the foundation of what is now the flourishing town of Corcoran. He was followed in a few days by P. B. Corcoran, one of the founders of the town. He was accompanied by Morris Ryan, who died in 1878; his family still reside here.

Mr. P. B. Corcoran is one of those men who are justly entitled to more than a passing notice, and we regret that our limits will not permit, as much as we desire to write of this enterprising pioneer. He threaded his way on foot into this then wilderness, with but one hand to help him, having lost his right hand in a lumber-mill in the state of New York. With his left hand he stuck his stake on section twenty-three, and commenced to build around it, adding acre to acre until he now is the possessor of six hundred and forty (640) of them, which gradually yielded to his intelligent and aggressive strokes, until the wild stillness that surrounded him had been converted into the busy hum of an intelligent and advancing civilization.

His next care was the school, which engaged his attention, and in two years after his arrival, he organized a school, built the rude log Temple which he dedicated to the Muses, and to prevent any misdirection of his intentions, presided over it himself, cultivating the young minds committed to his care, more carefully, than he did the soil on his chosen and loved homestead. He continued it for three months. This was the first school taught in the town. His organizing genius has made itself felt throughout all the multifarious affairs of the town. His acknowledged abilities have been recognized by the citizens, who have expressed it, by electing him supervisor for twelve years, and so evenly does he hold the scales of Justice, that he has been called to hold them for fourteen years, making decisions that would honor the Ermine of the higher courts, for all law is based on common sense, which desirable quality he possesses in an eminent degree. His next enterprise was a store, which he started in a log house with thatched roof, and located on the west side of his farm. The business increased so rapidly that he was obliged to build a larger one with a shingled roof. He located it on the east side of his farm, and in a few years was obliged to build a still larger one. It is 30x40 feet, two-stories, making a hall of the upper story which is used for town meetings, public entertainments, etc. He was the first postmaster in the town, which office he still holds.

The settlers with Patrick B. Corcoran were

He is full of public spirit, and a leader in everything tending to the growth of the town. He, as one of the supervisors, with P. B. Corcoran, as chairman of the board, laid out the first road in the town—the Minneapolis and Monticello state road, in 1858. Michael and Peter Raymond live on their original claim, on section 20. Joseph Dupont lives on his first claim, on section 19; has been postmaster since July 4th, 1875. The post-office, called "Dupont," taking its name from the present official, who is a highly esteemed citizen of the town. Joseph Scott died on his claim, in section 29, and the farm is now owned by his son, D. Scott. The same year, Frank Gagne settled on section 27. He was one of the earliest settlers on the reservation near Minneapolis, a little southeast of the present site. He had some trouble over a contested claim there, finally sold it and came here with his brother, Joseph, who settled on section 27, and is still living here.

CAL.

The town of Maple Grove is situated in the northern central part of Hennepin county, and is bounded on the north by Dayton and Champlin, east by Brooklyn and Osseo, south by Plymouth, and west by Corcoran. The surface of the town is rolling, excepting on sections 22 and 23, where it is bluffy. When first settled, it was heavily timbered with a large growth of elm, oak, basswood and maple, the latter growing in large quantities, scattered in such beautiful groves over the town, that it was named Maple Grove. The south-eastern portion of the town is covered with a low underbrush. Bottineau Prairie, west of Osseo, includes half of section 1, all of section 12, one-quarter of section 11, and half of section 13. It is bordered by a narrow belt of brushland. The remaining portion is timber and wild meadow land, with fine rich meadows bordering on Rush Creek. The soil is a black loam with clay sub-soil, excepting on the east part of the prairie, where it is gravel. There are several lakes in the town, all well stocked with fish, except Mud Lake; among them are Eagle Lake, in the south-east corner of the town, occupying the greater portion of section 36; this is the largest lake in the town. Fish Lake is a long and somewhat irregular-shaped body, watering portions of sections 21, 22, 27 and 28. Weaver Lake, on sections 17, 18, 19 and 20, in the west part, and Rice Lake near the centre, mostly on section 16. Cedar Island Lake on sections 26 and 27, takes its name from the three islands that it surrounds, which are covered with a small growth of cedar. It is also watered by Elm Creek, which rises in the northeastern part of Plymouth, and flows north-easterly through Rice Lake; thence on in the same direction, emptying into Hayden's Lake, in the town of Dayton. Rush Creek also flows through the northern portion of the town in an easterly direction, and forms a junction with Elm Creek on section 31, in Dayton, near the northern boundary line of the town.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The stillness of the forests which covered much of the territory now embraced within the limits of the town of Maple Grove, had never been disturbed, except by the stealthy tread of the Indian, until Louis P. Garvais, in 1851, broke the silence which for ages had pervaded the wilderness. He settled on the southeast quarter of section 12, and sounded the first notes of civilization from that point. With his family he labored, battling with the forest and wild beasts, and with the more formidable Winnebagos, who, two years after his settlement, were removed to their reservation.

About the same time came William M. Ewing, who helped survey the town and name it. Ewing moved to Osseo, in 1857. With the retirement of the Indians, the prospects of the settlers brightened, and the face of the country was soon dotted with the betterments of a hardy class of pioneers.

In May, 1851, came Harvey Abel, who, following the course of empire, westward, marked his claim where the Town House now stands, the first west of Bottineau Prairie. He sold his claim and made another, and, full of Yankee enterprise, sold that and made the third and last claim, the one on which he now lives, built his log cabin, covered it with bark, and used the same material for floor and tables, cooked for himself, and lived alone for three years. The same year came A. O. Angell, and settled on section 10, built his cabin of rough logs and covered it with bark, split and laid basswood slabs for his floor, and commenced house-keeping. The same year came W. E. Evans, from Chittenden county, Vermont, and located on section 4, where he now lives. He built the first log cabin on the road between Minneapolis and Crow River. Patrick Devery also came in 1854, and located on section 28, where he still lives. He built him a home, and gathered about him a small stock of cattle. He had one cow stolen and killed by the Indians, who roasted one-half of it, and took the rest away with them, on their way to the battle between the Chippewas and Sioux, at Shakopee, in 1858.

Late in 1854, O. R. Champlin came and settled on section 16. He built his house in the woods, and in the place of bark, which was then much in use for covering, used wooden troughs for shingles.

In 1855, came J. H. Briggs, who settled on section 4, in the north part of the town, and built his log house; brought his provisions on his back, from Saint Anthony, a distance of sixteen miles, marked trees being his only guide. The same year came John Cook, and located on section 30. In June of the same year, Luther Hoff came and settled on section 8; he died in October 1864. His widow, Mrs. Minerva Hoff, is still living on the place. About the same time came Patrick Darmody and settled on section 31, in the south-west corner of the town. In the fall of the same year, came William Trott, and settled on section 10. He lived in a little shanty covered with bark, the first winter, and with the true pioneer pluck, he worked on alone, opening up his farm, until now he has all the evidences of thrift around him. In 1856, John M. Eddy came from Addison county, Vermont, and settled in the north part on section 4, of the town, and is now an honored and respected citizen. He has filled the office of town clerk for many years, with credit to himself and satisfaction to the town. George A. Laffin came from Chittenden county, Vermont, in 1856, and settled on section 10, in the north part of the town, and is now one of the prominent citizens of Maple Grove. From this date (1856) settlements were quite rapid, and the next care was the church and school, the only real foundations upon which a community can securely build. The first preaching in the town was at the house of P. B. Newton, on section 4, in 1855, by Rev. L. Atkinson, a Baptist. Later, in 1856-7, came the Rev. C. G. Ames and held services in the north part of the town, preaching to the Free Will Baptists for about a year. About the same time, came the Rev. Mr. White, Methodist, preaching at the house of P. B. Newton, on section 4. The first school was taught in the summer of 1858, in an old vacant dwelling house on section 4, by Delos Hawkins. The first marriage was that of J. M. Eddy to Mary E. Evans, February 24th, 1857, by Rev. Lewis Atkinson.

First birth, Persis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Briggs, in the winter of 1855-6.

First deaths, Alonzo and Melissa Corey, children of James M. Corey, in the winter of 1855-6.

ORGANIZATION.

The first meeting for the purpose of organizing a board of town officers, was held April 11, 1858, at the house of Hiram Blowers. Meeting called to order and Hiram Blowers elected Moderator, and J. M. Eddy Clerk. Supervisors, A. C. Austin, Jeremiah Brown, Robert Woodard; Town Clerk, J. M. Eddy; Assessor, William R. Champlin; Collector, Chauncey Blowers; Overseer of Poor, P. B. Newton; Constables, Charles Savage and J. M. Corey; Justices, William E. Evans and Moses Blowers.

Previous to this organization a vote was taken on the "Five Million Loan," and every vote in the precinct was against it.

CHURCHES.

There are two Methodist Episcopal churches in the town, one located on section 17, and built in 1868. A class was formed about twenty years ago, and from it has grown the present church. Rev. Mr. White was the first minister. The second Methodist Episcopal church is located on section 4, in the north part of the town, and is not yet completed, but in a condition to permit public worship. Both the Methodist churches are now supplied semi-monthly by the pastor from the town of Champlin.

Maple Grove Catholic Church is located on section 29, in the south-western part of the town near school No. 45, has been in charge of the Rev. Father, A. Ladriere for the past five years, and has a membership of over a hundred families.

The Congregationalists had preaching for a few years in the school-house on section 4, by the Rev. A. K. Packard, from Anoka, but for the past seven years have had no regular preaching.

The Universalists have preaching occasionally in the school-house on section 1, by Revs. Goodrich and Harrington. There is also an Episcopal service conducted semi-monthly at the same place by the Rev. Mr. Price, of Minneapolis.

SOCIETIES.

L. O. G. T. This Lodge was organized in 1865. They built for their accommodation a hall over the school-house in District No. 12, where regular meetings were held for several years, and the town rejoiced over the good work it was doing, but like all human efforts, it had the germ of decay in it, which fed upon its vitality until it finally became entirely extinct.

MAPLE GROVE LYCEUM.

Was organized in the winter of 1858-9, in the school-house in District 12. In connection with it, was started a paper called the "Maple Grove Watchman," read each week during the winter months. It was here the "Conscript Fathers" of the town, met to discuss the leading questions of the day—to measure swords in an earnest debate, and it is to be hoped, always rising above the debasing influences of an angry discussion. It grew, and flourished for a time, calling to its aid such men as W. A. Crawford, Assistant Editor of the "New York Graphic," who gave them a lecture the first winter of its existence. The "Watchman" chronicled the events of the town and many were the sharp "home thrusts" that bursted from its columns. But its glory is past, and it, like some of its founders has gone to rest.

SCHOOLS.

The school system in this town is equal to any in Hennepin county, which is called the banner county of the state. The first school in the town was established on section 1, in school district No. 12, and is now a joint district. The other joint ones are No. 101, located on section 6, and No. 46, located on section 27. The entire districts are No. 45, located on section 29, No. 41, located on section 17, and No. 100 located on section 9. Besides these are joint districts, Nos. 33, 43 and 45, houses located in other townships. All the school buildings in the town are nearly new and in good repair. 12 and 46 are furnished with patent desks and seats.

MANUFACTURES.

A small saw-mill was built on Elm Creek, section 10, in 1865, by Franklin Cook and changed to a grist mill in 1868. It now has two run of stone, one for flour and one for feed, which is a great convenience for the immediate neighborhood. There are in the town, four amber cane mills, owned and located as follows: S. S. Hawkins, on section 3; E. P. Woodworth, on section 3; Henry Abel on section 17, and one on section 18, owned by William and James Chapman. Each one of them has a capacity of from eight to sixteen hundred gallons annually.

TOWN HOUSE.

The first building used for a town house, was purchased of Hiram Blowers and fitted up for the use of the town in 1863. It is located on section 9. It was used until the present building was erected on the site of the old one in 1877. Size, 22x32, one story high, well built and in good condition.

CEMETETERIES.

There are three cemeteries in the town, located as follows: One on section 1, established sixteen years ago by an association, as a general burial ground; and one on the extreme west line of section 7; also one on the north line of the same section.

ROSTER BIOGRAPHICAL.

Plymouth is situated near the center of Hennepin county and comprises the congressional township of 118 north, range 22 west, fifth principal meridian. The surface is undulating, that portion of the town around the north end of Medicine Lake, being the most hilly. When first settled, the west and north-west part was covered with a heavy growth of timber, covering nearly half of the town; the remaining portion being covered by brush, with a few marshes that support a growth of tamarac. The principal woods are maple, oak and elm, with a little ironwood, ash and poplar. The soil generally is a clay loam. Around Parker's Lake it is sandy, and in some places gravelly. Sandy spots occur occasionally in the north-east part. The town is interspersed with numerous lakes. Among them is Medicine Lake, the largest, situated in the south-east part of the town. It is a beautiful body of water, about two miles long from north-west to south-east, and nearly three-quarters of a mile wide in the widest part. The south-east shore is sandy, which with a sandy bottom makes it an excellent bathing-place, and is much resorted to for that purpose. At different places on the east and west shores, the banks are quite high and precipitous. The north and south ends are marshy. Its outlet is Bassett's Creek, which flows out of the south end and passes out of the town at the south-east corner and empties into the Mississippi at Minneapolis. The lake derives its name from an Indian legend, which says that an Indian in his canoe was capsized by a sudden storm, and the Indians not being able to find his body, gave it the name of Medicine Lake. Bass Lake is in section 2, and covers about one hundred and fifty acres, with an island of several acres in the center. Its shores are marshy, and its outlet is Bass Lake Creek, which leaves the lake from its north-east corner, flows eastwardly out of the town and empties into Shingle Creek in the south-west part of Brooklyn. It received its name from the large number of bass, they being almost the only fish that swim in its waters. It was named by Antoine Le Count.

Parker's Lake situated in the southern part of section 28, and northern part of section 33, covering about one hundred acres, is a clear and beautiful sheet of water, with sandy shores and a hard bottom. The other lakes in the town are more or less marshy, and small.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

Antoine Le Count was the first settler in the town, coming in October, 1853, and locating on the east shore of Medicine Lake, on section 24, where he now lives. Antoine Le Count is one of those men whose adventurous life deserves a record that should be preserved for the benefit of the oncoming generations—a record, commencing with the primitive history of the Northwest, and extending over the eventful scenes that have been enacted during a half century. The writer of this article feels it to be a pleasing duty to give in brief the facts in his possession connected with this adventurous traveler, guide, and daring explorer, only regretting that the limits allotted to this work will not allow a more detailed account of the man whose history is so closely interwoven with that of the Northwest. And, as the object most sincerely sought for in this work, is to give a succinct and truthful statement of all the facts with which it has to deal, the reader will not do the writer the violence to think that he is reading aught but historic truths, as he follows the history of Antoine Le Count and his father. The latter was a guide in the early days of the Territory, carrying the mail from the Red River country to points south; also carrying with him fancy trinkets and wampum, made by the Indians, taking them to St. Louis, and trading or selling them for horses, or whatever his shrewd mind suggested would pay him to bring back to the Red River country. By this means he accumulated quite a fortune. Among the early French settlers, he was known by the name of Le Gros. He took Pierre Bottineau, when he was about twelve years old, into his family, and trained him to be the guide that afterward made him famous. Antoine was born on the Minnesota side of the Red River, near the International boundary line, November 6th, 1822. In the summer of 1837, he came with his father to Fort Snelling, remaining until September following, when he returned to his home on Red River. His father, in connection with Franklin Steele, made a claim on the east side of the Mississippi River, at the falls, including Nicollet Island. The following June he started for his claim, from Red River, with his family. With them was a gentleman by the name of Thomas Simpson, who was in great haste to get through, and did not wish to take the time necessary to go around by Lac qui Parle, and offered Le Count a tempting price to pilot him across the country in as nearly a direct line as possible. Le Count accepted the proposition, and gave Pierre Bottineau charge of the party containing his family, Pierre Bottineau's, and others, taking besides himself and Mr. Simpson, his son Antoine, who was nearly seventeen years old, and two others, five in all, and started across. When about a day and a half on their journey, Mr. Simpson showed signs of insanity, but did not appear to be dangerous. About sundown the fourth day out, while they were preparing to go into camp, Mr. Simpson seized a double-barrelled shotgun, and, without a moments warning, shot Mr. Le Count and one of the men. The shots followed each other so rapidly that the survivors thought but one shot had been fired. Le Count did not die immediately, but, knowing his end was near at hand, called his son Antoine to him and told him he was going to die, giving him instructions how, and what direction to take, to reach the train his mother was with, and to run for his life before Mr. Simpson had time to reload. The hired man had already disappeared, and young Antoine, with trembling anxiety, watched his opportunity, and made his escape. He had not gone far when he heard Mr. Simpson calling: "Jim! Jim!!" (the hired man); he wanted him to take him back. In the meantime, Antoine had found Jim, and they proceeded together. When about a mile from their recent camp, they heard a gun and concluded the unfortunate man had killed himself. (They subsequently found that he had shot at and wounded one of the horses.) Urging their horses to their utmost speed, and following the track advised by his father, they struck the train trail of Pierre Bottineau about daylight, having come about fifty miles. In a short time they were in camp, and told their story. Pierre Bottineau took a party and went back to the scene. When he reached it he found the unfortunate Simpson had added his own life to those of his two victims, by blowing his head entirely to pieces. The bodies of Le Count and the other man, were brought back and taken to Red River, and there buried. Mr. Simpson's body was left on the spot.

The train then moved forward on its road, and reached Fort Snelling about the middle of July 1838. Antoine and mother remained there until the following spring, when they moved to Pigs Eye, where he remained about a year. From that time he was a rover, moving from place to place as fancy or work dictated, until he settled in Plymouth, in October 1853. With Antoine Le Count came Peter Daniels, who made his claim adjoining Le Count, on the north, but did not settle until the year following.

Almost simultaneously with Antoine Le Count, came Thomas Hughes and family into this wilderness, the lurking place of Shakopee and his Sioux band. No roads were known other than the wild Indians trail. But with a fixed purpose before him, this hardy and intelligent pioneer has conquered every obstacle, and now in his riper years, is enjoying all the comforts of a good home and the confidence of his fellow citizens, with his enterprising sons, James, Henry, Charles and Edward around him, all possessing the indomitable will of the father. They have built for themselves nice homes and rank with Plymouth's respected citizens.

Francis Huot and G. D. Brawley came during the winter. Mr. Huot making a claim on the north end of Medicine Lake, Mr. Brawley adjoining him on the west. Neither settled at that time, but made some improvements and returned to Saint Anthony. Mr. Brawley sold his claim to Mr. E. Boucher, and Mr. Huot returned with his family, November 15th, 1854. Following these two was Charles Mousseau, who made a claim joining Le Count on the south, did not move on it, but made a few improvements. At the same time with Mr. Huot, came David Gorham, Joseph Jamme, George Burbein and Edward Burke.

Gorham settling on section 17, the first of March 1854, and moved his family in September 1855. Mr. Jamme selected the west half of section 17, as his claim, put up a shanty and moved his family in October that year. Mr. Burbein took his claim on the north-east quarter of section 8, put up a shanty the following fall, and moved his family in the spring of 1855; lived on it about a year then moved back to Saint Anthony, and now lives in Anoka. Mr. Burke made his claim on section 17, built a shanty, made some improvements, but being a single man, had no regular habitation, but teamed back and forth from Saint Anthony. He married in 1855, and moved to his place, lived there about a year, sold out and moved to Saint Anthony.

Israel Michaud made a claim about the same time; lived on it a few years; sold, and moved to Medina, but subsequently moved back to Plymouth, where he was killed while hauling lumber in the summer of 1877. In May, 1854, Jonas H. Howe came and made a claim on section 22. Henry L. Moses came in July following, and made his claim on the west side of section 22, living on it a few years; he now lives in Dakota county. Early in 1854, C. W. Farrington made his claim on section 15, and moved his family on to it in March, 1855; subsequently kept a hotel for a number of years. Samuel Merchant made his claim in September, 1854, and moved his family to it, the following May. In the fore part of October, 1854, came three Parker brothers, I. S., C. D. and Alfred, and settled around Parker's Lake. Alfred is now living in Crystal Lake, I. S. in Anoka county, and C. D. is still a resident of Plymouth. Henry Collins and John Carne came a little later. James Berube made his claim in December, 1854, but did not move on to it with his family until November, 1855. During the summer of 1854, came James Hughes and family, and settled where they now live. The settlement was quite rapid in 1855. Among those coming were Herman Sandhoff, Francis Day, Charles Tolman, Amos Hoyt and wife, D. C. Parker, wife and his father, the Rev. James Parker. The wife of the latter died in St. Anthony, of cholera, while en route, and was buried on the site of the present city of Minneapolis.

In June, 1858, the Chippewa Indians made a raid on their deadly enemies, the Sioux, met them at Shakopee, had a fight, and were badly defeated. Upon their return, they passed through the town, doing bodily injury to no one, but stole and killed what they wanted to eat. They shot a pair of steers for I. S. Parker, and Amos Hoyt, and emptied D. C. Parker's corn crib, wounded a cow, and stole a few more things from others. As they were on the verge of starvation, the whites concluded that it was no more than they would do themselves under like circumstances, and did not molest them. Besides, it may be that a wholesome regard for their own safety arose to the surface quietly, but not to that extent which under the circumstances made it necessary to boast loudly of, so, Lo, and his plunder departed in peace, but not without leaving many hearts fluttering with twinges of fear and doubt for their safety. A military company of twenty was formed, with Charles Tolman for captain, who received their guns from Saint Paul, and for two weeks the women and children were collected together in one house at night, while the men stood guard outside. Hearing there was a body of Sioux massing in the north part of the town, Captain Tolman, with his men, went in search, but found no traces of them. It was supposed to have been a scare gotten up by one James Moody, who lived in that part of the town, and it came near costing him his life. Other parties subsequently found traces that showed the Indians had passed through, near where he had indicated he had seen them. This quieted their anger, and ended the disturbance.

The first birth in town, was a child to D. C. Parker and wife, April 25th, 1855, two days after their arrival in the town. It lived but two or three days. A boy, Frank, was born to Amos Hoyt and wife, July 25th, following, and December 25th, same year, twins were born to F. A. Clay and wife, then living on section 33.

The first death that occurred was that of a child belonging to Antoine Le Count, which was caused by overturning a kettle of hot water, in December, 1853.

The Rev. James Parker was the first justice of the peace, appointed January 1st, 1856. His son, D. C. Parker, was appointed in 1857. Mr. Francis Huot was appointed the same year, but never qualified.

The first marriage was Jean Bourgeoise to Miss Rose Rouilliar.

The first school in the town was established in the summer of 1856, in a little shanty belonging to Oliver Huot, on section 14, in what is now District No. 51, and taught by Miss Lorinda

Shaw, who also taught the school established the following year in what is now District No. 48.

ORGANIZATION.

The first meeting for the purpose of forming a town organization, was called at the house of Francis Day, on the 11th day of May, 1858. The meeting was organized by electing G. W. Messenger for Moderator, and J. H. Howe, Clerk. The room being too small to accommodate them, the meeting was adjourned to the hotel kept by Mr. C. W. Farrington, on section 15. The following officers were elected: Supervisors, Francis Huot, chairman, D. C. Parker and Francis Gorham; Town Clerk, J. H. Howe; Assessor, Francis Day; Collector, Charles Tolman; Overseer of the Poor, Eustache Boucher; Constables, Phillip Otto and Alfred Jordan; Justices of the Peace, F. A. Clay and William Karson.

At a meeting of the county board April 10th, 1858, for the purpose of establishing the boundaries of the townships in the county, the congressional town of 118-22 was named Plymouth, and the first meeting was called under that name, which produced a great deal of dissatisfaction on the part of some of the voters, and another meeting was called for June 21st, 1858, which met at the hotel kept by C. W. Farrington. After considerable discussion a vote was taken, which resulted in favor of Medicine Lake, for the name of the town. The next meeting was held at the school house in district No. 51, April 5th, 1859, and the call was issued under the name of Medicine Lake, and the business transacted under that name. The following year, April 3d, 1860, the meeting was held under the name of Plymouth, no records showing when or how the change was effected. The county officials never recognized the name of Medicine Lake, and the name reverted back to that given it by the county board. The name was taken from a village called Plymouth, laid out on the north and west shores of Parker's Lake, in 1856.

In 1844, Mr. Schiebe married Johanna Genka, of Prussia.

Frederick Henry Benjamin Schmidt was born in Prussia, December 27th, 1829. He lived with his parents until twenty-one years of age, when he enlisted in the Prussian army, and served three years. In 1853 he came to America, and after a stay of one year near Chicago, came to St. Anthony, and in the spring of 1855, made a claim of 160 acres where he now lives. He resided in St. Anthony eleven years, engaged in carpenter work and teaming. In January, 1851, he made a trip, with team, to the Red River country, and was out twenty-nine days. During this trip he experienced many hardships, being several days without food for himself or team. He was married December 17th, 1857, to Barbara Ortleib, of Prussia, and in the following spring moved to his home in Plymouth, where he has since resided. He has been school officer for a number of years.

Dennis Schmitz was born in Coblenz Parish, west of the River Rhine, April 29th, 1827. He lived with his parents until eighteen years of age, when he entered the army, and served until 1850. In 1852 he came to America; spent three years in the lumber regions, of Michigan, and in 1855 came to Minnesota. The same year, his father and family emigrated to America, and making claims, settled in what is now Plymouth. Mr. Schmitz has been active in all public affairs of the town; was a member of the first school board, and has been chairman of the town board a number of times. He was married in St. Paul, February 6th, 1860, to Miss Susan Gabner, of Prussia. They are the parents of seven children.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The history of this township is closely identified with that of the City of Minneapolis, from which it derives its name. It is situated on the right bank of the Mississippi river, and partially surrounds the city. A portion of its territory was formerly embraced in the Fort Snelling Reservation. The Mississippi river forms its eastern boundary, south of the city limits, and Minnehaha creek separates it from Richfield for a short distance on the south-east. In the south and east, the surface is generally level, and in the north and west, rolling and lightly timbered. Previous to settlement, a growth of small brush, existed over nearly the whole surface. This has since been cleared, or allowed to develop into thrifty young timber; in the latter case, the larger growth has resulted from care, and freedom from fires.

The soil in the south and south-east, is a heavy dark loam and in the north-west it is lighter, with occasional sandy knolls. It generally produces fine crops. This township is noted for the beauty of its lakes, which are found in nearly every portion of its territory. A group of lakes such as are of frequent occurrence in Minnesota, is found in the central and southern parts of the town. The largest of these is Lake Calhoun, which is nearly round and has a circumference of over three miles. Its waters are clear and in some places, of great depth. The shores are sandy and afford excellent bathing places. This lake was named in honor of Hon. John C. Calhoun, at the time Fort Snelling was first occupied. It is but little more than one mile distant from the city limits, and being of easy access by fine drives and the Lyndale Motor, is a favorite resort with resident and tourist. Accommodations for the comfort and pleasure of the visitor are furnished, a description of which will be found further on in this chapter. Lake Harriet is located just south of Calhoun, and is very near the same in size and shape; a portion of it is in the town of Richfield. Its shores and bottom are sandy. These lakes are of historic interest, for on their shores was erected the first houses, and here was the first farming, by civilians, in Hennepin county. Cedar Lake is situated north-west of Calhoun, and is about one mile in length and half a mile in width. Its shores are sandy, and on the west, stony and gravelly. Lake of the Isles, north of Lake Calhoun and separated from it by a high gravelly beach and a narrow strip of swampy land, contains as its name indicates, a number of small islands. It covers about one hundred and sixty acres, and has generally sandy shores. Bass Lake, half a mile west of Lake Calhoun, has an area of about eighty acres, and shores similar to those of Cedar Lake. In the south-eastern part of the town, is Rice Lake, through which flows Minnehaha creek. In the northern part, is Keegan Lake, on section 20, Sweeney and Twin lakes on sections 18 and 19, and Keller's Lake on section 32. On section 12, near the west line of the town is Lake Hannan, and in the central part, are lakes Held and Hallaron on section 30. These and other small lakes, are more or less marshy. All the lakes mentioned, like others in the country, were well stocked with fish, when the county was first settled and some of them still afford good fishing. The waters of Bass Lake flow south-easterly, through a small creek into Calhoun. The outlet of Calhoun is on the south and connects it with Lake Harriet, from whence a small creek conveys the united waters into Minnehaha creek, near the Richfield mills. Cedar Lake and Lake of the Isles, have no visible outlets.

The principal creeks of the township, are Bassett's and Minne-ha-ha. The latter rises in lake Minnetonka, and, entering the town on the west, flows across the southwest corner into the town of Richfield, and thence through Rice Lake, from which point to its junction with the Mississippi river, it forms the boundary of the township. Bassett's creek enters the township from the west, and flows in an easterly direction across it and the city, and empties into the Mississippi river just within the limits of the original military reservation.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first person who lived within the limits of this township, is said to have been Joseph R. Brown, a discharged soldier, who, by tolerance of the commanding officer at Fort Snelling, dwelt near Minne-ha-ha Falls, within the reservation. Major Talliaterro, in 1829, opened a farm on the shores of Lake Calhoun, for the benefit of the Sioux Indians, and as Minne-ha-ha was called Brown's Falls, after General Jacob Brown, and Lake Calhoun was named after a late secretary of war, he called the settlement Eatonville, after the Hon. John H. Eaton, of Tennessee, secretary of war under President Jackson from 1829 to 1831. The first farmer of the establishment was Philander Prescott. In 1834, the Pond brothers arrived, and were the first civilians to erect a dwelling in the county. Eatonville grew to quite a village, but upon the removal of the Dakotahs to the banks of the Minnesota, in 1863, the improvements at Lakes Calhoun and Harriet were abandoned. From that date until 1849, we can learn of no settlements on the west side of the river. In the spring of that year, Philander Prescott made a claim on the east side of what is now Minne-ha-ha avenue. This claim being on the military reservation, he was not allowed to remain, and it was occupied by Franklin Steele, who had permission from the secretary of war for such occupation. Prescott then located a claim adjoining Steele on the west, but did not take possession of it until after the reservation came into market. His home was in the town of Richfield until his death. He was born in Ontario county, New York, in 1801. In 1819 he visited a brother at Detroit, Michigan, and while there, engaged as clerk with Mr. Devotion, a sutler, for a trip up the Mississippi. In the latter part of the year 1819, he arrived at the cantonment of Fort St. Anthony, now Fort Snelling, then in command of Col. Leavenworth. In the winter of 1824-5, he was trading near the fort. The Indians stole some of his goods, part of which were restored; in settlement of his claim for those not restored, the chief gave him his daughter in marriage. For three years he was with the Columbia Fur Company, and in 1830, was appointed Indian farmer at Lake Calhoun. He was temporarily engaged as interpreter at the Redwood agency when the outbreak occurred, and was killed by the Indians in August, 1862. His wife and a daughter were taken prisoners, but effected their escape through the aid of friendly Indians, and returned to their home at Minne-ha-ha. These two, an adopted daughter and one son are dead. The eldest daughter, Mrs. Pettijohn, is living at Shakopee, and another daughter, Mrs. Hamilton, is living in Eden Prairie. There is also a son surviving.

In the winter of 1849, Charles Mousseaux, by permission of the military authorities at Fort Snelling, made a claim on the eastern shore of Lake Calhoun, and built his shanty on the site of the old mission where the Ponds resided, now occupied by the Pavillion. He remained on this claim until the fall of 1857, when he moved to the city of Minneapolis, where he resided until the fall of 1880. He then removed to his present place, south of the city limits, on section 34. He was born in Montreal, Canada, in 1806. He was employed by the American Fur Company as voyageur, and in that capacity arrived at Fort Snelling in 1829. After about a week he went to Lac qui Parle, where he remained about a year. He then returned to Fort Snelling, and thence to Prairie du Chien. He was a carpenter and house painter, and engaged in those trades for several years. In 1830 he assisted in the improvements then being made at the Fort. He also built the house of Col Stevens, the first in Minneapolis.

Shortly after Mousseaux, came Rev. E. G. Gear, chaplain at Fort Snelling, and made a claim east of Lake Calhoun, by permission of the military authorities. He never lived on the claim, but employed Edmond Brissett to hold it until such time as he could enter it. When that time arrived, a contest arose between them as to the ownership of the claim. Mr. Gear, with the aid of Judge Black and Hon. H. M. Rice, got a bill through Congress, allowing him to enter the land at government price. He paid Mrs. Brissett two hundred dollars to leave the claim. Brissett and family then moved to Plymouth, where the family now reside. He now lives in St. Paul. Mr. Gear remained at Fort Snelling until 1860, when he moved to Fort Ripley, where he remained until 1868, then returned to Minneapolis. In 1870 he sold his claim, and it is now part of the "Lyndale Farm." He died in October, 1873, and was buried in Lakewood Cemetery. His wife and part of the family still reside in Minneapolis. One of his sons is the present governor of the state of Iowa.

The next claimant was David Gorham, who located on the eastern side of Lake of the Isles. He embraced the southwest quarter of section 33. He sold his claim to R. P. Russell, who bought it for his brother, L. K. Russell. The latter, in 1852, placed a tenant on it for a time, and it finally became the property of R. P. Russell, who now owns it. Gorham is living in Plymouth.

In April, 1851, John Berry made a claim on the west side of Cedar Lake on section 31, and raised the first crop on the west side. He lived on his claim until 1867, then sold, and has since resided in the city of Minneapolis. During the winter of 1851-'2 rumors of the proposed reduction of the Military Reservation caused considerable excitement among the residents of Saint Anthony and the new arrivals from the East in search of locations. Early in the spring of 1852, claim-staking began, and in a short time nearly every desirable location south of the city, and within the present boundaries of the town, was claimed. Claim-shanties were erected on nearly all of them, and some had a small piece of land plowed. But the land not being subject to entry, they were trespassers, and soldiers were sent out from the fort to drive them away. It was a common occurrence for a squatter to leave his place with everything all right, and returning, after an absence of one day, to find his shanty a wreck, and any other improvements he might have made destroyed.

"Claim jumping" was also greatly in vogue for a time, but the older settlers, who held the prior right to the claims, organized themselves into a society, known as the "Equal Right and Impartial Protection Claim Association of Hennepin county, M. T." The object of this association was to protect each actual settler in his right to a claim, and the "jumper" fared badly who fell into the hands of this league. A committee, consisting of members of the organization, was appointed, whose duty it was to decide questions in regard to the ownership of claims, arising between members of the association. A decision once made, it was not well for the defeated party to try and gain his end by force or strategy. A few, having permission from the officers of the Fort to remain, held their claims easily; but the many were obliged to wait until the restriction to settlement was removed by the government. In fact, all who had claims, and were living on them, previous to the release, did so by the permission of the authorities at the Fort, or of the War Department. When the reduction of the reservation took place, in the spring of 1853, the rush for claims was so great that it is impossible to name the settlers of that year in the order of their arrival. Claims were made simultaneously, west and southwest of Minneapolis, but it was not until a later period that the more remote portions of the township were settled.

Among those who settled in 1852, were, T. W. Peirce, who bought his claim of a Mr. Lowell in October of that year, and has since resided in this town on the original claim. He effected a settlement with the government by which he was allowed to remain. His house, on section 5, west of Lake Calhoun, was the only one to be seen, at that time, between Berry's, west of him, and that of J. H. Stevens, then located near the present suspension bridge. F. X. Cripeau, made his claim at a very early date, and entered it as soon as the land came into market. This was on section 16, just west of the present limits of the city, where he has since lived. Robert Blaisdell and son Robert, made claims in 1852, where they now live. J. T. Blaisdell located on the north-east quarter of section 31. Others who located in that year were, George Parks, Gordon Jackins, Edgar Folsom, Nathan Roberts, Simon Odell, and Titus Pettijohn. Eli Pettijohn had a claim near the Fort Snelling road, but never lived on it. Charles Brown took a claim through the aid of Captain John Rollins, in section 1, and Frank Rollins had a claim near by. Benjamin Parker located where the Gilmore Furniture Factory now stands, and William Richardson, on sections 10 and 11. He afterward removed to Meeker county, where, several years ago, he shot his wife, but not fatally, and then shot himself with fatal effect. Sweet W. Case located a claim in 1852, and a widow lady, Mrs. Sayer, made a claim shortly after. Deacon John S. Mann, located the north-east quarter of section 9, and in 1857 sold it to John Potts Brown. It is now a part of the Lyndale Farm. Deacon Mann removed to southern Minnesota, and to Iowa, shortly after selling his claim, and is now the owner of a large stock ranche near Mandan, Dakota Territory.

Chandler Hutchins made a claim on section 3, on what is now the west side of Chicago avenue. C. C. Garvey, located his claim on section 10, and has since resided there.

In 1852, Charles Gilpatrick, who is still living on a part of the original claim, made a selection of eighty acres in what is now section 35. During the summer of 1853, he broke one hundred and forty acres of land, for himself and others; this was the first large amount of breaking by one individual. In 1853, Martin Layman bought the claim taken by Hanscom, and it is stated that he and Mr. Gilpatrick, raised, in 1854, the largest crops in the township. Ard Godfrey, who had resided in Saint Anthony since 1849, made his claim in 1853, on Minne-ha-ha creek. During the year he built a saw-mill, the first in the township, which he operated for a number of years. It was destroyed by fire in 1863. Rev. J. Cressy made, late in the fall of 1852, a claim of the north-west quarter of section 10, south-east of Lake Calhoun, and after holding it two years sold to one Perkins, and went to Hastings, near where he made another claim. He returned to Minneapolis, and resides in the city. The original claim is now the farm of H. Van Nest.

W. G. Moffett came to Fort Snelling in 1849, and in 1852, made a claim on section 7 near Minne-ha-ha Falls; this is now owned by Joseph Dean. His oldest son, W. R. Moffett came in 1852, and located his claim on section 7, where he still resides. Judge Moffett, died about four years ago, at the house of his son-in-law, A. S. Adams, with whom the widow still lives. He was buried in Lakewood cemetery.

The western and northern portions of the township were not permanently settled until a later period. Although not included in the military reservation, land in that part of the town was not considered so desirable, and the rush for locations was not so great. Among the first were the Hallaron brothers, William Byrnes, Thomas Gaffney, Peter Curley, John Green, Frank and John Doyle, and John and Daniel Brackins, the latter with their parents. The Hallarons were from Cortland county, New York, and settled in the western part of the town. The first of these, was Patrick, who came in the fall of 1852. He died from injuries received by the kick of a horse, in 1877. His widow still occupies the homestead on section 29. John J. Dennis, Michael, Eugene, Thomas and Jeremiah Halloran arrived in 1854. They are all living in that portion of the town where they first settled, with the exception of Thomas, who has been in business in the city for the past five years. Of the Doyle brothers, John died about ten years ago, and Frank still resides on the farm on section 33. The south-west part of the town was settled in 1854 by H. H. Hopkins, George M. Burns and F. H. Warneke. Hopkins and Warneke still reside here. Burns died about three years ago; his family still live on the farm. John Hannan and sons, settled in the west part of the township in 1855. From the time the reservation was thrown open to settlers, the growth of the township was rapid; more substantial farm houses and their necessary adjuncts, barns and granaries, took the place of the hastily constructed "claim shanties" which had served their purpose, and were no longer needed. The proximity to Saint Anthony and later, to Minneapolis, the only markets, made locations in this township, and Richfield on the south, eagerly sought for, and speculation in claims was rife, fabulous sums being asked for the more desirable.

ORGANIZATION.

The first meeting for the organization of the township and the election of officers was held May 14th, 1858. The first officers elected were: Supervisors, R. P. Russell, chairman, G. D. Richardson, Daniel Bassett, Edward Murphy, I. I. Lewis; Clerk, George H. Hamilton; Assessor, L. F. Cook; Collector, L. W. Rhine; Overseer of Poor, Washington Getchell; Justices, George E. Huy and Henry Hill; Constables, C. C. Beekman and A. P. Hoover; Overseer of Roads, A. B. Kingsbury. At a special election October 2d, 1858, Daniel Bassett, G. D. Richardson, Cyrus Aldrich, and M. S. Hoblitt were elected to seats on the Board of County Commissioners. Following is given a list of the chairman of the Board of Town Supervisors, in the order in which they served: For 1859, Cyrus Aldrich; 1860, Daniel Bassett; 1861, Collins Hamer; 1862 to 1866, inclusive, S. H. Mattison; 1866 to 1873, inclusive, Benjamin Parker; 1874 to 1876, inclusive, E. Groesbeck; 1877 to 1880, inclusive, R. P. Russell. The other officers for 1880 were: Supervisors, U. P. Wilson and C. L. Larpenteur; Clerk, A. D. Libby; Treasurer, J. T. Grimes; Justices, A. S. Adams and E. Yost; Constable, William Somers. The boundaries of the township, as established by the Board of County Commissioners, April 10th, 1858, were as follows: "Beginning at a point on the Mississippi River, at the south line of section 12, township 118 north, of range 21 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence west to the southwest corner of section 7; thence south, to the southwest corner of section 7, township 117 north, of range 21 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence east to the Mississippi River; thence up said river to the place of beginning." July 8th, 1858, one tier of sections, on the north, was taken to form part of the town of Farmersville. This town, however, was never organized, and the boundaries of Minneapolis remained as originally established until 1860, when two tiers of sections on the north were made a part of Crystal Lake township.

No more changes in boundaries occurred until 1867, when the two northern tiers of sections of the town of Richfield, and that portion lying north of Minne-ha-ha creek, below Rice Lake (then called Eagle Lake) were added to Minneapolis. The legislative bill providing for this change of boundary, was approved March 7th, 1867. An effort was made in the spring of 1868 to restore this territory to Richfield; but at the annual town meeting in Minneapolis, only one vote was cast in favor of the measure. A bill approved February 6th, 1867, in which was defined the boundaries of the city of Minneapolis, gave to the territory embraced in the township outside the city, the name of Brighton. This name did not suit the people at all, and the bill above mentioned as annexing the portion of Richfield, restored the name, Minneapolis. The following statistics from the reports of the Assessor of the township for the years given, serve to show the rapid increase in values and in population. In 1869, the assessed valuation of real estate was $266,285; in 1875, $1,466,376; in 1880, $2,559,744. In addition to this valuation, there was in 1880, a valuation of $951,582, for town lots, outside of the city limits. The number of acres of land in 1880, was given at 24,602. The valuation of personal property in 1869, was, $61,262; in 1875, $167,828; in 1880, $262,419. Number of horses, over two years old, in 1869, 319; in 1875, 531; in 1880, 700. Number of cattle over two years old, in 1869, 719; in 1875, 1,134; in 1880, 1,292. Number of sheep, in 1869, 387; in 1875, 576; in 1880, 460. Number of hogs, in 1869, 154; in 1875, 211; in 1880, 549. Bushels of wheat, in 1869, 41,399; in 1875, 23,703; number of acres sown in 1880, 2,763. The amount of taxes for the township, was in 1869, $8,935; in 1875, $21,990; in 1880, $27,995. According to the census of 1880, the township has a population of 2,757.

SCHOOLS.

The first school in the township, was opened in the summer of 1853, and Miss Jennie Leaming taught a three month's term. The building used, was located on section 7, near Minne-ha-ha Falls, and was erected by W. G. Moffett and son and the Blaisdells, assisted by a few of their neighbors. The material for the building and the ground on which it stood, were provided by Philander Prescott. Although built by private parties, and with their own funds, it was made a public school, and all who wished, could avail themselves of its privileges. Mr. Prescott also furnished a large part of the money to pay the teacher. This building was used for a number of years, and was twice moved for the better accommodation of the scholars. In 1875, the present frame building, was erected near the site of the old school-house, on the north-west quarter of section 7, on the west side of Minne-ha-ha Avenue. This is now district No. 113. Another of the early school-houses, was located on what is now Chicago Avenue, just outside the city limits. It was built of brick, and used for some time, but on account of a division of the districts, it was abandoned and subsequently, torn down. The township now has eight entire and five joint districts, with twelve school-houses. The "Centennial School" located near the Harvester Works, is a very fine building, of brick and two-stories high. District number 9, about one mile north-west of the Centennial, has a one-story stone building. The remaining districts have good substantial frame houses, and are all supplied with the necessary apparatus used in the modern district school.

TOWN HALL.

Since the organization of the township, the annual and special town meetings have been held in school-houses; but in 1880, the increase in population, demanding a fixed place, in a central location, the town erected a "Town Hall," on the north-east quarter of section 4, the lot occupied, being one of the Lyndale Park. This is a very neat frame building, and a credit to the town.

CLARK CHAPEL.

The only church edifice in the township, is located in the southern part on section 7. It was erected in 1878, as a branch of Plymouth church, Minneapolis, at a total expense for building and furnishing, of about $1,100, means being supplied by subscription among the people of the vicinity. It is in size, 30x18 feet and is nicely furnished. The name was given in honor of E. C. Clark, who established and maintained a Sabbath-school in the school-house opposite the church. Mr. Clark died in 1871, and the Sabbath school has since been kept up, and now has an average attendance of about sixty. Mr. G. B. Shepard of Minneapolis is the superintendent. There is no church organization, but services were held regularly once a month during the time Plymouth church was supplied with a pastor, and since then occasionally. The people of the neighborhood meet every Sunday evening for Bible readings.

HOPKINS STATION.

This is a station on the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway, and was established in 1871. It takes its name from H. H. Hopkins, one of the prominent farmers. The post-office, located at the depot is called Hopkins, and was established in 1873. H. H. Hopkins has been postmaster since. This is the only post-office in the township outside of the city. The Minnetonka branch of the M. & St. L. Railway leaves the main line here, and the Benton cut-off of the C. M. & St. P. Railway passes near. There are no stores or public buildings.

South Minneapolis, is a station on the C. M. & St. P. Railway located one mile south of the city limits. This is merely a way station and has no post-office.

SUMMER RESORTS.

The great beauty of the lakes of this township, and the facility with which they may be reached from the city, make them peculiarly attractive to the tourist, and to the business man, who with his family seeks recreation and freedom from the perplexities of commercial or professional life, by whiling away a few hours, or days, at some of the charming spots to be found within an hour's ride of the city. Lake Calhoun, the largest of the lakes, is connected with the city by means of the Minneapolis, Lyndale and Lake Calhoun Railway, which was built in the spring of 1879, and during the following year extended to Lake Harriet. On the east of Lake Calhoun is Lyndale Park, and the Pavillion, a large public building, erected by Col. W. S. King, and opened in 1877. The dimensions of the building are 60x100 feet, and two stories high above basement. Two wide verandas extend entirely around the structure, and furnish excellent promenades, with a fine view of the lake and the surrounding country. On the west side of this lake is Lakeside Park and hotel. The latter is 40x70 feet, and two stories in height. On an eminence in the grounds of Lakeside Park is located a tower, which rises to the height of sixty feet, and they who toil to its summit are amply repaid by a view of the beautiful panorama of nature around and below them. On the west side are also located several mineral springs, one of which has been curbed, and its surroundings improved, and has become quite popular with the public. A sulphur spring is located a short distance southwest of the lake, but has not yet been developed or improved. The Lake Calhoun House was built on the north shore of the lake in 1876, and was intended for a summer hotel. It was one of the finest structures on the lake, but had never been used to any extent up to the time it was destroyed by fire, in January, 1880. The Lake View House is located on the northeast shore of the lake, and was built in 1875. A large and elegant steamer was placed on Lake Calhoun in the summer of 1880, and is run during the season in connection with the Motor railway, making a tour of the lake. The present terminus of the railway is at Lake Harriet, but the intention is to extend it to Excelsior. On the southwest shore of Cedar Lake is located the Oak Grove House, erected in 1877, by the Rev. Mr. Scott. The building is about seventy-five feet square and four stories in height, surmounted by a cupola, from which an extended view, including part of the city of Minneapolis, may be obtained. The hotels and parks above mentioned are open to the public through the summer season, and during that time are well patronized, as may be seen from the fact that, in the summer of 1880, the Lyndale Railway carried over one hundred thousand passengers.

Oswald's summer garden, situated on the Cedar Lake road and west of the city limits, was located and improvements begun in 1875. With its attractive drives, walks, and rustic decorations, it makes a pleasant place of resort. Connected with it is a green-house, 12x32 feet, containing four thousand plants.

THE LYNDALE FARM.

This model farm, which now embraces about one thousand two hundred acres, was opened by Col. W. S. King, who began operations by purchasing the farm of John Potts Brown. He added by purchase, one farm after another, until in 1870, he had acquired a title to one thousand two hundred acres of land. About seven hundred acres of this has been broken, and some of it seeded to tame grasses. The farm was originally half timber and half prairie land. The location is excellent, bordering on the shores of Lakes Calhoun and Harriet, and distant from the city about three miles. The farm-house, built in 1870, is a double house, having a front of ninety-six feet, and a depth of forty feet, and is two-stories high. It contains twenty-six rooms, and is well finished through-out. The great barn is built on the most modern plan. Its main part is 52x76 feet, and thirty-six feet from the foundation to the eaves. The roof adds twenty feet to the height, and above all, is the cupola, the top of which is eighty feet from the ground. The two wings of the barn are 36x180 feet, with sixteen foot posts, and high roof, which affords immense storing room, the total capacity being about two hundred and fifty tons of hay. The stables furnish accommodations for two hundred horses and cattle. The farm was stocked with a large number of blooded cattle, horses, sheep and hogs, among them, some of the most noted animals of Great Britain, which had taken premiums at the national fairs held there; among the horses was the celebrated stallion "Duke of Saratoga" a descendant of "Bashaw" and described by horse-men as a very fine animal. Since 1876, James Smith, of long experience in the management of large farms, has been in charge.

CEMETERIES.

The township has four cemeteries: the Lakewood, Cemetery of the Immaculate Conception, the Montefiore and the Minneapolis Cemetery. Lakewood cemetery is situated on the south-east shore of Lake Calhoun, and contains about 140 acres of land. The grounds were purchased in 1871, by an association, formed for the purpose, and the improvements were begun the following year, and have been continued until this cemetery ranks with the more beautiful homes of the dead in the country.

The cemetery of the Immaculate Conception, is located on the south line of the township, one mile west of Rice Lake. It contains about thirty acres, and was established in 1867. This is the only cemetery of the Catholic faith in the township, and is under the immediate supervision of Owen Finley.

The Montefiore cemetery located on section 10, about two and one-half miles south of the city limits, contains two acres, and was purchased by the Montefiore Cemetery Association, in 1876. The improvement of the grounds was commenced but recently.

The Minneapolis cemetery is located south of and near the city limits. It embraces twenty acres of high, dry land, and was laid out in 1860, by Martin Layman, by whom it is still owned. The first interment, was that of a Mrs. Wardwell, since which there have been five thousand interments in this "silent city." This cemetery has received extra attention and shows care and taste in the arrangement of its ornamentations. This was the first cemetery established on the west side of the river.

INDUSTRIES AND MANUFACTURES.

The principal industry of the people of this town is agriculture. The excellent quality of the soil making it a favored locality, and the many fine farms, with their commodious outbuildings, are evidence of a high degree of thrift and prosperity. An important adjunct of the usual farm products is milk, for the population of the city looks to the farmer in the vicinity for its daily supply of that necessary article. There are a number of large dairies, employing a small army of men and teams in the transportation and delivery.

The Globe Mill, on Minne-ha-ha Creek, in section 20, was built in 1871, by W. P. Day and Co. This is the only merchant mill in the township. It is a frame structure, with four runs of stone, and a capacity of 125 barrels per day. When first put in operation, water power was used; this proving inadequate, a steam engine was added, which now furnishes the power. The mill is the property of the First National Bank, of Minneapolis. A side-track extends to it from the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad, affording facilities for receiving and shipping.

On the north side of Minne-ha-ha Creek, in the south-eastern part of the township, is located a grist-mill, which was erected in 1857, by Ard, Godfrey, near the saw-mill which burned in 1863. This mill was operated by Mr. Godfrey until 1870, and then sold to other parties.

There are two brick-yards in the town: one owned and operated by W. W. Woodward, about one mile north of Hopkins Station, and one situated north-west of Lake Calhoun, owned by G. U. Erhardt. These yards employ a large force of men during the summer season and manufacture a superior quality of brick.

The Minneapolis Knitting Mills. This concern was established on Bassett's creek, in the north part of the town, in 1875. For one year previous they had been located in the city. The factory was destroyed by fire in 1878, and they immediately rebuilt on the present site. The business consists of knitting stockings and half-hose, in both wool and cotton; large and small scarfs, cardigan jackets, ladies vests, hoods, and all kinds of knit goods. This is the only establishment of the kind in the north-west, and their goods find a ready market. The proprietors are Girling and Company, and twenty-five persons are employed.

W. H. Fruen, machinist, manufacturer of the Minneapolis water-wheel governor, special tools for machinists, lathes, etc. This establishment is located on Bassett's creek at the second crossing of Western Avenue, in the building erected by the North-Western Manufacturing Company in 1871. This company continued business four years, engaged in the manufacture of screws, their capacity being a hundred gross per day. Since then Mr. Fruen has occupied the building, which is 30x10 feet, and two and one-half stories high. The machinery is kept in motion by a thirty-five inch turbine wheel, of sixteen horsepower.

The Minneapolis Harvester Works, south of the city limits, are located in the township, but as the corporation was organized in the city and business offices are located there, a description of the Works, will be found in the chapter on manufactures.

In 1871, he came to America, and for five years had charge of a stock farm on Long Island, then of the Thorndall farm in Dutchess county, New York, two years, and in the spring of 1876, took possession of the Lyndale farm, where he now resides; this place has the finest barn in Minnesota. Mr. Smith raises the celebrated Jersey cattle, Berkshire swine, Norman horses and Cotswold and Lincoln sheep, all from imported stock; at the late fair, he received seven first-class premiums amounting to over $500. Mr. Smith's wife was Margaret McVicar, of Scotland, they were married in 1860. Five children have been born to them.

Nils Smith, a native of Denmark, was born August 17th, 1847. He came to America in 1864; located at Minneapolis, and for three years worked on a farm; he then engaged in the dairy business for himself; in 1875, having thirty-five cows, he sold a half interest and in 1877, sold the remainder. In the spring of 1880, he started again with thirty-two cows and now has thirty-eight. He owns ten acres of land on section 1, and forty acres on section 29. In October, 1875, he married Hanne Hansen, who has borne him two children: Soren and Hanne.

Captain John Tapper, a native of England, was born in Dorsetshire, on the 25th of March, 1820. He emigrated to America in 1840, and spent the first summer in St. Louis. In the fall he went to Fort Atkinson, Iowa, remained one and one-half years, then went to Fort Crawford, Wisconsin, and lived until the autumn of 1844, when he removed to Fort Snelling. At the beginning of the Mexican war he went to Mexico, with Dr. George Turner, of the United States Army, and remained with him until the close of the war, when they returned together to Fort Snelling, and Mr. Tapper engaged with Franklin Steele. He was at the Fort something over a year; then came to St. Anthony, and managed Steele's boarding-house one season; then took charge of the ferry, and afterward of the first suspension bridge. In 1862 he removed to Iowa, and engaged in farming. He returned in the winter of 1880-81, and located on a farm belonging to the Steele estate, near Minnehaha Falls. On the 8th of August, 1853, he married Matilda Stinson, of Minneapolis. This was the first marriage which occurred on the west side. Five children have been born to them: Rosie E., Frank H., Willie D., Mary M., and Jesse B. The first four were born on Nicollet Island, the last one in Iowa.

L. Tillyen was born in Plymouth, England, in 1831. When a babe he came with his parents to America, and lived in Vermont until March, 1854, when he went to California, where he was engaged in mining and the dairy business until 1860. He then removed to Wisconsin, and in the fall of 1863 came to Minneapolis, and purchased the farm he still owns, on sections 6 and 7. He is a breeder of the celebrated Norman and Clyde horses, from imported stock. Mr. Tillyen was married, in 1858, to Lydia Stanton.

Hiram Van Nest was born in 1831, near Sandusky, Ohio. In early life he moved to Illinois with his parents, and when twenty years of age came to Minneapolis. He attended the first election held on the west side of the river, and, November 27th, 1854, he had placed on record the first warranty deed in Hennepin county. It was Mr. Van Nest who cleared the road from the point where it leaves Lake Calhoun to Minne-ha-ha Creek near the Goodrich farm. In 1861 he married Rachel Blaisdell. They have two children living. His farm of 120 acres is on section 10. He raises short-horn cattle, Lincoln and Southdown sheep, and Berkshire swine, from imported stock.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—EARLY SETTLEMENT—

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The township of St. Anthony, formerly embraced a much larger portion of territory than at present, and with somewhat indefinite boundaries. Until the year of 1848, it was included in the Territorial limits of Wisconsin, from which it was separated by the boundary lines established with the admission of Wisconsin as a State. The whole territory then known as St. Croix county, was, by the newly established bounds, practically without a local government until the territorial organization of Minnesota, in 1849, when the county of St. Croix was divided into Washington and Ramsey counties. St. Anthony remained a part of Ramsey county until 1856, when by a special act of the Territorial legislature, the boundaries of Hennepin county were extended across the Mississippi river. The original bill included a strip about two miles wide, east of the present limits, which was modified by a joint resolution, fixing the eastern boundary one mile east of its present location, and running south to the line between townships

28 and 29, thence due west to the river. This arrangement was never wholly satisfactory, and during the session of 1861, a legislative act approved March 9th, fixed the boundaries of the township as follows: "Commencing on the north line of township 29, range 24, on the Mississippi river, thence due east to a point between sections 5 and 6, township 29, range 23, thence due south on the section line to the Mississippi river, thence up said river to the place of beginning." From the territory included in this description a portion embracing several sections was, March 3d, 1855, carved out for the corporate limits of the city of St. Anthony, leaving the town an ell-shaped tract of about ten sections lying principally north and east of the city. North of the city limits and along the river is wild meadow land, merging into a narrow belt of prairie which is skirted by light timber, perhaps better known as brush-land. The latter is hilly, particularly in the north-west. The soil in the timbered portion is black loam, with clay sub-soil, while the prairie is light sandy loam. There are no large bodies of water in this township. Sandy Lake, in the north-west is a small marshy lake. Bridal-Veil Falls, on the bank of the Mississippi just below the city, are very beautiful. A small creek which rises in Ramsey county, here leaps into the river over a precipice, with a sheer descent of about sixty feet. The name originated from the supposed resemblance to the veil of a bride.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the fall of 1850, N. O. Phillips and L. C. Timpson made claims on the north-west quarter of section 6, and moved to them the following spring. A little latter, Lewis Stone, and his sons Jacob and Leonard, located on sections 6 and 7, and were followed by Mr. Finch, who took a claim on the south-east quarter of section 6. Previous to these actual settlers, several parties living in St. Anthony made claims in the north-west part of the town. William Dugas, lived on his a number of years and ran a ferry across the Mississippi. He now resides in the town of Dayton. Washington Getchell had a claim on the south-west quarter of section 3, which he sold to Edward Patch. Mr. Phillips still lives on his claim. He was appointed town clerk, October 20th, 1862, and has held the office without interruption until the present time. Mr. Timpson lived on his claim until 1862, when he entered the army. He was a prisoner at Andersonville, and died of ill-treatment received there. He was exchanged, but his death occurred before he could reach the union lines. His widow died in Minneapolis, in August, 1878. Mr. Stone Sr., resided on his claim about fifteen years, then went up to the Platte river where he erected a flouring mill. He subsequently went to Pike's Peak and there died. His son Jacob also moved with his family to Pike's Peak and died there. The son Leonard is now in California. Mr. Finch lived on his claim a few years, then moved to the city, where he died some years ago. Chas. Estes settled on section 2, in 1853, and Elijah Grindall located on section 1, the following year. Estes still resides in the township and Grindall died in 1872. His son Olin conducts the farm. M. F. Kletzlin settled on section 12, in 1856, and still resides here. Louis Kampff came in 1857, and has since been engaged in the manufacture of pottery. The early history of this town is closely allied to that of the city of St. Anthony, and in the chapter on the city will be found the incidents connected with its history.

SCHOOLS.

The first school-house erected in the township, outside the city, was located on the north-west quarter of section 2, and was built in 1858. It was a frame structure, about 21 x 30 feet, and one story high. The district then included all of the township west of the Sandy Lake road, and is now known as district number one. The house was subsequently moved to its present location on the river road, in the north-west quarter of section 10. The second school-house was built in 1859, on the south-east quarter of section 7, in district number two. The house was a frame, 20 x 30 feet, and located on section 6. In 1861, this district was divided, giving the township three districts, the present number. The buildings belonging to districts two and three are good frame structures, and furnished with patent seats and desks. In district number one the old house is still in use.

ORGANIZATION.

The township of Saint Anthony was organized May 11th, 1858, and at the meeting held for that purpose, David Heaton was chosen chairman, D. A. Secombe moderator, and Thomas T. Newell clerk. The election for town officers was held the same day, and after the polls were closed, Mr. Secombe resigned as moderator, and D. S. B. Johnston was chosen in his place. The votes were then canvassed, with the following result: Supervisors, J. B. Gilbert, chairman, J. C. Tufts, and Richard Fewer; Clerk, D. M. Demmon; Assessor, J. A. Lemon; Collector, J. W. Ellis; Overseer of Poor, James Holmes; Justices of the Peace, Solon Armstrong and Anthony Grethen; Constables, L. C. Johnson and Albert Gowen; Overseer of Roads, Moses Whittier. The first meeting held separate from the city of St. Anthony was on April 3d, 1860, at the Mississippi House, north of the city on the river road. The officers elected were: Supervisors, L. C. Timpson, chairman, Edward Patch, and G. W. Buckmore; Clerk, and Superintendent of Schools, G. F. Cross; Treasurer, D. D. Moore; Assessor, E. W. Grindall; Justices, Stephen Cobb and Joseph Hawes, Jr.; Constables, J. E. Philbrook and John Rank. Following is a list of chairmen of the Town Board, and the years for which they were elected: In 1861-2, G. F. Cross; 1863, Stephen Cobb; 1864 to 1872, inclusive, W. H. Cole; 1873, Joseph Ingerhutt; 1874, A. H. Weeks; 1875 to 1879, inclusive, Edwin Cooley; 1880, J. B.

Eustis. The present officers are: Supervisors, J. B. Eustis, chairman, J. G. Swalin, and M. F. Kletzin; Clerk, N. O. Phillips; Treasurer, L. Kampff; Assessor, C. Lennahan; Justices, Edwin Cooley and S. M. Moore; Constable, Cornelius Lennahan.

STATISTICAL.

The township has an area of 5,497 acres, the assessed valuation of which, was in 1869, $3,-885; in 1875, $219,335; in 1880, $400,449. There are also town lots, not included in the city limits, valued at $89,690. The valuation of personal property, was in 1869, $12,240; in 1875, $18,942; in 1880, $33,786. Number of horses over two years old, in 1869, 82; in 1875, 98; in 1880, 132. Number of cattle over two years old, in 1869, 211; in 1875, 227; in 1880, 239. Number of sheep in 1869, 36; in 1875, 38; in 1880, 28. Number of hogs in 1869, 34; in 1875, 146; in 1880, 405. Total amount of taxes for 1869, $1,699; for 1875, $2,-291; for 1880, $5,962. In 1869, the production of wheat amounted to 6,553 bushels; in 1875, to 3,638 bushels; in 1880, 610 acres were sown to that cereal. The population of the township is 485, according to the last census.

CEMETERIES.

Maple Hill Cemetery is located in the south-west corner of section 6, one mile north of the city limits, and has been in use since 1852, in which year it was established by R. W. Cummings.

The Catholic Cemetery was established about 1857. It contains sixteen acres, and is located on the north-east quarter of section 11, one mile north of the city limits.

MANUFACTURES.

In August 1857, Louis Kampff located on section 10, on the river road, and at once began the manufacture of pottery. His first building was a log shanty about 16x20 feet. In 1860, he erected a new building, of stone, 20x30 feet, two-stories high. Additions have been made from time to time, as increasing business demanded, and he now has a large establishment with an annual business of from four to five thousand dollars.

The Minnesota Rendering and Fertilizing Company, began business in the spring of 1877, under the firm name of F. M. Upham and Company. January 1880, William Wyman became a partner, and the present name was adopted. Their rendering works were first located on Bridal Veil creek, a few rods above the falls, but in 1880, new buildings were erected in the south-east part of the township, near Meeker's Island, and the machinery moved there. The main building is 50x100 feet, three stories high, with an engine room on the east, 28x40, and an addition on the west, 25x30; also a blacksmith shop, 25x30, and a barn 60x80. This company have an abattoir located on the flats near Saint Paul, with a capacity for killing two hundred cattle and five hundred hogs per day. At the rendering establishment twenty-one persons are employed. The business offices are at number 11, First street north, Minneapolis, and 64, East Seventh street, Saint Paul.

NURSERY.

The Summit Nursery was established on section 12, about 1862, by Thomas Moulton, and contains nearly thirty acres. This nursery is well stocked with fruit trees and shrubbery adapted to this climate.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Adam Burg, a native of Germany, was born in 1826, at the village of Moetsch. He attended school until twelve years of age, and afterward worked on a farm. In 1852 he emigrated with his father to the United States. He resided in Chicago three years. In 1855 he came to Minnesota, settled at St. Anthony, and has since been a permanent resident of Hennepin county. His wife was Therese Kohler. Their marriage occurred in 1866. He located at Anoka, and helped build the first mill-dam at that place. He eventually came to St. Anthony, which is still his home. His father is living with him—a vigorous old gentleman, eighty-seven years of age. Charles Estes enlisted in the Ninth Minnesota Infantry, and served three years. He is one of the old settlers, and has a fine place. The first brick made in this county were manufactured on his farm. His wife

He was an energetic farmer, and served as County Commissioner several terms. His death occurred in 1872. Mrs. Grindall and her youngest son, Olin, live at the farm.

He attended school until sixteen years of age, and was employed in farming from that time until 1844, when he emigrated with his parents to America. He resided in Warren county, Missouri, until 1850; then spent three years in California, where he met with considerable success in mining. He came to Minnesota, and purchased a farm in Ramsey county. Lived there until he settled in this county, in 1872. His marriage with Lisetta Dothage occurred in 1853. They have ten children. Two of the sons are proprietors of the Edgewood Dairy.

Louis Kampff was born in Hanover, North Germany, in 1828. M. F. Kletz in was born in North Prussia, in 1830. In 1852, he came to America and located at Lockport, New York, where he was engaged in gardening until 1856, when he came to St. Anthony, and resided in the city till 1865, then located on the place where he now lives. He has made gardening a successful business. Married in 1861, Johanna Sandhoff, who has borne him two children, but one of whom is living.

John Oberlies, a native of Germany, was born in 1831. At the age of fourteen, he began an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, and in 1853, came to America. He lived in Pennsylvania five years, then came to this county, and has since resided in the town of St. Anthony. He was among the first carpenters who worked in Minneapolis. His wife was Miss Katherine Kessler, whom he married in 1854. They have had eight children, of whom five are living.

Nathan O. Phillips, one of the oldest settlers of St. Anthony township, was born in Windham county, Vermont, in 1822. He attended the public schools, until the age of eighteen, and was also engaged in the occupations of farmer and carriage builder. In 1844, he went to Boston, Massachusetts, and found employment in a wholesale paper establishment, where he remained about six years, and in 1850, came to St. Anthony. Waterfalls have always borne magic with them. It sparkles in their spray and shines in their rainbows. Fairy stories are based on legends of mountain cascades, and good or bad spirits were in ancient times supposed to hover around them to influence the lives of visitors. Waverly has peopled the crags and glens of old Scotland with spirits wherever a well or waterfall was to be found. The poor Indian whose imagination could not extend so far, looked at the "Ka-ka-bi-ka Irara" as the abode of his Manitou. Jonathan Carver writes that, on his first visit to the falls, which happened about 1767, he was accompanied by a chief of the Winnebagoes. He says: "The Prince had no sooner gained the point that overlooked this wonderful cascade than he began with an audible voice to address the Great Spirit, one of whose places of residence he imagined this to be. He told Him that he had traveled a long way to pay his adorations to Him, and now would make Him the best offering in his power. He, accordingly, first threw his pipe into the stream, then the roll that contained his tobacco; after these the bracelets he wore upon his arms and wrists; next an ornament that encircled his neck and the earrings from his ears. In short, he presented to his God every part of his dress that was valuable. During this time he frequently smote his breast with great violence, threw his arms about, and appeared to be much afflicted. All this while he continued his adorations, and at length concluded them with fervent petitions that the Great Spirit would constantly afford us protection on our travels, giving us a bright sun, a blue sky and clear untroubled waters. Nor would he leave until we had smoked together, with my pipe, in honor of the Great Spirit." The white man, who has usurped both hunting-ground and water-fall, worshiped money more than the God of Nature, and looked to the precious yellow metal to cure every disease and afford him both comfort and protection. He did not, like the Indian, fall down and worship the spirit of the falls; still, after admiring the beauty, he proceeded with lead and line to take its measurement, estimate its capacity to drive machinery, take its geographical situation with reference to commercial centres, and with mathematical estimates speculate on its future value. The Indian and his romantic visions have passed away, and his Manitou has been forever dethroned. The falls themselves have covered their natural charms in answer to the behest of knowledge and progress. The new divinity, that has taken the abode of the Indian's Manitou, in obedience to the custom established when knowledge first crept into the Garden of Eden, is in one sense a god. The element of power, at least, remains; that element which to most men is the important attribute of Deity, to which in their view, knowledge, justice and goodness are subordinate. This, with almost absolute sway, has determined the site of a great city, has compelled capital to come from afar to develop the resources of the great North-west, has gathered a population of fifty thousand people as devotees in its immediate vicinity, and more than twenty thousand more of farmers and smaller merchants to feed the central industry. No wand of fairy queen or "nod" of Indian Manitou was ever known to produce such a result. It is the purpose of this history to trace the development from the first.

In the year 1836, a territory existed in the North-west, called Wisconsin, organized that year, and including within its bounds, in addition to what is now Wisconsin, part of the upper peninsula of Michigan, the whole of Minnesota and Iowa, and that part of Dakota lying east of the Missouri and White Earth rivers. At the intersection of the Mississippi river and the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, the waters of the mighty river poured over precipitous rocks, forming a beautiful water-fall, which had been described by many explorers as picturesque, and possibly of great value in the future. Such reports had prevailed for one hundred and fifty years, without eliciting general attention.

Major Plympton, of the 5th United States Infantry, successor of Major Bliss in command at Fort Snelling, and others, made a claim at St. Anthony Falls, in 1836, and built a log house. In 1837, Sergeant Carpenter, of Company A of the same regiment, stationed at the Fort, made a claim adjoining that of Major Plympton, et al., on the north. In the summer of 1838, Franklin Steele appears as an interested partner in the claim of Major Plympton. Mr. Steele first arrived at Fort Snelling in 1837, as will appear in his biography, but though it would appear that from the first he purposed to secure the claim at the falls, still he waited the proper time to arrive, and in the meantime became interested in business at the Falls of St. Croix. The circumstances attending his pre-emption are as follows:

The steamer Burlington, Captain Throckmorton, arrived at Fort Snelling June 13th, 1838, having on board Franklin Steele, who had been spending the winter at Washington, P. F. Baker, a trader located near Fort Snelling, Captain Maryatt of the British navy, and General Atkinson, U. S. A. The next day the whole party rode out to the Falls of St. Anthony. Five days after this, the steamboat Ariel arrived from St. Louis, and a Mr. Beebe, one of the passengers, announced the rumor that the United States Senate had ratified the treaty with the Indians, by virtue of which the lands between the St. Croix and the Mississippi were ceded to the United States. It was not, however, till the 15th of July, that the official notice was brought by the steamer Palmyra. The first report created much interest among the aspirants for claims in the newly acquired territory, but the confirmation led to decided action.

It is said that in June, 1838, and, if this be a correct date, before the official notice was received, Franklin Steele and Captain L. Scott, of the Fifth U. S. Infantry, set out post haste for the Falls of St. Anthony, each anxious to secure the best claim, including the falls. Captain Scott came up on the west side of the river, but was unable to cross, while Mr. Steele, who took the east bank, in company with assistants, was able to make a shanty ready to entertain his friends from the Fort when they made the detour necessary to join him on the opposite bank.

In reply to the allegation of Scott that the claim had been previously occupied by him in company with others, Mr. Steele answered, that their claim was void, for two reasons; first, because made before the ratification of the treaty, and, secondly, because of the incapacity of the claimants to pre-empt land while holding military offices under the government.

This claim continued to be known for some time as the claim of Major Plympton and others. An old voyageur, named La Grue, was placed in charge, occupying a log house opposite the falls, and until 1839 took care of the claim. His stewardship ended in a tragical manner. Owing to the distance of supplies and the semi-barbarous method of subsistence, of which hunting and fishing formed an important part, La Grue was frequently absent from home on a visit to the Fort or the government farm, to secure supplies, or on some hunting or fishing excursion. On returning from one of these, as he approached his hut, he saw from the high ground the smoking ruins of his cabin. Hurrying to the spot, he not only found everything burned, but the charred remains of his wife were also among the debris. The fire was supposed to be accidental, but no explanation could be obtained where none lived to explain. After grieving over his loss, he set out to go around by the island to cross the river and seek shelter at the government farm by the mill on the west side, but met a party of Chippewas, who had come down from the north to secure a few Dakota scalps. They received him at their camp, as night was coming on, and afforded him such comfort as they could give. La Grue after this left the country.

One Charles Landry, also a French voyageur, was next placed in charge of the claim by Mr. Steele. His irregularities were more blamable than those of La Grue, for, returning from a somewhat extended absence, he found his cabin occupied, guarded and barred against him by some intruder. An adventurer, named James Mink, knowing the irregularities of the steward, had "jumped" the claim in his absence, and as the intruder seemed prepared and disposed to maintain his position, Landry left him in possession and reported the outrage to Mr. Steele at the Fort.

Mr. Steele recovered his claim by purchase of Mink, paying him several hundred dollars, and Joseph Reaché was put in charge. He was a Canadian voyageur and came from the Fort bringing his wife, five sons and two daughters.

In 1838, two houses, one each side of the river, were the only dwellings in what is now Minneapolis. These were the old government house built in 1822, and the log house of Franklin Steele.

The Plympton claim was bounded on the north by a line beginning at a large cedar tree, situated on the east bank of the river, opposite where the "coffer dam" now is, thence at right angles to the river indefinitely. It will appear from this and following descriptions, that the boundaries of these first claims were usually undefined, except where claims adjoined, and it was long before their eastern boundaries were fixed at all, as claims were not made except on the river. The Mississippi formed the western boundary. The southern boundary was a line beginning at a point opposite the lower end of Spirit Island, thence easterly at right angles to the river indefinitely, as stated of the northern boundary.

The Carpenter claim, made as stated above, in 1837, was bounded on the south by the Plympton claim, west by the river; the northern and eastern bounds were left indefinite, the whole to contain about three hundred and twenty acres. These two claims embraced all the lands near the falls on the east side, esteemed valuable by claimants. November 8th, 1838, Sergeant Nathaniel Carpenter transferred to Private Thomas Brown, also of Company A, 5th United States Infantry, an undivided half of his claim, for twenty-five dollars, and a log house was built on the claim by the joint owners, situated near the river, at a place between what are now Third and Fourth Avenues north-east. The instrument by which this first transfer of real estate now included in the city of Minneapolis was made, describes the lands as in the county of Crawford and Territory of Wisconsin, and is dated at Fort Snelling, Iowa Territory, signed and sealed by Nathaniel Carpenter, in the presence of Geo. W. P. Leonard. Thomas Brown conveyed his interest, May 6th, 1840, to Peter Quinn, of St. Peter, Iowa Territory, by an instrument attached to the former deed, signed by his mark and witnessed by Norman W. Kittson. Peter Quinn sold the same, May 1st, 1845, to S. J. Findley and R. P. Russell. The last two transfers were very loosely made, without seal and without naming a consideration. Moreover, Quinn, who by deed had become entitled to an undivided half, after naming his interest adds in a parenthesis, "Half claim say north portion." Findley and Russell deeded, May 9th, 1846, to Pierre Bottineau. This deed describes the property as a certain tract of United States land in the Territory of Wisconsin, St. Croix county, on the Mississippi river, above the Falls of St. Anthony, etc., containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, and names the consideration, one hundred and fifty dollars. This instrument is in the handwriting of Joseph R. Brown, and is witnessed by Mr. Brown and P. Prescott. It is signed and sealed by Findley and Russell. Notes of the transfers of the property and private history of the family have been preserved by J. B. Bottineau, to whom we are indebted.

It appears from notes of J. B. Bottineau that a transfer of the undivided half interest remaining in Sergeant Carpenter, after his deed to private Brown, was made to other parties, and became the property of Mr. Bottineau in 1844. In 1842 or '43, Petit John made a claim south of Mr. Steele's claim. After this date Major Plympton ceased to be known in connection with the claim originally made by him. In 1845 Bottineau purchased of Petit John his claim which extended from Mr. Steele's claim south indefinitely on the river, but was recognized as including the lands now known as University lands.

Joseph Rondo made a claim in 1813, north of the Carpenter claim. The other boundaries were quite indefinite. He was aggressive and troublesome, and wanted to encroach on the Carpenter claim, especially on Boom Island.

Witnesses who established the line in 1838, were brought to prove the original bounds of the Carpenter claim on the north. A copy of his certificate is given:

"This is to certify that I helped James Mink to run certain lines on claims belonging to Mr. Mink now said claim belonging to Mr. F. Steele) and one belonging to Mr. Quinn, lying on the east side of the Mississippi river, near the Falls of Saint Anthony. I do hereby certify that the northern line of the claim now belonging to S. J. Findley and R. P. Russell was run by me, in the year 1838, then belonging to Mr. P. Quinn. The said line was marked to commence on a large elm tree, near the shore, above the small island in the Mississippi river opposite said claiming. The said northern line was marked according to law, the trees all in a line, running due north-east from the river, or from above said elm tree, were blazed on four sides, as well as could be done then. This is to certify that according to the way the above said northern line of said claim was drawn, that Joseph Rondo has no claim whatever to it; that said Rondo drew his line inside of the above said line, some two or three years after, September 9th, 1845.

BAPTIST SPENCE.

Witness, PETER HAYDEN."

While Rondo, who lived at Saint Paul, was absent from his claim, Mr. Bottineau with others, dragged his little claim cabin by a yoke of cattle, out a mile or more north, at such distance that they thought themselves safe from his encroachments.

In the fall of 1845, Rondo, finding his claim too far north, and his shanty having been removed to a distance, abandoned his claim altogether.

Now, the whole east side belonged to two men, Franklin Steele and Pierre Bottineau.

After this, Bottineau gave part of his claim to Louis Desjarlais, his brother-in-law. In the spring of 1845, Mr. Bottineau and Desjarlais moved on their claims from St. Paul. Mr. Bottineau had a family, consisting of a wife and three children. His two brothers, Severre and Charles, lived with him.

In 1845, the old Petit John house, south of the Steele claim, was occupied by Baptiste Turpin, a voyageur and half-breed, though the claim was still the property of Pierre Bottineau. Pascal and Sauverre St. Martin, Canadian Frenchmen, made a claim below the Petit John claim, which included a small portion of the southern part of the university land, extending indefinitely.

The total population of what is now Minneapolis consisted at this time of less than fifty souls, and these were scattered along the east side of the river guarding their own claims or those of their employers. One man, whom they called Old Maloney, lived at the government mill on the other side of the river, where he had been employed four or five years.

St. Anthony Falls, at this time, boasted only one shingled house, that belonging to Franklin Steele and occupied by Reach. The others were covered with elm bark or sod.

Navigation was undertaken in 1842, in a primitive way on the Upper Mississippi, above the Falls. The crafts used were a style called Mackinaw boats. These were keel-boats rigged for both rowing and sailing, manned by eight voyageurs and carried four tons burden, or eighty to one hundred packages. These packages were calculated in weight and form for convenient handling. In case a portage was reached, the voyageurs were required each to carry two of these at a load on their backs any distance required. The first package was swung on his own back by means of the strap used in carrying, by the voyageur himself; the second package was placed on top of this by his companions. The whole load was equal in weight to a barrel of flour. These boats were operated by Pierre Bottineau, in the employ of the American Fur Company, carrying supplies from St. Anthony Falls to Sauk Rapids and Little Rock. After experience it was found that these boats, on account of their keel, drew too much water to pass bars and shallows in the river during low water, and flat-boats of larger size were substituted, manned with twenty-two men and propelled by poles. These boats were employed in transporting goods to various points from St. Anthony Falls to Fort Ripley, for the American Fur Company and for the United States government; both military stores and Indian goods for the upper country.

Nicollet Island at this time was covered with magnificent maples, and three or four sugar camps were opened for successive years by the various families living near. The implements used were the very rudest. Birch-bark pans were used to catch the sap which flowed from a gash made by the Frenchman's ax. Kettles, swung from crooked sticks, boiled down the precious liquid. These spring days were the sweetest of the year to the uncultivated inhabitants.

These early days remind us of the Darwinian theory, and may be considered as an illustration of that philosopher's doctrine. In the first place, there is the hodge-podge or chaotic condition of the country under Indian brutality, a mixture of Ojibwas, Sioux, Winnebagoes and numerous tribes and combination of tribes, which we may denominate the "Nebular condition." Then came in French voyageurs, a higher, or more enlightened race, with beads and gew-gaws to entice the Indian maidens, illustrating the theory of "Natural Selection." "The struggle for existence," and the "Survival of the fittest," each find a most vigorous illustration. The lineaments and habits of the whites appear in these men as imitations or caricatures of the race. The inevitable "Struggle for existence" began in earnest when actual settlers moved in and took claims, for we can hardly regard Mr. Steele as a settler in St. Anthony at this time, since he never lived on his claim, but only attempted to hold it by a color of title, employing a tenant to live in the cabin. Peter Quinn obtained a claim here, but it was subsequently absorbed by Franklin Steele as well as one taken by his son-in-law Findley. Mr. Steele now owned the most valuable portion of St. Anthony, including the Falls, and, from his social and financial position as well by his natural abilities, became not only the most interested, but the most powerful friend of the new settlement. His claim at St. Anthony Falls was a little in advance of the wheels of progress, but he kept his foot firmly on it until the rest of the world came up with him. He lived near the Fort where he held out a hospitable hand to all newcomers, and encouraged the settlement. Mr. Steele opened a farm of seven acres and employed a man to fence and cultivate it until he entered it and perfected his title in 1818, by paying the usual price, one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

The changes to 1847, were, in addition to the facts already given, exchanges among the owners of claims, of little more import to our history than the swapping of jack-knives among a party of school boys, for settlers came in 1847 who added tone to business, and soon obliterated all traces of these petty trades.

In an address of Judge Atwater's we find that Charles Wilson was the first American settler at St. Anthony. He arrived in the spring of 1847. In June of this year, William A. Cheever obtained a claim near the present site of the University. Through him a negotiation was opened with parties from the East for a purchase of the water-power, which culminated July 10th, in the sale by Mr. Steele of nine-tenths of the water-power of St. Anthony Falls to Hon. Robert Rantoul, Caleb Cushing and others for twelve thousand dollars, and measures were at once taken for the erection of mills. Mr. Ard Godfrey was secured from Maine to superintend the construction of a mill, and arrived in the fall of 1847. Mr. Jacob Fisher, of St. Croix, directed the first work in the construction of the dam previous to the arrival of Ard Godfrey. During this year John Rollins, Calvin A. Tuttle, Luther Patch and his son Edward, Sumner W. Farnham, Caleb D. Dorr, Robert W. Cummings, Charles W. Stimpson, R. P. Russell, John McDonald, Samuel Ferrald, Joseph and William R. Marshall, Daniel Stanchfield and others arrived. Luther Patch brought his wife and two daughters, who were the first resident white women at St. Anthony. Calvin Tuttle also brought his family. R. P. Russell brought a stock of goods from the Fort, where he had been since 1839, and, in connection with Mr. Tuttle, opened a small store, the first in St. Anthony, in a room of the log house on Mr. Steele's claim, occupied at the same time as a residence by Luther Patch and family. Under these favorable circumstances for acquaintance, it is not surprising that this history records the marriage of Mr. Russell and Miss Patch October 3d, 1818, the first wedding in St. Anthony.

In the spring of 1849, William R. Marshall, afterward Governor of the state, established a small store in company with his brother Joseph M., in a building on Main street, next above the former residence of John Rollins. Disregarding the small stock of goods kept as stated in a private house by Mr. Russell, this is called by Gov. Marshall the first store in St. Anthony. In the fall of the same year Mr. R. P. Russell and his partner, Mr. Cruttenden, opened a store on Main street above the end of the present bridge; counting Marshall's first, this was the second store. John G. Lennon opened the next in connection with the American Fur Company, P. Choteau & Co., whose main office was in New York, with a branch at St. Louis, also located on Main street. In 1851, John H. Stevens opened a store in connection with Mr. Steele, under the name of John H. Stevens and Company.

In the fall of 1819 the first steps in lumbering were taken and a gang of men sent up the Mississippi river to Swan river, by Mr. Steele, to secure timber for the proposed mill. They paid the Sioux chief, Hole-in-the-Day, two hundred dollars for fifty sticks of hewed timber. This timber was caught at Pike Rapids, nine miles above Sauk Rapids, and frozen in, but was mostly secured as it came down in the spring. A gang sent up Rum River to obtain timber for the dam were even more unfortunate, for their logs were frozen in at the mouth of Rum River, and wholly lost in the spring freshet, involving a loss of $3,000. The work must, however, go on during the winter, and the beautiful maple and elm groves on Nicollet and Hennepin Islands were ruthlessly sacrificed to furnish the lumber requisite. A block-house was built that fall, near the end of the present stone-arch bridge leading to Nicollet Island, which was called the "Old Mess-house," for the men employed on the dam during the winter, and David Gorham acted in the capacity of cook. And Godfrey, who also brought his family, lived in a comfortable house near the mill, situated on what is now Main Street, just below the falls. His daughter Hattie was the first white child born at St. Anthony.

The winter of 1817-8 was fraught with misfortunes to the settlers. The boat in which their supplies from the East were conveyed was sunk in the Erie Canal. The hardware, of which they were greatly in need, was wholly lost. This caused great scarcity of tools with which to carry forward their building. The winter was severe, and provisions were scarce and high. Women were too few to do the cooking, and men were forced to act as cooks and housekeepers. The old government saw-mill was a poor affair and worked slowly; its utmost capacity was but three or four hundred feet per day, and the settlers were forced to bring lumber from the St. Croix. Worst of all, Rantoul and Cushing failed to meet their payments, and when their paper came back protested, it was a source of great embarrassment to Mr. Steele, and, as all depended on him, to the whole settlement, its effects continued to be felt for some time. In spite of all difficulties, Mr. Steele's mill began to run in the spring of 1848, and many of the inconveniences disappeared. Many new settlers came in, and new houses were rapidly built. The first built from the new lumber were one for Mrs. Huse, and part of that occupied by Richard Rogers, built by Washington Getchell; also one built by him for his own residence.

CHAPTER LVII.

DESCRIPTION OF SCENERY IN 1847—GOVERNMENT LAND SALES—SURVEYS—ORGANIZATION OF TERRITORY—LITERARY AND SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS—EVENTS OF 1849-50.

The early explorers, visitors and pioneer settlers have vied with each other in extolling the beauties of this region in its original glory. We have Father Hennepin's and Jonathan Carver's descriptions at an early day, and in later times novelists and poets have immortalized its scenery. It will be appropriate to this history to give briefly the impressions produced upon the pioneer settlers who arrived in the fall of 1817, just at the time the work on the dam commenced, and before the beauties as God made them had been marred by the hand of man, and at the same time give a picture of the settlement at this date which properly belongs to this chapter.

Visitors arriving on foot, the usual mode of travel in those days, obtained their first view of the Falls of St. Anthony from the high ground where the University now stands. At this point they would halt spell bound, and reclining on the green grass take in the magnificent view. The fall was the central figure, where the mighty Father of Waters leaps over the limestone rocks twenty-five or thirty feet to the foot of the precipice, extending in nearly a straight line from Hennepin Island to the east bank, forming a gentle curve from the island to the west bank. The roaring of the fall seemed to threaten the solid land, but the rainbow of promise beckoned on the traveler, inviting his approach and holding out rich rewards. Just below the falls, but in the midst of their spray, was a little green island called "Spirit Island." An old Indian legend makes it the abode of an Indian mother who threw herself with her child into the river and went down into the seething water in anguish of heart because her lord and master brought a new wife into the wigwam. The banks and the islands were covered with beautiful evergreens. At the right, the banks slope gently from the high land above to the bank of the stream, while still farther to the right, above the rising ground, was a level expanse varied by clusters of oaks of low growth which gave the appearance of an old orchard. Still further as a back-ground, extending as far as the eye could reach, a line of low bluffs. On the left was spread out a beautiful rolling prairie covered with a wild luxuriance of grass and flowers, while on the bank near the falls appeared a low pile of limestone, which proved on approach to be the old government mill that grinds a little corn and saws a little lumber in a rude and primitive manner. At this time the falls were nearly perpendicular, and that of the main channel many hundred feet lower down than the present fall. Spirit Island, now almost washed away, was then of considerable size and covered with wood, and only a little way below the main fall. Cataract, Hennepin and Nicollet Islands were densely wooded. Opposite the falls, but a little removed from the bank on the east side, stood the log cabin of Mr. Steele, with a few acres of corn growing near it, at what is now the corner of Second Avenue South and Main Street, East Division.

The block house then building, Pierrie Bottineau's house on the bank of the river above the head of Nicollet Island, Calvin A. Tuttle's claim shanty near the ravine north of the University, and two or three French squatter's cabins were all that marked the presence of man. Mr. Luther Patch, with two interesting daughters, Marion and Cora, were living in the old log house of Mr. Steele. The former soon became Mrs. R. P. Russell, and the latter Mrs. Joseph M. Marshall. At this date Saint Paul, which soon after assumed the position of the commercial centre for the North-west, was little in advance of this poor showing for Saint Anthony, and shrewd men whose wit often comes afterward, now assert that, as the Mississippi is easily navigable to a point three miles below the Falls of Saint Anthony, if the claim held in 1847 by Denoyer, three miles down the river, had become the property of such men as built up Saint Paul and Minneapolis, the commercial center might have been made there, and thus brought in close proximity to what God ordained should be the manufacturing centre. Had this happened, doubtless this dual city would long since have become by the union of three, a city of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, with vastly greater wealth than the present aggregate of all.

It must be borne in mind that up to this time these lands still belonged to the United States government. No survey had been made and no title to the land had been or could be conveyed until such survey was made and recorded. Settlements, therefore, previous to this were simply squatters' claims, and transfers of claims heretofore, had been in anticipation of the survey and government land sale. The sale took place in 1848 and the lands were entered by the several claimants at the government price, one dollar and a quarter per acre. The rights of each were strictly regarded although it was now certain that the claims were quite valuable. It would further appear that some of the claims adjoining, or near Mr. Steele's were held by the claimants under a contract with Mr. Steele, or were bought by him immediately after the survey and entry, for, he is represented as having obtained at the government price, a tract extending from where the bridge now is to the northern limits of the village, and another at the upper end of the town and the island called Boom Island." From the fact that titles and transfers about this time appear a little mixed, it is inferred that measures were taken by Mr. Steele to cover such lands as he thought most valuable, by employing others to hold them until under the color of purchase the claims were, according to previous contract, transferred to him.

In the spring of 1818, as stated above, Mr. Steele's mill was complete and running two single sash saws. During this year Mr. Cheever platted and laid out a town where he first located, near the present site of the University. This seems to have been a year of preparation for the incomers of 1819, who came in considerable numbers; but the character of the men was of greater significance than their numbers; such men as Col. John H. Stevens, Judge Bradley B. Meeker, Dr. John H. Murphy, the Getchells, Farnhams, etc., etc.

In the spring of this year Wm. R. Marshall, afterward Governor of the state, came to reside at St. Anthony. He had visited here in the fall of 1817, at which time he made a claim in the rear of what is now the upper town, and cut logs for a cabin, but could find no team to draw them together, and abandoned the claim for more promising employment on the St. Croix River. On his return, in the spring of 1819, he secured his old claim and erected his house. This subsequently formed Marshall's addition to St. Anthony.

Mr. Steele, in further preparation for newcomers, employed Wm. R. Marshall to survey into blocks and lots the town site of St. Anthony. Mr. S. P. Folsom had begun a survey previously, but it was not completed and was superseded by the new survey. Gov. Marshall states that he tried to secure generous-sized lots and wide streets. The lots were made sixty-six feet front by one hundred and sixty-five feet in depth, and the streets all eighty feet wide except Main street, which was made one hundred feet. Mr. Bottineau, who had never seen a city, and had a very imperfect conception of one, or the use of all this measurement, for, since he had never learned to read, he had never read of a city, after listening to the conversation of the land speculators, directed Mr. Marshall to take his land and fix it like the others, or do as he pleased with it.

From this year, dates the real growth of St. Anthony. In addition to those mentioned above, we find Hon. J. W. North, John G. Lennon, J. P. Wilson, and twenty more of names that have become of great interest in connection with the development of the city. This year was a time of general stir and prosperity. Mr. Steele started two more saws. Anson Northrup began the St. Charles hotel. About this time Mr. Steele sold to Arnold W. Taylor, of Boston, an undivided half interest in his property at the Falls, for $20,000. This proved subsequently a damage to the settlement, for Mr. Taylor, an eccentric old man, could not agree with any one, and two years after, Mr. Steele thought himself fortunate in buying back the property for $25,000. Litigations growing out of this transaction were productive of evil, and retarded the growth of the city. The population did not exceed three hundred. Near the river were most of the newly built houses, unpainted, but fresh and bright from the recently sawn lumber, while back from the river were log houses already stained by the hand of time. During the year the territory was organized in June, in accordance with an act of congress passed March 3d, 1819. The area embraced in the territory was nearly double that of the present state. Pursuant to a proclamation of the governor, courts were organized for the territory of Minnesota in August. The President appointed Aaron Goodrich, Daniel Cooper, and Bradley B. Meeker, judges in the several districts. Judge Meeker removed at this time from Kentucky to St. Anthony, and held his first court in the old government mill, August 20th, 1819, with Franklin Steele, foreman of the grand jury. John Rollins was elected to the Territorial Council, and William R. Marshall, to the House of Representatives from St. Anthony, and William Dugas from Little Canada, which was united with St. Anthony, in the same representative district. At the meeting of the Legislature, at St. Paul, which had been made temporary capital by the act organizing the territory, a bill was introduced to make it the permanent capital. This bill was opposed by Mr. Marshall and others, and a vigorous, though ineffectual attempt was made to locate it at St. Anthony. The struggle was aided by a fore-runner of "Nast" who caricatured it by a picture of a building, representing a Capitol on wheels with ropes attached by means of which Mr. Marshall was tugging away, endeavoring to drag the building off, while Bronson, Jackson and others of St. Paul were pulling back and blocking the wheels, with humorous and laconic speeches issuing from their mouths. The struggle, however, led ultimately to the establishment of the University at St. Anthony as a partial equivalent. During this year, the first post-office was established in a small office building belonging to Mr. Steele, with Ard Godfrey as postmaster. Captain John Rollins ran a passenger wagon occasionally to St. Paul, but Mr. Godfrey had no regular mail-carrier until the next year, 1850, when Powers and Willoughby established a line of daily stages between St. Paul and St. Anthony. In 1849, Mr. Godfrey obtained the mail at irregular intervals as he could from St. Paul.

It had previously been a matter of serious moment, and attended, too, with much apprehension to perceive the approach of a long cold winter, in a country where few of the necessities of life were produced, where the settlers were dependent on supplies brought from a distance by means of very uncertain and irregular communication, where few were able to secure large stores in advance, and were liable to be cut off for weeks together from communicating with the outside world. In the winter of 1849, social enjoyments began, as the direct result of increased population, and the arrival of educated and agreeable people as well as better houses and more of the luxuries of life. Mr. and Mrs. North lived in a house near the center of Nicollet Island. Their approach was by a floating bridge, formed by the accumulation of logs for the mills, except when the ice of winter, bridged the entire river. Mrs. North had a piano, the first at the falls, and weekly meetings were held at the house for reading, conversation and music. Mr. Marshall procured the passage of a bill incorporating a library association, and nearly two hundred volumes were obtained, and thus the first public library in Minnesota was founded. A course of public lectures was instituted during the winter; the lecturers were Hon. M. S. Wilkinson, Gen. R. W. Johnston, then Lieutenant at Fort Snelling, Rev. Father Gear, Rev. E. D. Neill, Elder Channey Hobart, Putnam P. Bishop and others. In the summer of 1849, the first public school was opened, in a small log shanty by Miss Electa Bachus. In the fall a small school-house was built, the first within the present limits of Hennepin county. During the winter following, Rev. E. D. Neill, of St. Paul, preached every other Sunday afternoon, in this school-house. He stated that his congregation was larger at St. Anthony than at St. Paul, where he also preached in the morning.

Rev. E. D. Neill delivered the first lecture in the course, in the winter of 1849. The lectures were given in the school-house. Referring to this course of lectures in an address before the Old Settlers Association, Mr. Neill said:

"Allusion has been made to the first course of lectures given at the Falls, the introductory to which was delivered under difficulties. It was announced that the course would open on the night of December 26th, 1849. The lecturer had dined at the residence of one of the best educated and most energetic men of the Upper Mississippi Valley, the late Charles W. Borup, then residing at Mendota. After a late dinner, Doctor Borup, with his sleigh and a pair of spirited horses, started with the lecturer for the Falls.

"It took but a few minutes to reach the Fort, but after its walls were passed it was dark, and fresh snow had obscured the path, which was seldom traveled. Soon the horses carried the sleigh into the cellar of a house that had been destroyed, but they quickly clambered out. At last the old government mill was reached, and the horses cautiously descended the bluff, to the frozen river. The cakes of ice were jammed perpendicularly, and there were long hollows between, and as the sleigh would pass over, the ice-hillocks would break down with a loud crash, and more than once the thought arose upon the part of the occupants, whether the sleigh would halt before it touched bottom. After slow and cautious driving, the east side of Hennepin Island was reached, only to find a large air-hole. Escaping this by a long detour, firm land was touched once more, and as the sleigh approached the school-house John Rollins met it, and in a very kind voice, but at the time it seemed a cool way, told the lecturer he was about ten minutes too late, and that the audience had gone home. Saddler, if not wiser and "warmer" men, the horses were turned around, and driver and lecturer reached Mendota at bed time. The people of the Falls were still determined to have the lecture, and soon after, Wm. R. Marshall, the late governor of the State, who had organized the Library Association, came in a sleigh after the lecturer. In the midst of a heavy snow-storm they drove to St. Anthony from St. Paul, and the lecture was delivered, and an abstract of it published as an appendix to the first address before the Minnesota Historical Society."

This year, 1849, was a prosperous one in all departments; preparations were made for the building of churches. The Baptist Church was organized in July, 1850, through the instrumentality of J. P. Parsons and W. P. Brown, and in August, the Methodist by Rev. J. G. Putnam and Mr. Newcomb. The Congregational Church, in which the First Presbyterian Church, organized in September, 1850, was merged, was organized November, 1851, with Rev. C. Seecombe in charge. In 1852, the Episcopal Church was organized by Rev. Dr. E. G. Gear and T. Wilcoxson, and the Universalist, by Rev. S. Barnes.

In 1850 some events of interest occurred. During this year several successful attempts were made to navigate the Mississippi to St. Anthony, already mentioned under Hennepin county. The failure to establish regular communication induced some to transfer their residence to St. Paul. A purse of two hundred dollars was made up for the "Anthony Wayne," because she established St. Anthony as the head of navigation. The only difficulty was that it would not stay established.

In 1850 occurred the exciting election for Delegate to Congress, in which Mr., now Gov., Sibley and Col. Alexander M. Mitchell were opposing candidates. Messrs. Sibley and Rice had been partners in the Indian trading interests in connection with the great house of Pierre Choteau, Jr. & Co. A quarrel arose in the fall of 1849, in consequence of which Mr. Rice left the firm. General Sibley was at this time delegate to congress, and had done good service in securing the passage of the territorial bill, but every effort was made by Gov. Rice and his supporters to defeat him by putting forward and supporting Col. Mitchell. The fears and jealousies of the people were aroused concerning the monopoly exercised by the Fur company, and under the cry of "Anti-monopoly," local issues were made at St. Anthony that arrayed many unwillingly against General Sibley. The distinguished novelist, Frederica Bremer, visited here in 1850. In her book, "Homes in the New World," she makes happy allusions to this visit. Mr. North and others had difficulty in getting her across the floating bridge to Nicollet Island.

The first recorded survey of the town of St. Anthony bears record February 23d, 1850, and the plat is entitled "St. Anthony and Steele and Russell Addition to St. Anthony," by William R. Marshall. The bounds of this plat are Fifth street on the north-east, and the river on the south. The old names of the streets were Marshall, Rollins, Daetah (so spelled on the plat), Todd, Dana, Wood, etc.

The original town was laid out on the south-west quarter of section 14, township 29, range 21, west of the 4th principal meridian. Marshall's Addition, surveyed by W. R. Marshall June 18th, 1850, was located on the north-west quarter of section 14. Orth's Addition was surveyed May 1st 1855, by L. P. Drake, situated on fractional lot number 2 in section 15. Bottineau's first addition bears no date; his second is dated May 21st, 1855.

In June, 1850, the St. Charles Hotel was completed, which was begun by Anson Northrup the previous season. It stood on Marshall Street, corner of Sixth Avenue North. It was a two-story building, and had twenty-five sleeping-rooms, a large dining-hall, two large parlors and a dancing-hall; the accommodations were sufficient for seventy-five guests. This building was afterward burned.

Among the arrivals of this year were Allen Harmon, Edwin Hedderly, Judge Isaac Atwater, C. W. Christmas, Joseph Dean, Peter Poncin, Thomas Chambers, Edward Murphy, George W. Chowen, Simon Stevens, Henry Chambers, W. W. Wales, John Wensinger, Warren Bristol, J. B. Bassett, William Finch and others.

Mr. Christmas was a surveyor and soon employed. He replaced the stakes that had been removed on Mr. Cheever's claim at Cheevertown, or St. Anthony City, as called by Mr. Cheever. Here a hotel was kept, and a remarkable feature was a tower ninety feet high built for observation, bearing the euphonious notice, "Pay your dime and climb." Mr. Cheever also put in a hydraulic ram that furnished water to the stages which passed his door. Another place of public resort, especially for Sunday driving, was kept by Stephen Denoyer about three miles down the river. Col. Allen, who now keeps the Merchants Hotel at St. Paul, kept a livery stable to provide teams for business or pleasure driving. The dam built in 1847 was a low log frame, and the experience of two spring freshets had proved it inadequate. Hence it was determined to raise the dam, extending from Nicollet Island to the east bank, two feet. During the summer previous, a temporary dam had been thrown across from the island to the west bank, the main object of which was to throw the current to the east channel. The contract for furnishing the timber for the new dam was made between Ard Godfrey and Pierre Bottineau on January 21st, 1851. The articles of agreement provided part payment in oats at 60 cents, corn at 70 cents, sugar at 9½ cents and butter at 25 cents; four dollars per thousand, board measure by the St. Croix scale, was the price specified for the timber, which was to be delivered by the first of June. These improvements were made in contemplation of running sixteen saws, eight of which were then in operation, producing a total of 50,000 feet per day. H. T. Welles afterward operated seven of the eight, and had $80,000 invested in the lumbering trade here. Lath and shingles were also manufactured, giving employment to more than one hundred men. Farnham & Stinson operated one saw, with about $6,000 invested in the business. The average price of lumber was $10.50 per thousand. In May of this year a division of the Sons of Temperance, Cataract Lodge No. 2, was organized. In the winter of 1850 '51 the University was located here, and the citizens of St. Anthony raised $3,000 by subscription toward the building. The St. Anthony Express, the first newspaper, came into life May 31st, 1851, under the proprietor, E. Tyler, a merchant tailor, Judge Isaac Atwater editor, and H. Woodbury printer. The first issue gives notice of the establishment of a new line of daily stages between St. Anthony and St. Paul by Patterson and Benson. The rival stage routes cut down the rates of travel to their own damage and the advantage of the traveling public. Among the items of January 3d, 1852, is the notice of the arrival of N. W. Kittson, J. Roulette and Mr. Grignon from Pembina in sixteen days by dog train, a journey of six hundred miles. The question is asked, "How long will it be before we have daily communication with Pembina by railroad?" and adds, "We will venture to say within the next dozen years," a prediction that came nearer fulfillment than the readers of the Express then anticipated. The temperance element of the place seems to have been in the ascendancy at that time, for the same paper in its issue of February 7th, 1852, says: "There is not a gambling institution, or a drinking saloon, or a whisky grocery, or a grog shop in town. We have no room for those who frequent such places."

CHAPTER LVIII.

CHIPPEWAS AND SIOUX AT FORT SNELLING—REMOVAL OF WINNEBAGOES—ATTACHED TO HENNEPIN COUNTY—INCORPORATED AS A CITY—FERRIES AND BRIDGES.

In 1857, a little pamphlet was issued by Thomas Hale Williams, city clerk for many years, from which we quote to show the condition of the city at that time and to show the growth and improvement during the first twenty years of its existence. It will be necessary for this history to pass over many events of the intervening years which were full of interest, as rapid growth and development continued, in order to hasten to the other side of the river, where events were transpiring worthy of our notice. Mr. Williams' pamphlet states that the estimated capacity of the saws then in operation along Main Street was 20,000,000 feet per annum, besides 13,000 shingles and 20,000 lath daily.

Another shingle-mill, on Cataract Island, was estimated at 2,500,000 per annum. D. W. Marr had a steam saw-mill running in the upper town, driven by an engine of 150 horse power, with an estimated capacity of 25,000 feet per day. A machine factory, for turning iron and wood-work, was located below the falls, in which was also manufactured bedsteads, sash, doors, and blinds. On Hennepin Island was the flouring-mill of Rollins, Upton and Eastman, and another about half the capacity, near the saw-mill. Another shingle and blind factory was built in 1857, on Hennepin Island, by B. C. Morrison. On the west side of Hennepin Island, Messrs. Rogers, Stimson, Kent and Co. erected a two-story stone building, sixty feet square, with which another, fifty by eighty feet, was connected, for the manufacture of sash, doors, blinds, mouldings, and other inside finishings. Two planing-mills and several saws were attached, altogether, with the building, costing about $30,000. This establishment is now used as a paper manufactory. The amount of logs brought down the river that season was estimated at 150,000,000 feet.

The University was in process of building, the part then under contract to cost $19,000. A high school or private academy was in session, under the direction of H. B. Taylor. The Baptist, Episcopal, Congregational, Methodist, and Catholic societies had church edifices, and an elegant stone church was building by the Universalists. The Winslow House was also building, and its completion the following spring was looked forward to with great interest. Its cost was estimated at $100,000, and the opinion expressed that it would be surpassed by no house in the United States, when all its advantages are considered. This city still St. Anthony contained one hundred and five business places, including cabinet, boot and shoe and other shops, several real estate dealers, two surveyors, two architects, two printing offices, a number of hotels and boarding-houses, ten lawyers, and eight physicians.

Two steamers, the H. M. Rice and Governor Ramsey, were making regular trips to Sank Rapids and intermediate points, and during the season of navigation, both were crowded with passengers and freight.

On one of these trips, the Governor Ramsey, Captain John Rollins, brought about ninety Chippewas from Sank Rapids. From this point they proceeded on foot to Fort Snelling, to meet the Sioux in council for the purpose of effecting a treaty looking to more peaceful tribal relations. A large awning had been prepared at the Fort, under which the Chippewas were ranged, sitting to await the arrival of the Sioux, who soon came with brandish and warlike flourish, evidently with intent to intimidate their foes, for it must be borne in mind that, though met for the purpose stated, there never existed, and probably never will exist, a true friendly feeling between these two powerful tribes. During this demonstration the Chippewas remained silent and motionless, not a muscle of the features of any one moving. It is stated by an eye witness, that if the Chippewas had stampeded, as was the evident design of the Sioux, the latter would, without doubt, have fallen upon them in indiscriminate slaughter. Failing in this, they filed into place under the awning, and assumed the same stolid look as their opponents. Quite a number of ladies were present on the occasion, which was a matter of great annoyance to the Sioux chief, Little Crow, who made known, through his interpreter, his disgust at the presence, in this "council of braves," of the pale-faced squaws. At this the Chippewa chief, Hole-in-the-day, rose to his feet, and with a dignity and grace worthy of the proudest courtier, waved his warriors aside, and invited the ladies to seats upon his side. This act gained for the Chippewa chieftain the highest favor of the assemblage.

In the spring of 1851, the Winnebago Indians were removed from Watab to the Blue Earth reservation, and on their way spent a week at St. Anthony. During their stay they amused the citizens by their dances and discordant songs, and received in return numerous cold lunches, pennies, etc. On a Sabbath morning, the Rev. Mr. Creighton was holding religious services in the old Methodist Episcopal church, when a practical joker sent a band of Winnebagoes to the church, telling them the people who lived there would be pleased with their dance, and would contribute liberally. The effect upon the audience at seeing their dusky faces peering in at the windows, may be imagined. The worshipers rushed out without the ceremony of benediction, and discovered the imposition too late to return.

Though Indians were frequently seen, it was a novel sight to the inhabitants of St. Anthony to see several hundred together. The squaws dragged the canoes, about one hundred in number, through the streets, and what with braves, squaws, papooses, dogs, and canoes, a sensation was created.

St. Anthony was detached from Ramsey county March 4th, 1856, and attached to Hennepin for greater convenience of its citizens. We have thus in the short time covered by this history seen it described in four counties, viz: Crawford and St. Croix counties, Territory of Wisconsin, and Ramsey and Hennepin, Minnesota. Besides all these, in the early days of St. Anthony an attempt was made, after the organization of Hennepin county, to set off a strip of territory along the river to form the county of St. Anthony. Wiser minds saw the natural attachment of this to Hennepin county, and to Captain Rollins, then in the territorial council, is due the ultimate union of St. Anthony with Hennepin county.

As St. Anthony began to assume importance, measures were taken to secure an act of incorporation, and a bill passed the legislature in 1855, granting corporate privileges to the city of St. Anthony, describing its limits as including what lies east of the river, of the following sections and parts of sections, viz: section 10 and the west half of section 11, sections 13, 14, 15, 23, 24, 25, town 29, range 24, stating that it shall consist of three wards; the officers shall be a Mayor and a board of aldermen consisting of six members.

At the next session of legislature, 1856, section 25 was thrown out by an amendatory act.

In accordance with this act of legislature, the city of St. Anthony came into the sisterhood of cities in 1860, and a municipal government was established.

Many events of great interest in connection with the growth and development of St. Anthony, appear in the history of the county and are inextricably intermingled with the early history of Minneapolis. To these we must therefore refer the reader for fuller details, while many more will appear in the histories of the manufactories, and biographies of individuals, and if, after all, facts that some may deem essential, are omitted, indulgence is entreated, because events, in cities of such rapid growth, crowd on each other so as to compel the omission of some.

FERRIES AND BRIDGES.

We desire, now, to cross the river to investigate the settlement, growth and progress there, but before we advance further it will be interesting to recall the first method of crossing and follow up the improvements, by a sketch of ferries and bridges.

The first, and for a long time the only means, of crossing the Mississippi at this point, was by fording on the ledge at the foot of Nicollet Island, which could be performed only at low water and before the building of the dam. The current was very swift and horses required shoes to hold on the rocks and avoid slipping. At Boom Island the current was less rapid, and here crossings were made with canoes. One old squaw, who netted fish and lived mostly on the river, derived considerable income from setting travelers across with her canoe.

In 1847, Mr. Steele established a ferry near the site of the present suspension bridge, from Nicollet Island to the west shore. Teams were still compelled to follow the ledge in crossing the eastern channel to the foot of Nicollet Island, and thence up the Island to the ferry, which consisted of a flat boat with posts near each end, over which a large rope or cable was drawn, fastened at each end to the banks of the stream. The cable served a double purpose, preventing the drifting down stream, and affording a means for hauling the boat across. R. P. Russell, Mr. Steele's agent, took charge of the ferry, at first employing Dubey to operate the boat. Edgar Folsom arrived late in the fall of 1847, and the following summer took charge of the ferry and ran it one season; after this, Captain Tapper had charge until the building of the bridge, when he assisted in that, afterward collecting the tolls.

Several stories are told at the expense of Mr. Folsom when in charge of the ferry. Once, before he had become familiar with the operation, he lost patience with the man running the boat because he did not obey his orders, and cast the rope off one of the posts to escape a blockade of ice that was straining the rope like a bow-cord. Seizing it himself, he cast it off, but was hurled more than twenty feet on the rough ice by the rebound of the cable. In another instance, a daughter of Reuben Bean, who had located on the west side, was out in a canoe on the river, being quite skillful in its use, from experience on the Illinois river, the former home of the family, but striking the cable of the ferry, she was upset and in some danger. Folsom hastened to her relief and after extricating her from her unfortunate situation demanded the damsel's hand as remuneration for his gallantry, but she thinking the demand too high, exclaimed, "Put me back on the ferry rope." Another incident that occurred near the ferry, but later, while Captain Tapper was in charge, came near proving fatal to more than one. In this case, Simon Stevens and Captain John Tapper went to the rescue of a little boy about seven years of age, who was alone in a boat floating rapidly toward the falls. It appears that an older boy in stepping out of the boat had lost hold of it, and unwittingly placed the little fellow who was in his charge, in jeopardy. The loud cries of the older boy attracted the attention of the rescuers to the little fellow, who, with innocent unconcern, was enjoying the motion of the boat. They rescued him, though they were compelled to row so near the brink of the falls themselves, that for a moment, it was doubtful which would be victorious, the strong current or their strong arms. Their best efforts at first failed to show any gain, but at last inch by inch, they pulled away from their perilous situation. The little boy in this story became one of the business men of this city, J. H. Pottle, the carriage manufacturer. The total income of the ferry the first year was said to be only $300. It soon proved inadequate to the demands, and Mr. Steele conceived the idea of a suspension bridge and carried it out. Our history has not yet reached the west side, but we shall soon see, what Mr. Steele saw, a royal neighbor asking for a royal passage across the stream. History informs us that when Queen Elizabeth proposed to honor Kenilworth Castle by a visit, Leicester ordered a portion of the outer wall thrown down, and a broad passage made, stating that he had never till now had need for a portal that was fit for the passage of a Queen. Franklin Steele seems to have had as grand an idea of Minneapolis. The undertaking was the more startling, as the great Mississippi had never been bridged from Lake Itasca to the Gulf. It was undertaken in 1851, as a private enterprise by the Minneapolis Bridge Company, consisting of Franklin Steele, H. T. Welles and company, and was eight months building, but on the 19th of March following, it was dismantled by a heavy gale, and nearly all summer consumed in repairing the damage. July 4th, 1855, the first team crossed. It is worthy of mention, that the famous "Vermont Morrill," driven by Chester Martin first crossed the bridge. This horse was brought from Vermont, when five years old, to St. Anthony in 1855, and remained here two years. Probably the most celebrated horse ever raised in the county, was the "Finch" horse sired by the first horse that crossed the first bridge over the Mississippi river. Two years later the tolls at this bridge were estimated at $12,500 per annum. A Howe truss bridge was built in 1856-7, across the river between 11th and 12th avenues south-east, about three rods above Bridal Veil Falls, and was in charge of Robert H. Jefferson. During a time of high water in 1859, logs were caught by the bridge, in consequence of its being built too low, and it became a wreck. Calvin A. Tuttle gave the right of way to the approaches.

It will serve to explain the distance between the ferries and bridges, if we recall the fact that they were private enterprises, under charters obtained from the State, and by the terms of their charters, each was protected against opposition by a provision that no similar charter should be granted within a mile.

The government bridge across the ravine on Third Street, and another connecting Main Street with Hennepin Island, and still another connecting Main Street with Nicollet Island, were built previous to 1857, and at this date a bridge was building across the Mississippi, about a mile below the Suspension Bridge, by the Minnesota Bridge Company, at a cost of $52,000. In 1852-3 a wooden bridge was built across the east channel, which was repaired and replaced by other similar structures. This obviated the necessity of fording the river, as had been necessary previously. The wooden bridge was replaced in 1878 by the present stone-arch bridge. The railroad bridge of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway was constructed in 1868 at a cost of $75,000 by the St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Company. A draw-bridge was built near Orth's brewery, which remained in use about six years. All these were toll bridges except that replaced by the stone-arch bridge. The upper and lower bridges now in use were built in 1874, by the King Bridge Company of Topeka, Kansas. The Suspension Bridge was purchased by the county from Franklin Steele and made a free bridge.

The present Suspension Bridge was built in 1876 and is the pride of the city. Its breaking strain is estimated at 4,980,000 pounds; total strength of all the cables, 10,995,072 pounds. The main cables are nine inches in diameter and swing inward about six feet. The outside cables supporting the walks are three and one-half inches in diameter and swing inward about eleven inches. The length of wire used, exclusive of wrappings, is 1,421 miles. The towers are eighty feet high; the length of the bridge 630 feet. Walks for foot-passengers are on both sides of the drive. Its entire cost was $221,024.50. Even this structure proves inadequate to the demand, and a proposition is on foot to extend the bridge in width by swinging outward the cables supporting the walks, which as stated above now swing inward.

A plan has been matured, and preparations are now making for the construction of a railroad bridge diagonally across the river from the eastern end of the lower, or iron bridge, to Hennepin Island, and thence to the western end of the suspension bridge, the entire length of which, including that part of the track laid on Hennepin Island, will be nearly three-quarters of a mile, or more than six times the length of the suspension bridge. The building of this great structure is with a view to a union depot, and as affording railroad access to the new Pillsbury "A" mill, and other mills about to be built.

CHAPTER LIX.

WEST SIDE--JOHN H. STEVENS--HON. ROBERT SMITH--OTHER RESIDENT CLAIMANTS--EARLY EVENTS.

It is unnecessary to recapitulate the facts in regard to the military reservation embraced in the county history, and the history of Fort Snelling, in preceding chapters. We refer the reader to these for information necessary to an understanding of the difficulties and trials experienced by the early settlers of the west side. This invisible barrier restrained all settlement within the sacred territory until 1849, when Hon. Robert Smith, then a member of Congress from Illinois, and John H. Stevens, just returned from the Mexican war, received permits from the government to occupy one hundred and sixty acres each of the reserve. Late in the fall of this year Mr. Stevens commenced building his house, and the following spring completed it and moved on his land. We cannot forbear introducing Mr. Stevens at his first arrival in the state, for his character appears at first sight. General R. W. Johnson describes his first meeting with the hearty Colonel as follows: "At Fort Snelling, I met for the first time Colonel John H. Stevens between whom and myself an intimacy sprang up, ripening into a friendship which will last as long as life. The Fort Snelling post-office was the principal office in the territory, and to all intents and purposes Stevens was Postmaster General of the North-western Territory. Stevens came here to lend his energy towards building up the state, and the part he has performed has been well done. An inventory of his baggage and worldly goods when he arrived in Minnesota may not prove uninteresting. Before leaving Illinois, he had laid in the following bill of goods which he purchased of B. H. Campbell, of Galena: one bbl. pork, \$9.50; 200 lbs. ham, \$8.00; 10 lbs. coffee, \$1.00; 1 lb. tea, \$1.00; 14 lbs. sugar, \$1.00; $\frac{1}{2}$ sack salt, .50; 1 lb. pepper, .30; $\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. tobacco, \$1.67; 1 bbl. whiskey, \$6.84. Think of that, will you, 38 gallons of whiskey at 18 cents per gallon! This bill is interesting on several accounts. It shows how we had to depend upon ourselves; the character of the meat our 'Cesar' fed on; and the difference between the prices of to-day and twenty years ago. The amount of whiskey may seem large, but it must be remembered that we had no communication with the outside world from the close until the opening of navigation. For the truth of history it should be recorded that Stevens was a temperate man, who never took a drink even. He brought the whiskey with him, to have a remedy at hand in case he was bitten by a snake, and to have it in his power to extend the usual western hospitality. Such was the character of our early settlers."

In a letter addressed to J. H. Stevens, dated

New York city, February 1st, 1881. Mr. Henry T. Welles says: "Hennepin county owes as much to you, if not more, than to any other man. You were the corner-stone on which Mr. Steele's fortune was built. You shaped the early beginning of what is now Minneapolis, and in any history of the county you ought to have credit accordingly."

Traits of unselfishness, which are somewhat inconsistent with the acquisition of large wealth, have characterized the Colonel throughout his life at Minneapolis, and though he may not, in the view of most, be looked upon as one favored of fortune, still, what better fortune can a man have than the blessings of his grateful friends, in a comfortable and happy home? The perusal of the records of the old settlers proves that in these he is rich indeed. His house was the first built on the west side, with the exception of the government house on the knoll, near the mill, built in early times. His claim extended from the falls bordering on the river to Bassett's creek. The Nicollet House now stands near the middle of the old claim. Mr. Stevens crossed by the ferry daily to his business at St. Anthony, where he kept his store in connection with Franklin Steele.

The means taken to obtain a foothold in the reserve calls to mind the fable of the camel, that begged leave of a tailor just to warm his nose at his open window, but when his modest request was granted, pushed his demands until the tailor was driven out and the camel left in undisputed possession.

Hon. Robert Smith, of Alton, Illinois, while a member of Congress, wrote, February 15th, 1849, from the House of Representatives, in Washington, to the Commissioner of Indian affairs, expressing a wish "To lease for five years the old government house and grist and saw-mill on the west side of the Mississippi River, opposite the Falls of St. Anthony." In the letter he adds: "I shall move into the Territory of Minnesota after the adjournment of Congress, and I wish to procure this house for my family to live in, and to fix up the old grist-mill to grind corn and other grain, there being no grist-mill now in that region of country." The Secretary of War consented, providing the commanding officer at Fort Snelling approved.

Major Woods, in command, on April 12th wrote that: "With due respect to Mr. Smith, I doubt much if his aim in wishing to settle there is not in expectation that the reserve will be taken off." Mr. Smith took possession of the old house and mill in May, 1849, but did not reside there. Mr. Smith was only allowed, with the house and mill, sufficient ground for a garden; therefore, in September, he renewed the correspondence with the Secretary of War. "I must have ground to raise something to live upon. I cannot cross the river and back, with my team, without paying one dollar. Provisions are dear and scarce, while there are tens or thousands of acres of excellent land, with no one within six or seven miles, on the same side of the river, cultivating an acre. I cannot but believe it will decidedly be for the interest of the government to permit me to make a farm adjoining the mill." Mr. Smith had evidently studied the art of diplomacy thoroughly, and, in the disinterested patriotism of the last paragraph, we should see only a satire written at his own expense, except that it is obscured by the very effrontery that won his success.

In September, 1852, Mr. Smith asked the privilege of purchasing the buildings and in March, 1853, Captain N. J. T. Dana, quartermaster at Fort Snelling, wrote to the quartermaster-general at Washington: "I returned to this post on the twentieth instant, and on the next day visited the old mill and buildings belonging to the quartermaster's department and now in the possession of Hon. Robert Smith, and I submit the following as my opinion of the value of the buildings to the government at the time when Mr. Smith received them: The old stone grist-mill, the building somewhat dilapidated, the water-wheel worn out entirely, but the other machinery, including two mill-stones, good, was worth $400. The old frame of a saw-mill, greatly decayed, together with the mill irons on it and extra posts, mostly worn out, $100. The one-story frame building, much decayed, $200. Fences and races, much decayed, $50." The permit which he received from the Secretary of War allowed him to make a claim where the old government mill stood, which is the present site of Sidle, Fletcher & Holmes' flouring mill, with the purpose of operating it for the government. This plan he carried out, employing Reuben Bean as millers. Mr. Smith never lived here, nor did he at any time occupy his claim in person, but divided it with R. P. Russell, George E. Huy and others, in consideration of their agreement to make improvements on the property. Mr. Smith remained in Illinois, and at the time of his death was still member of congress from Alton district.

Though the early settlers on the west side were subjected to many hardships, these were of a kind peculiar to their location on the reserve and very different from the usual experiences of frontier life. Many had been living at St. Anthony, and the removal of their worldly effects to the opposite side of the river was not a very laborious task, besides the river alone separated them from a base of supplies. Those who were new comers and had not lived at St. Anthony could there find temporary shelter and comfort until their modest cabins were in readiness. No land entries could be made, but the following persons staked out their claims in about the order mentioned, excepting those who made no attempt to secure land, entering other business: Calvin A. Tuttle, J. P. Miller, Dr. H. Fletcher, John Jackins, Warren Bristol, Allen Harmon, Dr. A. E. Ames, Edward Murphy, Charles Hoag, Joel B. Bassett, Colonel E. Case, Waterman Stinson, Edwin Hedderly, C. W. Christmas, Judge Isaac Atwater, Simon Stevens and Henry Chambers. Calvin A. Tuttle, who came over next after Mr. Stevens, was employed by Mr. Smith as miller in place of Mr. Bean, and remained in charge of the mill for several years. While still in charge in 1853, he became interested with Simon Stevens and others in the construction of a mill at Minnetonka. He now resides at Two Rivers, Morrison county, in this state.

J. P. Miller, the next to move to the west side, made a claim where Judge Atwater now lives, on the south-west quarter of section 25. His claim is now known as Atwater's addition to Minneapolis. He built there the second house, and remained till 1853, when he moved to Minnetonka, where he still lives, an honored and respected citizen. Mr. Miller was a native of Pennsylvania, lived several years in Bucyrus, Ohio, and a short time in Rockford, Illinois, arriving at St. Anthony in 1849.

Dr. Hezekiah Fletcher located his claim on the south-east quarter of section 27, and built the third house, which was a small shanty. He never entered the practice of his profession, but gave himself up to speculations, in which he was very successful. He soon sold his claim to John L. Tenney. He represented the county in the territorial legislature, and was appointed register of the land office in 1863. He is now in business in Springfield, Missouri.

John Jackins, the fourth resident claimant, located back of, and adjoining, Mr. Stevens, and built a house which is still standing on Sixth street below Third Avenue south, though it has been removed from its original site. He lived on his claim several years, and laid it out in lots as Jackins' addition to Minneapolis, but subsequently removed and now lives at Stillwater.

Warren Bristol came fifth, and located his claim on section 27, just west of, and adjoining the claim of Dr. Fletcher. He built a shanty, lived in it about two years, and then exchanged his claim for lots in St. Paul, where he entered the practice of law. While in Minneapolis he held the office of county attorney, and was the first attorney for Hennepin county. He moved from St. Paul to Red Wing, and represented Goodhue county in the senate and house of representatives. He is now judge of the supreme court of the territory of New Mexico.

Allen Harmon, the next, located the sixth claim on the north-west quarter of section 27, where he still lives. He farmed his claim for a few years, and afterward laid out a portion in town lots, called Harmon's addition to Minneapolis. Later he platted other portions, until now it is nearly all laid out in town lots.

Dr. A. E. Ames, the seventh resident claimant, located his claim October 14, 1851, on section 26, and built a shanty, but remained in St. Anthony during the winter. In the spring of 1852 he moved over with his family, and was the first practicing physician in Minneapolis. It will designate the claim more intelligibly to add that the court-house is situated on the original claim. He became prominent in his profession as well as in public life. He was a Vermonter by birth, but studied medicine in Chicago. He first located in Illinois, where he held the office of assistant secretary of state for four years, and was a member of the state senate and house of representatives. After his removal to Minneapolis he rep-represented Hennepin county in the territorial legislature one term, and subsequently was a member of the state constitutional convention. He died in September, 1874. His son, Ezra B. Ames, lives in the house of his father, corner of Fifth Street and Eighth Avenue south, having removed it from the original site, corner of Fifth street and Ninth Avenue south.

Edward Murphy made the eighth claim, adjoining and below J. P. Miller, near the river and near the residence of Judge Atwater. He moved on his claim in the spring of 1852, occupying it until his death. He platted his claim, and it became Murphy's addition to Minneapolis. Mr. Murphy was a native of New Jersey, but was a resident of Illinois before coming to Minnesota.

The ninth to arrive was Charles Hoag, in June, 1852, from Philadelphia, where he had been a teacher in the public schools of that city. He located his claim next west of Jackins. It extended nearly to Bassett's creek. He lived on his claim a few years and laid it out in blocks and lots, called Hoag's addition to Minneapolis. He contributed much to the growth of the city, but was amply remunerated by the advance in property. To him is due the name Minneapolis, which has incorrectly been ascribed to Mr. George D. Bowman, editor of the St. Anthony Express, in consequence of the prominent position he took with his paper among its advocates. Mr. Hoag, after losing his wealth through the failure of others, moved on a farm in Richfield, where he now resides.

Next, and tenth, came J. B. Bassett in the spring of 1852, and located his claim along the river north of the creek that bears his name. The stream was named by Miss Mary A. Schofield, at that time a teacher in the settlement, now Mrs. Prof. Kissell, a resident of Chicago. After working his claim as a farm for a few years, Mr. Bassett imbibed the enthusiasm of the little town and laid out his land in lots in connection with others, and it came in under the name of Case, Bassett and Moore's addition to Minneapolis. He built his first house on a knoll at the mouth of the creek, but now lives in a fine residence 643, North Fourth street, which is also on the original claim. Mr. Bassett was the first Judge of Probate of the county, a representative to the territorial legislature, and in 1868, Indian agent to the Chippewas. He was a native of New Hampshire, and came in 1851 to Minnesota.

Eleventh, Colonel Emanuel Case located on the river above Judge Bassett. The claim was contested with Peter Poncin, who moved on the land during the winter of 1852, and was living there at the time Colonel Case made his claim. Colonel Case defeated him, however, and established the claim. This was the southern-most land along the river belonging to the Indian reservation. He cultivated his claim a few years and laid it out in lots in company with Bassett and Moore, but continued to reside on it until his death about ten years ago. Colonel Case was a native of New York, and in the spring of 1851 came to Minnesota.

Waterman Stinson made the twelfth claim, on the north side of Bassett's creek, second above Bassett's, leaving one claim between them not yet taken. His claim soon proved like others too valuable for farming purposes; he, therefore platted it and became a wealthy man by sales of his lots. This formed Stinson's addition to Minneapolis. He lived on his claim until his death.

Next, and thirteenth, was the claim of Edwin Hedderly in company with Rev. Alfred C. Godfrey, a resident of Maine. They made claims on the river above Miller. Mr. Hedderly's claim adjoined that of Mr. Miller, and Rev. Mr. Godfrey's came next. The latter soon sold his and returned East, and is now pastor of a church in Massachusetts. Mr. Hedderly lived on his claim until the fall of 1880, when his death occurred.

Charles W. Christmas was the fifteenth, and made his claim about a mile north, just outside the reservation, where he built a temporary shelter, and subsequently, a fine residence. Mr. Christmas arrived in St. Anthony July 3d, 1850, and made his claim the following year. He was employed as surveyor in both St. Anthony and Minneapolis, and was twice elected county surveyor. In 1852 he moved on his claim and subsequently platted it. He was appointed register of land office for Sauk Rapids, but owing to the failure to elect the Whig candidate, Gen. Scott, to the presidency, he held the office only six months and received $500, a half-year's salary, though he never went to Sauk Rapids to take possession of the office, nor performed any of the duties of register, excepting the very important one of drawing his salary. He came from Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio, bringing a wife and nine children, attracted by a letter printed in a leading newspaper, written by Hon. J. W. North, in which the territory was described in very attractive terms. He states that the appearance of the country fully satisfied his anticipations and its subsequent growth has not exceeded his predictions. Mr. Christmas, after platting his claim, took Isaac Lewis and J. C. Reno as partners for the purpose of adding improvements, and the lots were divided among the partners. By some means Mr. Christmas came out the loser, and, though a respected citizen in advanced age, he has failed to secure for his old age the fat income now enjoyed by some of his contemporaries.

Judge Isaac Atwater made a claim next but, as he stated before the old settlers: he sold it for ten dollars and never got his pay.

Henry Chambers opened a store and Simon Stevens was interested in lumber mills, neither of them making any claim.

Joshua Draper made a claim where Mr. D. Morrison now resides, the north-east quarter of section 31, included, it is said in the city in 1867, in order to permit Mr. Morrison, at that time residing there, to become a candidate for the office of Mayor. Mr. Draper jumped the claim of Captain Arthur H. Mills, of the United States Army. At the time he made the claim, he was clerk for J. G. Lennon in St. Anthony. A compromise was effected between Draper and Captain Mills, by which each took half of the original claim. Mr. Draper was a native of Oneida county, New York, and in 1851, arrived at St. Anthony. He was advanced in age at the time of his arrival, and brought a large family with him. His death occurred several years ago at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Gordon, at Sauk Centre.

Mr. Christmas, with William Sloan for assistant, surveyed the greater part of Minneapolis, for Mr. Steele and Mr. Stevens. His survey extended from Helen street, the boundary line between the original claims of Hon. Robert Smith and Colonel Stevens, to Bassett creek. Governor Marshall had previously surveyed up to Helen street, now Third Avenue south. He also surveyed down to Murphy's claim. Before the government survey was made, Mr. Murphy wished to ascertain where the town line would run in order to avoid mistakes in locating and dividing lands, and for this purpose employed Mr. Christmas. This required nice calculation, but conjecturing how the government surveyors would proceed, he ran out the line, starting from the east side, and carrying it across the river, struck the same point on Lake Calhoun, which the government surveyors made two or three years after, when they ran the line with more delicate instruments than the simple chain and compass used by the first surveyors. It should be mentioned here that the southern boundary of the township was subsequently changed by act of legislature and corresponding changes made in the boundaries of Brooklyn, Crystal Lake and Richfield; reference to the history of those townships and the township of Minneapolis, will explain those changes. In making the city surveys, Mr. Christmas states that he followed the instructions of Col. Stevens in giving liberal measurement, and made an allowance of one and four one hundreds feet on each block, and further, as the streets and avenues do not cross at right angles, he ran the lines to secure as wide streets as possible. In the brick block of Dunham and Johnson, on Hennepin Avenue, the history of the survey was placed in a space between the layers of brick with the expectation that at some future time, in the growth of the city, it might be discovered and be an interesting relic of the past.

The first marriage was that of Captain John Tapper and Miss Matilda Stinson, in August, 1853, ceremony performed by Rev. Mr. Rowell, September 4th, of the same year the second took place, that of Andrew J. Foster and Mrs. M. E. Averill, ceremony performed by Edwin Hedderly, first justice.

Among the early settlers was Anson Northrup, who has been already mentioned as the builder of the St. Charles Hotel in St. Anthony, a man full of enterprise. Mr. Northrup made a claim, February, 1851, where the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul freight and passenger depots and yards are now located. Part of the ground was marshy, and between the marshy portions was a strip of ground which, in 1853, Mr. Northrup had broken, Mr. Charles Gilpatrick, now living near the Layman Cemetery, doing the work. The amount broken was estimated at three acres, and on this, which was platted by Mr. Northrup, was erected previously the first building in which a public school was taught, commencing December 3d, 1852, by Miss Mary E. Miller.

The first building used as a hotel was located near where the present shops of O. A. Pray and Company are situated. It was small, but many were thankful for its meager accommodation. In 1857, James Young, now proprietor of Young's Hotel at Delano, opened a first-class restaurant on Washington Avenue, opposite the present site of the First National hotel. Mr. Young, among the early settlers here, was engaged as surveyor, and was employed as chief engineer for Smith and Carleton. He was proprietor of the old Minnesota house, after selling his restaurant at the close of a year's business. At the time of the surveys mentioned there was a small pond near the present post-office block, and lots in that vicinity found few purchasers at $20 each. Mr. Young refused lots at that price in payment for his services as surveyor.

CHAPTER LX.

TYRANNICAL PROCEEDINGS—NAMES—AFFAIRS IN 1854-5—SURVEYS—MILLS AND OTHER BUSINESS—TOWN GOVERNMENT—CHARTER REVOKED.

It would be tedious if not impracticable to carry the enumeration of settlers farther. Settlers came in rapidly to take lots and erect houses. Many of those whom we have enumerated came without permits from the secretary of war and in the face of the prohibition of the officers at the Fort, who carried out their instructions in a tyrannical manner, pulling down the houses of some and holding out a sly hand open to bribery to others, offering not to molest those claimants who promised to give half their claims at the time of entry for unmolested possession. Twice were the shanties of the poor squatters torn down, and many retired in disgust from the unequal contest, while the majority rebuilt and patiently waited, until at last they wrought victory from continual defeat.

Before the name Minneapolis was decided on, other names were proposed. During one season it was styled All Saints, perhaps because St. Paul and St. Anthony had grown so well under sainted names, it was supposed that under the patronage of all saints it must eclipse its rivals. The name Lowell was mooted, as it was thought possible the future city might rival that great manufacturing center in Massachusetts. Another name Albion was offered, for no other reason that we can see but its euphonious character. The word Albion means white, and is sometimes applied to England on account of her chalky cliffs. The name Minneapolis is compounded of the Sioux word, "Minne," meaning water, and the Greek "Polis," a city, which blends easily and, though contrary to the usual rule in forming compounds, it is a much more agreeable name than though both had been taken from the Greek, in which case the name would have been, perhaps, Hudorapolis.

In the spring of 1854, Minneapolis contained only twelve houses, and these were scattered at long intervals apart, as if their purpose was that of farms; moreover, their architecture was somewhat uniform, and, though picturesque, could hardly be called elegant, for at this time it was quite uncertain what action the government would take in reference to the reservation. In a chapter of the county history will be found an account of the measures taken to secure the claims by the settlers. In the spring of 1855, all apprehension was removed by the favorable decision of Congress, and in April the claimants were able to prove up and obtain undisputed title. Previously the settlers had been subjected to trouble and expense. Money had to be contributed to protect their rights; clubs and claim associations were organized for the same purpose. These associations had committees before whom conflicting claimants presented their causes for arbitration, and from their decision there was no appeal, for the very weakness of the settlers led them to institute strong measures, and where any showed signs of making trouble, it is said a rope attached to the limb of a tree was shown the mischief-maker. The result was submission to the rules of the association. To claim-jumpers no quarter was given.

To Hon. Henry M. Rice, delegate to congress from the territory, and to citizens who went to Washington to aid in the matter, was due the passage of the bill which secured the rights of pre-emption to the settlers. After all was settled and claimants had secured their homes, prosperity began. Claims changed hands, and new men came in, bringing money. This was the time to judge of the character of men. All were prosperous, and many a poor dog who had never had money before, strutted about with his coat pockets full of gold, presenting a twenty-dollar piece to pay for a cigar. Thus the fool and his money soon parted, while wiser men used the prosperous days to prepare for the hard times to follow. Hard times came soon, finding few thoroughly enough hedged to tide over.

The first survey was made by William R. Marshall in 1854, but the first record of survey was filed August 2d, 1855, William R. Marshall, surveyor, changed by Heman C. Smith. This was on sections 25 and 26. Next, May 13th, 1856, Atwater's addition was recorded. Next, June 19th, 1856, Morrison, Smith and Hancock's addition. These additions were surveyed by H. Clayton Smith. Murphy's addition was surveyed July 7th, 1857, by Smith and Carleton.

In the fall of 1855 more than one hundred houses had been built, and to quote from the papers of the day, "Some would do credit, both in structure and durability, to the city of New York." The boom of progress was checked and brought to a stand by the financial crisis of 1857. Fabulous rates of interest were paid by even the best men, and disaster followed. The fortunes which seemed already in the grasp of many, treacherously slipped away and passed into the hands of others, and in this way some of the first claimants, who were entitled to, and were worthy of, the highest rewards came out poor. It was long thought by the leading citizens of St. Anthony that their neighbor, Minneapolis, would become only a valuable suburb of their city, as the natural conformation of the land and the division of the river by islands favored the St. Anthony side. At first all the business except farming was on the east side, but October 8th, 1853, Mr. Chambers opened the "Pioneer Store" in a building on Bridge Square belonging to Mr. J. H. Stevens, and the following year several more were built.

In 1854, the township of Minneapolis was supposed to contain nearly one thousand inhabitants and had one newspaper, the Northwestern Democrat; one physician, Dr. A. E. Ames; two firms of lawyers, Cornell and Hanson, and Atwater and Jones; religious services were instituted by the Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists.

During this year a land office was established with M. L. Olds register, and R. P. Russell receiver. Messrs. Olds and Russell held their offices until 1857, when the land office was removed to Forest City. At one time there was a great rush of business at this office, and from $500 to $20,000 was paid over in a single day. It may be recorded here that at the time of the Sioux outbreak in 1862, the land office was again located at Minneapolis, with Dana E. King register, and Mr. Jordan receiver. In 1863 Dr. H. Fletcher was appointed receiver, and in the winter of 1864, B. F. Baker register. In 1866, the office was again removed to Forest City.

In 1854, one saw mill, and the first in Minneapolis, aside from the old government mill, was located just below the falls, with a capacity of 1,500,000 feet per annum, besides a large amount of shingles. The mill was running under the direction of C. King. A contract was entered into in 1855, by Messrs. Bassett and Canney with Messrs. Pomeroy and Bates mill builders, for the erection of a steam saw-mill at the mouth of Bassett's creek, which empties into the Mississippi about half a mile above the suspension bridge, beginning the following spring. This mill was completed the following year, and its capacity was estimated at from five to ten million feet per annum. Another mill was erected the following year, 1857, half a mile above the last, by A. Wolcott & Co., with an estimated capacity of 30,000 feet per day.

The estimated capacity of all the mills at the falls built and building in 1857, was from 60,000,000 to 75,000,000 feet per annum. Thus began the great lumber business of Minneapolis. In another part of this history we shall see to what an extent it has since developed. In 1853, Thos. Chambers's store on Bridge Square was the only store in Minneapolis, and this was burned in April of the following year, but was rebuilt on "Hennepin street." In 1854 nine stores are reported, Chambers', Messrs. J. I. Lewis & Co.'s, W. D. Babbitt's, Samuel Hidden's, Jackins & Wright's, Dr. H. Fletcher and James B. Mills', Warren Sampson's, Tutts, Reynolds & Whitmore's, Dane & Calh's, hardware. In 1855, this number had increased to seventeen, seven general, one dry goods and clothing, one fancy and staple dry goods, one clothing, two hardware, two drug, one book and two jewelry and watch stores. Besides these were painters, carriage and sleigh makers, blacksmiths, boot and shoe makers, gunsmith, tailor, bakery and harness maker. We find three land agents, one newspaper, one hotel, two livery stables, two brick yards, one saw-mill. Four churches had been organized, First Presbyterian, Baptist, Free Baptist and Methodist Episcopal. Two of these had houses of worship, Presbyterian and Free Baptist. Societies were represented by the Freemasons and Odd Fellows, and schools by a Central University and one district school.

Following the year 1855, and the reduction of the reservation, which enabled settlers to obtain perfect titles to their lands, the growth of the west side was as remarkable as that of the east. In 1857, the population was estimated at two thousand, an increase in the village of eighteen hundred in two years. The court-house was then building; the United States Land Office was located here; a twelve thousand dollar school-house was in process of erection; the Presbyterian, Free Will Baptist and Episcopal societies had church edifices. Many elegant private residences were also to be seen on both the east and west sides, and both cities were enjoying great prosperity. A board of trade had been organized, composed of the leading business men of both cities, and the union of St. Anthony and Minneapolis was already looked forward to as a probable and desirable event.

In Minneapolis at this time were forty-two business places, a number of real-estate dealers, several hotels and boarding houses, one printing office, three surveyors, four physicians and ten lawyers, a furniture factory opened in 1851, by B. E. Messer, Francis Sampson and Major Craft, to which was added the manufacture of wagons, sleighs, etc.

In 1858 Minneapolis, in accordance with an act of legislature approved March 1st, 1856, organized a town government with a council. Hon. H. T. Welles was elected president.

The boundaries of the town of Minneapolis, as described in the act of incorporation, were: beginning at a point on the Mississippi River where the line between sections 10 and 15 intersects the river, thence west on said line between sections 10 and 15 to the north-west corner of section 15, thence south on section line to the south-west corner of section 27, thence east on the south line of sections 27, 26 and 25 to the Mississippi River, thence up said river to the place of beginning.

The first session of the council was held July 20th, 1858, Mr. Welles presiding. Councillors elected in the several wards were: Isaac I. Lewis, first ward; Charles Hoag, second ward; William Garland, third ward; Edwin Hedderly, fourth ward; Mr. Todd, clerk. G. Henry Hamilton afterward became clerk and Mr. Morrison became councillor in place of Mr. Lewis.

In 1859 a new council was elected. Cyrus Breuer, President; Councillors, J. O. Weld, R. H. Pettit, N. S. Walker and H. E. Mann; Mr. Hamilton, Clerk to November 28th, when, in consequence of his resignation, O. L. Savory was elected. This board continued until 1861, when a new board was elected.

At the session of the legislature of 1862 the charter of incorporation was repealed in compliance with the demand of the citizens, who found the expense of the experiment too great for them to bear, and Minneapolis was placed back under the township organization.

In 1861, the legislature passed an act giving town boards new powers. Under this act S. H. Mattison, Judge E. B. Ames and Miles Hills composed the board, with Thomas W. Hale, Clerk. Colonel C. Aldrich, George A. Brackett and O. M. Laraway followed, succeeded by Judge E. S. Jones, J. M. Eustis and R. P. Russell.

In February, 1867, the City of Minneapolis was incorporated by act of legislature.

Minneapolis and St. Anthony were united by an act of legislature, approved February 28th, 1872, and on the 9th of April, the union was completed by the organization of the new city council. For some time after the consolidation of the two cities, harmony did not exist in the council. Many of the citizens of St. Anthony regretted the change which gave their city a new name and destroyed its individuality. Each division assumed its own financial management so far as pertained to contracts existing previous to consolidation, and each maintained its own schools, levying, collecting and disbursing its school funds as before.

Two or three years before the union, an unsuccessful attempt was made to obtain a vote to purchase Nicollet Island for a park, and grounds for the public buildings of the county. It has since been a matter of general regret to the citizens of Minneapolis, that this project, which would have added so much to the attraction of the city, was not successfully carried out.

CHAPTER LXI.

POLITICAL HISTORY OF ST. ANTHONY—FIRST COUNCIL—TEMPERANCE MEETING—SALARIES—LIST OF OFFICERS—CONSOLIDATION.

On the 13th day of April, 1855, the first council of the city of St. Anthony was convened with the following officers present: H. T. Welles, Mayor; Orth, Spencer, Stanchfield, Lippincott, Dorr and Cummings, Aldermen. Edward J. Hall was chosen clerk pro tem, and the official oath was administered to the Mayor and Aldermen. St. Anthony was thus enrolled among the cities of the West. W. F. Brawley was elected city clerk for the term of one year, after which the Aldermen drew by lot for the one and two year terms with the following result. First ward, Benjamin N. Spencer, one year. John Orth, two years. Second ward, Daniel Stanchfield, one year, Edwin Lippincott, two years. Third ward, Caleb D. Dorr, one year. Robert W. Cummings, two years. The usual committees were then appointed by the Mayor, and the first session of the council of St. Anthony closed. At the next session, April 14th, the following day, the council proceeded to elect the following officers: Ira Kingsley, Treasurer; S. W. Farnham, Assessor;

Benjamin Brown, Marshal; E. L. Hall, City Attorney; E. B. Nash, Collector of taxes; Isaac Gilpatrick, Supervisor of streets. Mr. Farnham declined the office of assessor, and May 7th, Mr. Brott was elected in his stead. At a subsequent meeting April 23d, C. B. Chapman was elected City Surveyor, and at a meeting still later, Lardner Bostwick was elected City Justice. Alderman Cummings was authorized to lease a room for the use of the council.

Proposals for printing were received from C. G. Ames of the St. Anthony Express, and G. D. Bowman of the Northwestern Democrat. In consequence of a tie vote on the proposals, the Mayor gave the casting vote in favor of the Democrat, which paper by this means obtained the city printing. The first petition brought before the city council was from G. E. H. Day and others for the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Sabbath, and was referred to Aldermen Stanchfield and Cummings, committee on licenses. On their recommendation a meeting of citizens was called at the school-house in the third ward, April 19th, in order to give the friends of temperance a fair hearing upon the subject of the petition. At this gathering a petition was presented by Mrs. King, signed by a large number of ladies, praying the council to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within the city limits. The meeting was addressed by Messrs. Nourse, North, and Rev. Mr. Creighton, and considerable feeling was manifested. The petition was referred to the committee on licenses. The result of the agitation was an ordinance fixing licenses at fifty dollars per year, no license to be issued for a period less than one year, attaching moderate penalties to the selling of liquors without license. Gambling was forbidden, drunkenness and fighting prohibited, and dealers strictly forbidden keeping their saloons open on the Sabbath, or later than ten o'clock in the evening during the week. Ordinances for the government of the city were adopted April 23d. Salaries were fixed for Mayor, $200 per year; Aldermen, $100; Marshal, $300; City Attorney, $250; Clerk, $325, and three per cent, on all taxes collected, as compensation for services of collector. The bonds required were, of Treasurer, $5,000; Assessor, $500; Collector, $5,000; Supervisor of Streets, $500; Clerk, $500;

City Attorney, $500; Surveyor, $300; Marshal, $5,000.

A watch-house was authorized and built September 1st, where now is the corner of Seventh street and Central Avenue. About four years since, the old watch-house was sold to private individuals. Several changes took place in the officers the first year. Ira Kingsley resigned and was succeeded by Z. E. B. Nash; Isaac Gilpatrick resigned and was succeeded by W. H. Townsend; G. F. Brott in like manner was succeeded by J. B. Gilbert; H. Hechtman was appointed supervisor of streets in place of W. H. Townsend, who resigned, and November 12th, Mr. Hechtman was succeeded by J. M. Brewer. October 29th, Benjamin Brown tendered his resignation as marshal and collector, and November 12th Seth Turner was appointed in his stead. The offices of marshal and collector were so far combined as to be vested in the same officer, who received a stated salary as marshal and a percentage as collector.

At the first regular meeting of the council following the election of April 7th, 1856, a resolution was offered and passed, dispensing with salaries of Mayor and Aldermen, and combining the offices of Clerk and Comptroller and fixing the salary at $225 per annum. At the same meeting an effort was made to elect the several officers to be chosen by the council, but without success. A struggle ensued and bitter feeling was engendered. The meeting adjourned, but the wrath was nursed and kept warm to break out in a new war at the next meeting, April 19th, when it was carried so far as to declare the Mayor out of order and elect one of the dissenting Aldermen chairman. Again they adjourned without accomplishing any business, but at a meeting held May 5th, oil was poured on the troubled waters and the election of officers proceeded. It was also voted to occupy the office of Lardner Bostwick as council room. In August following, the ordinance, combining the offices of Marshal and Collector was repealed. In March, 1857, the city was divided into four wards. Following the election of April, 1857 the offices of Assessor and Supervisor of Streets were separated. May 31st, 1858, the first police force was organized, to consist of the City Marshal and such policemen as may from time to time be appointed by the Council. The ordinance provided that the Mayor should be at the head of the police department, and that the Aldermen should co-operate with the Mayor in enforcing the laws, and should have power to make arrests either with or without process.

OFFICIAL ROSTER OF THE CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS.

In 1867, the city of Minneapolis was organized. The first officers were elected February 19th, 1867, and took the official oath at the office of the Town Clerk February 26th, following. March 16th, the council designated the bounds constituting the fire limits, fixed upon the amount of bond required of the several officers and awarded the city printing to T. S. King of the Atlas Printing Company. At the same meeting it was decided to employ four policemen at sixty dollars per month. Several new offices were created during the remainder of the year, and a number of ordinances added for the better government of the city. A board of health was established, and Dr. Lindley appointed health officer. The amount required in the City Treasurer's bond was three hundred dollars.

CHAPTER LXII.

AFTER THIRTY YEARS—STREETS AND AVENUES — BUILDINGS — STATISTICS — POPULATION — DEVELOPMENT OF THE WATER POWER.

After following the settlement and growth of Minneapolis until its population became so numerous that it was possible to mention only the few who had become conspicuous, from large fortunes made by the rapid advance in prices and skillful business management, or from receiving the honors of the people in consequence of enterprise, public spirit and high talent, it will be more interesting to leap over the intervening years and take a view of the city as it appears in 1881, with its population of fifty thousand, covering an area of nine square miles with houses, the largest city north-west of Chicago and Milwaukee, and except St. Louis and Kansas City, the largest between the Mississippi river and the Rocky mountains.

The surface of the country, from its almost level character, admits of extension in every direction, and at the same time obviates the necessity of heavy and expensive grading. The same feature was favorable for regularity in the streets, and the beauty of the city would have been enhanced, had the irregular course of the river been disregarded, and the streets laid out north and south, instead of following its tortuous course. At a distance from the river the north and south course is adopted and the streets are regularly laid out, but at the intersection of streets running by the first plan and the new one, many triangular pieces are formed which are a blemish to the appearance of the city. It must in justice be stated, however, that the regularity both in the course of the streets and avenues, and the numbering of houses is better than in most cities east or west. The streets and avenues are named numerically, except the four principal avenues, Washington, Hennepin, and Nicollet on the West and Central on the East Side, and a few formed by the irregularity of the city before mentioned. The streets run north and south, and the avenues east and west, except where varied by the original plats, which were made to conform to the river. The streets and avenues are wide, averaging about one hundred feet. In the central portion of the city the old wooden buildings have been largely replaced by substantial and elegant brick and stone structures, and the reconstruction is going rapidly forward, which gives the business portion of the city somewhat the appearance of solidity characteristic of the older cities in the east.

Beyond the business centre are seen many beautiful private residences, giving evidence of wealth and refinement, differing, however, from the wealthy cities of the east by having larger lots and more extensive grounds laid out with taste. Indeed the resident portion of the city unites the comfort and freedom of large villages with the advantages of a city of considerable wealth.

The most valuable building material is the native limestone, which underlies large areas in and near the city, in strata of uniform thickness, convenient for the erection of substantial and elegant structures. This stone is largely utilized for both public and private building. Extensive deposits of brick clay also exist, from which builders are furnished with bricks in color and texture like those of Milwaukee. It must be added, though it may seem superfluous in a great lumber city like Minneapolis, that soft and hard timber, at low prices, furnishes material for the construction of the greatest number of buildings.

In addition to the materials mentioned, many building stones of greater beauty are brought from a distance, for ornamental finish or for the entire construction of buildings. Prominent among these foreign materials are the Ohio sandstone, from which we have many buildings, and the Duluth brownstone, used for the new Westminster Presbyterian church and other edifices.

The streets are well lighted with gas, except in parts remote from the centre where the mains have not yet been extended; here gasoline is used.

The system of sewerage is extending rapidly, and already forms a network draining a large portion of the city; this is an herculean task in a climate where pipes are laid nine feet below the surface to avoid the action of the frost. A general tax is levied for that portion of the sewerage which benefits the city at large, and special taxes are assessed on the abutting property to provide for this expensive improvement.

At the session of the legislature of 1881, a bill was passed authorizing the city to issue bonds to the amount of $50,000 to carry out extensive plans for sewerage.

The amount invested in buildings in 1879, as shown by the annual report of the Board of Trade, to whom we are indebted for these and other facts in regard to the present status of Minneapolis, was $2,713,600, an increase of $1,605,750 over the year 1876. An accurate measurement of the frontage of all buildings erected during the year 1879, gives a distance amounting to two and a half miles solid, with no allowance made for streets.

During the year 1880, the report shows a frontage of business blocks greater by 329 feet than the previous year, and a gain of 177 in the number of residences built, over the previous year. The total amount of building in 1880 was: twenty-six business blocks for forty-three stores, with a frontage of 1,187 feet, costing $257,000; eleven frame stores, 224 feet, $16,900; two elevators, $70,000; expended on three flouring mills, $375,000; other improvements on mills, $60,000; manufacturing buildings, $136,500; four school buildings, $38,000; expended on four churches, $62,000; county jail, $60,000; four railroad buildings, $26,000; street-car and other public stables, $27,000; four hundred and seventy-three residences, costing over $1,000 each, total, $888,200; estimated eighty other residences at $800 each, $64,000, making a grand total of $2,080,600. Total sales of real estate during the year, $5,103,017; the largest included was the sale to J. J. Hill by Water Power Company, $465,000. The increase in business blocks and private residences though large was not equal to the demand, and at present a scarcity exists in both.

The increase in mercantile and manufacturing interests was greater during 1880, than any preceding year, but the demands of the new country developing and looking to Minneapolis for supplies, have been in excess of the facilities furnished here. In short, the demands in all departments of enterprise in the city are greater than the supply, calling in imperative tones for more capital in the various departments of the city trade to keep pace with the enlarged and growing demands of the surrounding country. More than 1,600 miles of railroad have been built during the year, extending into country tributary to this city, and still greater plans are on foot for the ensuing year. A summary of business for five successive years is as follows: 1876, $21,017,819; 1877, $30,912,152; 1878, $47,149,875; 1879, $62,801,513; 1880, $88,298,820. The total bonded indebtedness of the city in 1880, was $1,101,000, and $395,162.42 was levied in taxes during the year.

The fact that the tendency of capital, in utilizing the water-power, is directed to the construction of great flouring mills with such improved facilities as to manufacture large quantities of flour without the employment of many hands, is not conducive to the most rapid growth of the city, but it is also true that the mills now building are of such mammoth proportions and employ so large a capital in construction and operation, that small concerns will eventually be unable to compete, and capital will be directed into other channels. The building of flouring mills has been stimulated by high prices, and doubtless the business will be enlarged to keep pace with the increasing acreage in the north-west. The undeveloped power of the falls, admits of the introduction of all kinds of mechanical industries under most favorable conditions for success. In the chapter on mills and manufactories, will be seen the extent to which the power is already utilized and the amount still unused. In view of the fact that the growth of Minneapolis, hitherto has been due to the development of the power of the falls, we may safely predict a very large city when this power is utilized to its full extent, especially if manufactories of furniture, woolen and cotton goods, and other industries employing many laborers are multiplied.

It may be interesting and profitable to compare the growth of this city with that of others, partly by way of indication of what its future may be, and partly to satisfy the desire of every western citizen to know how his favorite city has held her own in the strife for supremacy. New York city in 1656 had a population of one thousand; in 1756, at the end of the first century of its existence, a little over ten thousand; in 1800, over sixty thousand; in 1820, nearly one hundred and twenty-four thousand; in 1830, over two hundred thousand; in 1880, 1,206,590. Chicago came into existence in 1831, with about the same number of houses which Minneapolis had in the spring of 1854. In 1837 its population was 4,170; in 1840, 4,853; in 1850, 29,963; in 1860, twenty-nine years from its first life, 112,172; in 1870, 298,977; in 1880, 503,304. Minneapolis in 1870, fifteen years from the time when the land was opened for settlement, had a population of 18,079, and in 1876 was estimated at 32,000; in 1880, after twenty-five years, 48,053.

These figures are gratifying to the vanity of north-western enthusiasts and encouraging to property owners in the infant city, as they show a growth with which the older cities of the country can afford no comparison, and a parallel to Chicago, the greatest prodigy on the continent. Chicago, at the sixth year of its existence, had 4,170; Minneapolis, at fifth, 5,809. Chicago at the ninth year, 4,853; Minneapolis at the fifteenth, 18,079. The percentage of growth from 1870 to 1880, 269 per cent., was not equaled by any city of equal size on the continent.

The population of Minneapolis by the census of 1880 was 48,053, but at the present time doubtless exceeds 50,000.

The projected plans for machine-shops connected with the great trunk lines extending west promise to add immediately, thousands to the permanent population of the city, besides the number temporarily employed in the construction of new buildings and new roads. Minneapolis is emphatically a busy city, and visitors from the east are disposed to find fault with a town whose citizens cannot find time to waste in idle talk. The recent purchase of the east-side water-power by James J. Hill, manager of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba railway, has given a new impetus to the manufacturing interests. The purchase was made March 1st, 1880, for a private company, consisting of James J. Hill and others interested in operating the railway, though a distinct company, and the price paid was to the St. Anthony Water Power Company, $425,000, and to Mr. Eastman for a few privileges not controlled by that company, an additional sum of $42,500, making a total investment of $467,500.

The city has no marked characteristic except the great river with its wonderful water-fall, and the industries which it supports. Of all the industries, that of the flouring mills is the foremost, and of such extent as not only to characterize Minneapolis as a milling city, but also to entitle it to the position of the first in the world. The three great mills are the Washburn A., with capacity, when complete, estimated at 4,200 barrels, the Pillsbury A., in process of building, estimated at 4,800, and the Crown Roller at 3,000, besides twenty-three more making a total daily capacity of 25,225 according to the estimate of the Board of Trade.

In giving a history of the milling interests of Minneapolis, it will be necessary to give a sketch of the changes the falls themselves have undergone since their first discovery, but we shall not attempt to usurp the ground covered by the "Pioneers and Explorers." That the falls received their name "St. Anthony" from Father Hennepin has been already recorded, and the everlasting rocks, bear testimony to their "change of venue" by a gorge cut from the mouth of the Minnesota river to St. Anthony. The strata of rock forming the bed of the river was superimposed upon white sandstone of a very friable nature. From this cause the recession proceeded rapidly by the combined action of frost and water, for the erosion destroyed the sandstone substratum, and the action of the frost and water combined broke down the rock bed of the river. Still another destructive force was added, namely the hand of man in attempting to make the power more available. The value of a waterfall consists as much in its availability as in volume and height, and in these respects the Falls of St. Anthony excel, owing to the high bluffs on each side of the river above the falls, through which sluices can be cut, conducting the water to flumes or canals parallel with the main channel. Besides, the water-power companies, by dams built for the advantage of mills situated on each bank, forced the flood of the river to about one-third the natural width of the stream and thus hastened the disintegration. The work of destruction by these various causes continued silently but nevertheless with alarming rapidity. The attention of citizens was occasionally called to the danger when the undermining process caused an unusual recession, as in 1851, when several rods, ninety feet by actual measurement, of the superstratum fell in one huge mass in the foaming water. It will be interesting to many to find here a record of the exact location of the crest of the fall in 1850. We, therefore, give points from which any one may ascertain it, and note the recession.

A line running south 50 deg. west from the north-west corner of the "Pillsbury A" mill, would strike the bend in the crest of the falls, as it was in 1850, about 250 feet west of its eastern end at the old frame saw-mill, and would follow its crest to a point on the west side, nine feet above the lower corner of the Minneapolis Mill, of Crocker, Fisk and Company. The data are obtained from records made and preserved by C. W. Christmas. Persons interested, by standing at the corner of the Pillsbury A mill, can easily follow this line and mark the recession of the falls during the thirty years which have elapsed since the record was made.

Dr. S. H. Chute, in 1864, excavated a tunnel eight feet in diameter, beginning just below the Chalybeate springs, through the soft sand rock about two hundred feet in a straight line, thence parallel with the river to the fall, for a tail-race, in order to secure greater head in utilizing the power. Into this subterranean channel, it was supposed, after encasing it with masonry or sheet iron, the waste water from many mills could be conducted. The work was never completed, but the eroding tooth was by this means, admitted to cut more rapidly at the very vitals of the power. This excavation was called Chute's cave, and visitors at the falls were invited to explore its dark regions in a boat kept there for the purpose by persons interested in a place of resort near the spring. The attractions here were the mineral water, which still continues to flow in great abundance from fissures in the rock, a fish pond and a few curiosities of the animal kingdom. The view of the falls with these extraordinary inducements, rewarded the tourist for the fatigue of descending the long stairway to the bed of the river, and the patronage of swing, boat and restaurant compensated the enterprising owner. The springs continue to furnish medicinal water, but the remainder gave place during the winter of 1880-1, to the progressive enterprise of mill building. During the winter of 1880-1, occurred the breaking down of the limestone ledge above the tunnel. Into the hole, tumbled a part of Main street. A tree was swallowed up to the limbs, and the corner of a mill standing near, settled to an alarming extent.

The danger was near the large and expensive Pillsbury A, but fortunately its foundations are secure.

Still another and the most dangerous tunnel, was the excavation on Hennepin Island, begun in 1868 by W. W. Eastman and others, at the foot of Hennepin Island, and intended to extend under the island and under the river to Nicollet Island, where the manufacturing establishments were to be located. Before the work approached completion, and while it was progressing under the river above the island, dangerous percolation began which continued through new and enlarged apertures, but the alarm did not discontinue the work until the laborers were driven out by the rapidly increasing torrent, by which one of their number was swept away into the current below and narrowly escaped drowning, while the remainder hurried out by a perpendicular shaft that had been sunk at the head of Hennepin Island.

The power of the falls was thus turned to their own destruction; the sides of the tunnel dropped in and down went the rocks forming the river's bed, with logs and debris in a tangled mass. The alarm was given "The falls are going out!" and citizens as well as proprietors joined in the effort to stay the destruction. The alarm was well grounded, for the rock bed of the river only extended twelve hundred feet above the falls, having at the time of the settlement of St. Anthony cut its way nearly through the limestone layer. The temporary expedients resorted to were continued, renewed and changed, until by an appropriation from the national government, municipal aid and private contribution, elaborate plans were carried out for permanent preservation of the falls. The companies controlling the water-power made, in 1866, an attempt to protect the crest of the falls by a timber apron, but this was carried off in the spring following.

A survey, made in 1869, by Major G. K. Warren, called the attention of the general government to the necessity of arresting their destruction. James B. Francis, of Massachusetts, was summoned to examine the falls and report as to the best means of averting the catastrophe. He recommended as a protection against the recession of the crest, a substantial apron of timber with heavy crib-work at the bottom: for the dangerous tunnel, that it be filled for four hundred feet with a puddle of clay and gravel; against the third danger, the action of frost, that the limestone be kept flooded by low dams.

No time was lost in carrying out energetic measures. A "Board of Construction," appointed by citizens, set about building the apron, and private enterprise and government aid, united in the work. Government appropriations amounting to $555,000 were made, beginning in 1870 and ending with that of March 3d, 1879. A concrete wall was laid in the bed of sandstone, beneath the limestone ledge, six feet in thickness at the base and four feet at the top, and forty feet in height, extending entirely across the river, thus effectually preventing any further leakage. The amount contributed by the citizens of Minneapolis toward the preservation of the falls was $334,500. The whole cost of the improvement thus buried out of sight, was nearly a million of dollars, but from it came the preservation of the falls with its one hundred and twenty thousand horse-power and the future hope of Minneapolis.

CHAPTER LXIII.

MILL BUILDING—A LARGE GRIST—FIRST SHIPMENT OF FLOUR—WEST SIDE MILLS—THE EXPLOSION—NEW PROCESS—MILLS AT PRESENT.

Mill building began with the old government mill built in 1822. To the saw-mill was attached a single run of stone for grinding corn, for the use of the large number of cattle and horses employed at Fort Snelling. A penstock was constructed from the crest of the falls to the wooden "flutter-wheel" of the old-fashioned mill. The mill occupied the site of the present mill of Sidle, Fletcher, Holmes & Martin. Twenty-five years passed away before further progress was made, when Franklin Steele built the dam, saw-mill and other improvements already mentioned in this history.

Steele's mill was above the location of the present structures on the east side, and run under a head of six feet. In 1856, the "St. Anthony Water-Power Company" was chartered, with Thomas E. Davis, Fred C. Gebhardt and J. F. A. Sandford of New York, Richard Chute and Franklin Steele of St. Anthony, and John S. Prince, of St. Paul, as incorporators. To this company Mr. Steele and Mr. Arl Godfrey, who had purchased one-twentieth of the power, transferred their entire east side water-power. February 27th of the same year, the "Minneapolis Mill Company" was formed, with R. P. Russell, M. L. Olds, George E. Huy, Jacob Elliott, Robert H. Smith and D. Morrison as incorporators.

In the fall of 1851, R. C. Rogers started a small feed and grist-mill in a rude way at the end of the row of saw-mills, built by Mr. Steele on the east side. On the same site, the following year, Mr. Steele built a one-story mill and Mr. Rogers put in two run of stone, one thirty-six and the other thirty inches in diameter. The bolting reel was twelve feet long and thirty-two inches in diameter, and the cleaning machinery was zinc and sheet iron, perforated with a hand punch. What a contrast is here afforded to the immense structures now lining the banks of the river. In 1853, Mr. Larpentour, a farmer, brought in a thirty-two bushel grist which was recorded as a marvel, and the largest grist ever ground at the falls.

The Island mill was completed in 1854, by Captain John Rollins, John Eastman and R. P. Upton, 40x60 in size, three stories high above the basement, and began running with three run of stone, which was soon increased to five. The wheat for so large an enterprise could not be furnished by the surrounding country, and was therefore transported from Iowa by boats to St. Paul, and thence to St. Anthony by teams. The flour found ready sale among the thousands of new settlers in the territory, at $9 to $12 per barrel in sacks; but the bran and middlings were difficult to dispose of. The former was frequently spouted into the river, while the middlings were ground over and sold as "red dog," a low grade of flour, to the Indians. In 1858, a little flour was shipped to the east, the beginning of the great business now carried on so extensively with New England, as well as with all parts of this, and other countries. The circumstances attending the first shipment of flour were said to be as follows: Mr. Getchell, of Champlin, sent a consignment of flour to New Hampshire, this being in his estimation a safe, though an awkward method of sending money, resorted to for the want of bills of exchange, and, as it proved satisfactory, an order for one hundred barrels soon followed, the first ever received at Minneapolis. The next difficulty was to obtain barrels in which to ship the flour, since there was no barrel maker short of Anoka; this man, a "wet cooper," split out the staves by hand, and manufactured very uncouth packages, compared with modern cooperage. The packing of flour, too, was by old fashioned prod or mangle, and the barrels branded "Minnesota Mills" were sent on at an expense of $2.25 per barrel. In 1863, improvements were added, including cooper-shops, additional runs of stone, and the modern style of packers. In 1869, the mill was rebuilt, and in 1870, the first flour, made from middlings, purified as well as could be done then, was shipped to New York. To the surprise of the shippers, it sold for fifty cents per barrel more than their best brands. In 1871, Brown and Martin became proprietors of the mill, and under their management the mill was remodeled and improvements made in the machinery. Eight middlings purifiers were added, and the mill was just ready to start, with a full supply of wheat in store, when, March 5th, 1872, the very night before they expected to start, the mill was burned to the ground without insurance. Thus ended the first effort to manufacture flour according to the modern process, just on the eve of its success.

Three other mills were erected on the East Side, viz: the "River Mills," afterward called the "Farmers' Mill," built in 1856 by B. C. Morrison and N. M. Prescott, a grist mill with first two, then three and afterward four run of stone, which was burned after a few years; the "St. Anthony Mill," built in 1864 by Messrs. Stanzwitz and Schober, burned about three years after its completion, while the property of Peter Schnusler and Company; the "Summit Mill," built on the island in 1865, by Messrs. Erb and Kassube, with four run of stone. This mill did not burn but came to an untimely end by reason of its foundations being undermined by the tunnel before mentioned.

We quote here from a valuable series of articles in the "North-western Miller," written by F. E.

Hesler, to whose researches there published, we are indebted for many facts relative to the history of the mills at Minneapolis. He writes: "So perished the mills of the East Side or St. Anthony, the pioneer structures that fathered the industry which has since grown to such vast proportions. What a marked change from the paltry shipment of ten barrels of unbranded flour sent to the seaboard by way of team and river, to the thousands of barrels, under brands whose names are legion, packed to-day and landed in three short weeks in the European markets. One run of stone then made one hundred barrels in twenty-four hours; now twenty-two to twenty-five barrels per run is considered an abundant yield. Then the dark, uncomely straight flour was difficult of sale; now the bright, snowy, patent process, world-wide in fame, is eagerly sought in every land, commanding the highest price in the markets of the world, and bringing millions of dollars annually to our coffers."

Milling on the west side began as soon as the "Minneapolis Mill Company" made preparations by a dam, sluices and other appliances, for utilizing the power. This company was organized, as we have seen, in 1856, and immediately began their improvements. A coffer dam was built to hold the water in check, and the solid limestone rock, which forms the bed of the river, varying from eighteen to forty feet in thickness, was blasted out, and the canal thus formed was extended to "Cataract" street, now Sixth Avenue south, a distance of over three hundred feet, seventy feet wide and fourteen feet deep. The first mill on the west side was built by Messrs. Eastman and Gibson, commenced in 1859, and called the "Cataract Mill." It was first built three stories in height, from the stone of the canal, with four run of stone, but has since outgrown the first modest pretensions. It has been operated since the first owners, by Welles, Gardiner, by Gardiner & Barber and now by D. R. Barber & Son.

The "City Mill" was built by Messrs. Perkins & Stirn in 1860, a two-run, frame mill, two stories in height above the canal, and near the site of the original government mill. This mill did a large custom business, and passed through several hands, but in 1879, it was destroyed by fire.

The "Union Mill" was built in 1863, by Henry

Gibson. It was a limestone structure, with four run of stone, but has been several times enlarged until it bears little resemblance to its first appearance.

In 1865 the canal, made in 1857, was extended six hundred feet further down the stream, giving room for many new mills, and increasing the fall at the lower end of the canal to forty-five feet.

In 1866, the "Arctic Mill," with three run of stone, was built by Perkins & Crocker; the "Minneapolis," by Frazee & Murphy, with six run; the "Taylor" mill, by Taylor Brothers, with six run, and the mill now called "Washburn B," with eleven.

The "Dakota" was built in 1867, by Messrs. Russell & Huy, a frame structure still standing, and operated by H. F. Brown and Company, the only wooden flouring mill in Minneapolis. The following mills were soon built: The Zenith, Palisade, Holly, Galaxy, Hemepin, Humboldt, Washburn A, Anchor, Pettit-Robinson, Excelsior, Washburn B addition, Morrison, and Model. The North Star was built in 1870, the Empire in 1872. The building of the Standard, Crown Roller, Northwestern, Trades, and the rebuilding of the Washburn A and Washburn C took place in 1879. The Galaxy, first built in 1871, was rebuilt in 1875, and again four years later.

THE EXPLOSION.

The event which is most famous in the history of the mills of Minneapolis, and which called the attention of the whole civilized world to the milling enterprise of this city, was the terrible explosion of May 2d, 1878, attended with great loss of life and property.

At seven o'clock in the evening, soon after the day-hands had given place to those employed at night, a terrific explosion took place in the Washburn A Mill, which shook the solid land like an earthquake, breaking thousands of dollars worth of glass in the city, and felt distinctly at St. Paul, ten miles away. The first shock was followed almost immediately by a second, and in a trice the whole vicinity of the mills seemed in a blaze. The rapidity of the flames was so great that the few inmates, even if not covered with the debris, could not escape, and, in the Washburn A, every man perished, to the number of fourteen. When investigation could be made, it appeared that the entire walls were thrown down outwardly by the concussion, which was said to be due to the explosive character of the dust of the mill mingled with common air, when brought in contact with flame. Explanation from the occupants of the mill could not be obtained, since only their mangled and charred bodies remained a silent testimony to the horrors of the catastrophe, and their faithfulness to duty was proven by the positions in which the bodies were found. The testimony of witnesses outside, or in neighboring mills, was to the bursting out of fire on the lower floor just before the explosion, and appearances indicated that the victims of the disaster were fighting the fire at the time the fatal explosion took place.

The disaster was not confined to the Washburn A, but communicated to the other mills in proximity, with loss of life and great damage. Five of these were destroyed in addition to the Washburn A, and five more were damaged. Eighteen persons perished, fourteen in the Washburn Mill, one each in the Zenith, Diamond and Humboldt, and one outside the mills. The mills destroyed were the Washburn A, called the "Big Mill," 100 by 138 feet on the ground and seven and a half stories high, filled with the most approved machinery and having forty-one run of stone; the Humboldt, eight run; Diamond, six run; Pettit, Robinson & Company, fifteen run; Zenith, six run; Galaxy, twelve run. The damaged mills were the Washburn B, badly shaken up; City, a wooden mill, considerably shattered; Morrison, slightly disarranged; Dakota, considerably disturbed; Palisade, much damaged.

The scene of the disaster was a tangled mass of debris, not one stone left on another. The total loss was estimated at nearly a million dollars.

The sympathies of the citizens were aroused, and liberal contributions were made to a relief fund for the widows and orphans, caused by the disaster. Many thousand dollars were paid over to the families of the victims, and the charity and liberality of the citizens was demonstrated.

Mill owners were here taught a lesson in regard to the management of their mills, and the risk to which they had unconsciously been exposed. In the new and larger mills which have since covered the scene of disaster, appliances have been introduced to remove the dust from the mill, and thus prevent the recurrence of a similar catastrophe.

As the present process of milling differs so materially from the old method of grinding by mill-stones, it will be attempted here to give a description of the new process as it appears to a tyro, avoiding the use of technical terms and without minute descriptions of the machines or processes. At the same time, taking one of the many mills as a sample, we shall attempt to exhibit the amount of business in the different branches connected therewith, to which milling gives rise. The basis and cause of the reformation in milling was economy. It was found that by the old method of crushing the wheat between mill stones, the rough treatment of the grain broke up the bran and mixed a portion of it with the flour, which with the dirt adhering to the kernel and in the crease and the germ, not only colored the whole product but compelled a large portion of it to be sacrificed at low prices. The milling reform began in Hungary under the name of the Hungarian process. Their plans were improved on in this city and improvements are still making in methods and machinery. Milling, as at present carried on, can only be said to be three years old; indeed, some improvements are now for the first time making in the new mills in process of construction. The method, in brief, is as follows:

The wheat at Minneapolis is purchased by the Millers' Association, an organization formed by the various millers for mutual profit and protection, when it is taken in and weighed at the elevators of the different companies. The cleansing process is the first step, consisting first of large separators by which straw and foreign matter is removed; second, it is passed through two oat and weed extractors, and through a cockle machine; it is next scoured and then passed through two sets of brushes, after which it is brought to the crushing machinery, which consists first of corrugated rollers. The first reduction or break, aims to crack open the berry without breaking it in fine pieces. It may be stated here that the outside coating or bran is tougher than the berry itself, and by careful breaking of the kernel it remains nearly entire and can be removed, which could not be accomplished if the kernel was crushed at once. It is now passed through what is called scalping reels by which any remaining dirt and the beard is removed. A little flour comes out at this stage, of a very low grade, called red-dog, the market for which is wholly in foreign countries, and among the Indians. It next passes to the second reduction, by corrugated rollers set closer, when it is broken again. At this stage three separations are made; some of the middlings, the finer portion, go to the purifiers, and the coarser to the third reduction, while some flour is saved, about five per cent, of a quality similar to the old process flour. At the third reduction, still by corrugated rollers, four grades of middlings are separated called according to their coarseness, No. 1 coarsest, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, and some flour is obtained of a better quality than the flour from either of the fore-going reductions, and called baker's.

The fourth break is a repetition of the process of the third with a similar result. At the fifth reduction only three grades of middlings are separated, No.'s 2, 3, and 4, as the successive reductions and separations have removed the coarser No. 1. The flour obtained at this point is baker's, but of a poorer quality than at the last stage. At the sixth and last reduction the middlings are all removed and are of the grades 3 and 4; the flour obtained here is of a lower grade than the last, but higher than the red-dog which was obtained after the first reduction. What remains is the bran. Thus far the process has been mainly one of cleaning and preparing the middlings for the manufacture of flour. The middlings are the best part of the wheat, and from them is now made the choice flour of market. The flour hitherto obtained has been only that part which was too much pulverized and therefore sifted out in preparing the middlings for the milling yet to come. Each of the four grades of middlings is purified separately by different machines, adapted to each grade, passing through four sets of machines. They are next sent to smooth rollers, of chilled steel, and highly polished, in order to remove small particles of the germ and bran that may remain, and to pulverize them finally. The flour now goes to the bolting chests and the product is the best patent flour. Any residue that has not been thoroughly reduced is sent to the old-fashioned mill-stones and the product, if from the No.'s 1 and 2 middlings, is a good patent flour, if from

No.'s 3 and 4, second grade patent. This gives in plain language the plan of the new milling process.

We will now attempt to give an idea of the business by describing the plan of operations laid out by C. A. Pillsbury and Company in connection with the Pillsbury A mill, now nearly completed. From the daily product of the mill, forty cars of flour and ten of bran are anticipated, which will form three full trains of cars with sixteen or seventeen in each train. In running to New York, five days at least is required by a freight train, and fifteen trains will therefore be required constantly to convey the product of the mill to New York, besides the returning of cars after their freight is discharged. In addition to this, a greater number of cars with wheat must arrive daily from the country to supply the huge monster with his daily food. The company will own and operate their own engine and train for removing grain from their elevator and transferring cars to different roads. The cars will be constructed according to a new plan, shaped like a hopper for unloading the grain by a spout. Two hundred coopers, with modern machinery, will be required to manufacture barrels for the mill.

As an instance of rapid transit and prompt business management, we report the following in reference to the Washburn A mill, the largest flouring mill in the world. A contract for flour to be delivered in Liverpool was to be filled at a certain day, but unforeseen difficulty prevented its manufacture until it seemed nearly impossible to fulfil it. In the emergency, arrangements were made with a through line to run a special train to New York without interruption, and the managers of the Inman line of steamers for Liverpool were ready to receive the freight on its arrival. By this means it reached New York in four and one-half days from the time of its manufacture, the steamer made the passage in eight days, and the seventeenth day from Minneapolis, the flour was sold as bread in Liverpool and London. Twenty-nine mills are now in operation in Minneapolis, or building, with a daily capacity of 25,225 barrels. The foreign demand is large and flour is shipped to all parts of Europe and even to Alexandria, Egypt, and South America. The first exporting of flour was attempted in 1878, and its superiority procured a sale of 109,183 barrels during the first year; in 1879, the export was increased to 142,598 barrels, and in 1880, to 769,142 barrels.

The Pillsbury "A" Mill. C. A. Pillsbury and Company, who already operate several large mills at the falls, are just pressing to completion their "A" mill, which, it is anticipated, will have greater capacity than any other flouring mill in the world. It is located in the East Division, corner of Main Street and Third Avenue south, and is built of stone, with seven stories and an attic. The dimensions are 115 by 175 feet, and the height from the bottom of the wheel pit to the roof is 187 feet. Work began on the mill in March, 1879, and about June 1st, 1881, one half of the mill will begin operation. The entire mill it is expected, will be completed January 1st, 1882. It is building under the management of William F. Gunn, engineer, James Pye, assistant engineer. A canal was built at great expense by the new Water-Power Company, to supply the power for the mill, for which C. A. Pillsbury and Company pay an annual rent of $5,000. The motive power consists of two victor turbine wheels, of twelve hundred horse power each, and are so placed as to secure fifty-two feet head; the wheels are so adjusted as to be operated either combined, or by the separate power of one. The building is heated by two large steel boilers, and is the most complete in all its appointments, of the mills at Minneapolis. Much taste is exhibited in the elegance of its architecture and internal finish. The entire cost of the mill, when completed, will be about half a million dollars, and its capacity is estimated by Engineer James Pye, at about four thousand barrels per day, though reported by the Board of Trade at four thousand eight hundred. It will have four hundred pairs of rollers, two hundred middlings purifiers of the Smith pattern, twenty run of stone, two hundred bolting reels, and all other machinery in proportion, and is provided with every convenience that modern improvement can suggest. It connects by a branch with the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, two tracks running in front and three in the rear of the mill. About one hundred and fifty men will be employed in the legitimate business of the mill, besides the outside industries to which it contributes employment.

C. A. Pillsbury & Company operate four mills on the west side, besides the A mill located on the east side. The "Pillsbury," built in 1865, is 60x80 feet, and six stories in height, including the basement. It is furnished with thirteen run of stone and four water-wheels, one twenty-five and one thirty-inch eclipse, and two turbines of twenty-five and thirty-six inches diameter, producing two hundred and fifty horse-power. The capacity of the mill is 500 barrels daily, requiring a working force of twenty-six men.

The "Empire" mill, erected in 1872, is in size seventy feet square, and four stories high above the basement. It has twelve run of stone, and two turbine wheels, which furnish three hundred horse-power. Twenty-five men are required in its operation. The capacity is 500 barrels per day.

The "Anchor" mill was built in 1874, destroyed by fire, and rebuilt in 1879. It has a capacity of 500 barrels per day, and is furnished with twenty sets of smooth and fifteen pairs of corrugated rolls, three run of stone, and twenty-six purifiers. The machinery is driven by a turbine wheel of forty-four inches diameter. This mill furnishes employment to twenty-six men.

The "Excelsior" mill, built in 1877, is a stone structure with brick front, 45x106 feet, with a height of four stories in front and six in the rear. It has about fifty sets of smooth and corrugated rolls, and a capacity of 500 barrels per day. The number of men employed is thirty. An eclipse wheel, of thirty-six inches diameter, furnishes 360 horse-power. This mill was originally equipped with thirteen run of stone, and during the winter of 1878 '9 was changed to the roller system.

The Washburn Mills. The massive "A" mill has been described by the press as "the largest mill in America, and the most complete mill of its size in the world." It is operated by Washburn, Crosby and Company. It is twice the size of the old A mill, and covers a ground space of 100x210 feet. Its height is eight stories above the canal, which the east end of the building fronts. From the platform over the canal, to the top of the cupola, is 158 feet. The walls are of stone, five feet thick at the base, tapering to three feet, which thickness is maintained to the third story. From this they taper to twenty inches at the top.

The walls and wheel-pits contain 371,250 cubic feet of masonry, and the timber used, exceeds 2,750,000 feet. One-half the mill is on the ground occupied by the old Washburn A. The building was begun immediately after the destruction of the old mill, rising phoenix-like from the ashes of its predecessor, but to greater dimensions and grander achievements. During the completion of the C mill, work on the A mill was suspended until the spring of 1879, and about the last of June, 1880, it was finished, and one-half of it in operation. It is built on the dual plan, and it required five months, with a large working force, to adjust the machinery in the part first put in operation. Some idea of its magnitude may be gained from the fact that nearly one thousand bushels of wheat were required to fill it up before the flour reached the packers.

The completed part started with a capacity of 1,500 barrels per day, employing seventy-five men, at a weekly expense of $1,000. The full capacity of the mill is 3,000 barrels. It is furnished with all the modern improvements in the milling art, and its product is eagerly sought by foreign purchasers. The lessons taught by the terrible disaster of May 2d, 1878, have not been lost in the construction and management of this mill. The scrupulous cleanliness of the rooms, and the ingenious appliances for straining the air from the purifiers, thus preventing the hazardous accumulations of dust, effectually banishes the fear of such a catastrophe as visited the mills in 1878.

Adjoining the mill on the north-east corner, is a two-story addition 24x45 feet, on the upper floor of which are the business offices of the mill, and on the ground floor, the elegant rooms used by C. C. Washburn, as his private office.

The whole structure, as well as its furnishing, shows the most accomplished workmanship, and a lavish expenditure of wealth. "The Northwestern Miller" of July 2d, 1880, says of it: "The mill as it stands, is a monument of Mr. Washburn's indomitable energy and perseverance, and a great credit to the city, for which its citizens should feel very thankful to the public spirited builder."

The "B" mill, built in 1866, is of stone, 60x90 feet on the ground, three stories high in front and five in the rear. It is operated by a sixty-inch turbine wheel of 700 horse-power. Above the original mill is a story of wood, the front end of which is used for a dust-room, and the back end for machinery. It has thirty run of stone, and its daily capacity is 500 barrels. Twenty-five men are employed in this mill.

In size and capacity the "C" mill ranks next to the "A," covering ground room of 95x145 feet, besides a storehouse adjoining, 10x83 feet, and five stories high, with a capacity of 80,000 bushels, exclusive of a large reserve space for storing bran, and the necessary room for cleaning and handling grain. It was first built in 1878, and suffered considerable damage from the mill disaster. In January, 1879, it was materially improved and enlarged. The first building had eleven run of stone, to which thirty run were added with the addition referred to. The mill is six stories high, only four of which are visible in front. It is operated by a sixty-inch American turbine wheel, and uses 600 horse-power. Seventy-five men are employed in and about the mill. Its capacity is 1,250 barrels per day.

Adjoining the A mill, on the site of the old Diamond mill, is an elevator 35x94 feet, with a capacity of 80,000 bushels, besides necessary room for cleaning, and storing bran.

The "Cataract" mill was built by Eastman and Gibson, in 1859, and was the first stone mill built at the falls. It has since been owned by Judd and Brackett, from whose hands it went to Commodore Davidson, and from him was purchased, in 1872, by D. R. Barber and Son, by whom it is owned and operated at present. The building then occupied ground room 15x60 feet, and was three stories high above the basement. In 1875 another story was added, and in the fall of 1879, an addition on the river side, of 20x45 feet, besides dust rooms, 16 feet high, built of wood, and iron clad. The basement story is 18 feet high and the others from 15 to 18 feet. It has six run of stone, ten sets of corrugated and sixteen sets of smooth rollers. Its capacity is 500 barrels per day, using from 90 to 100 horse-power with a reserve of 125 horse-power, furnished by a 48 inch turbine wheel. The mill is run night and day, furnishing employment to twenty-five workmen at an average weekly expense of $300. The mill is valued at $80,000, and like all the large mills at this point, sends its product to eastern cities and to Europe.

The "Arctic" mill, Hobart and Shuler proprietors, located on the east side of First street, is of stone, and was built by Perkins and Crocker in 1861. It is quadrilateral in form, fifty-five feet front, fifty-five feet on the east and thirty feet on the west end. It is six stories in height, including the basement. It has eight run of stone and six sets of rolls. A forty-eight inch turbine wheel of two hundred and fifty horse-power drives the machinery. This mill has a capacity of two hundred and fifty barrels per day, and requires a working force of ten men.

The "Crown Roller" mill, Christian, Brother and Company, was built in 1879-80, and is one of the largest mills at the falls. It is 124x145 feet in size and seven stories in height. The structure is of brick, with heavy stone foundation. The machinery of this mill consists of one hundred and twenty-four sets of rolls, fifty-four of which are corrugated, one hundred and eighty purifiers and eleven run of stone. Its wheel is a turbine of forty-eight inches diameter. The total daily capacity of the mill is 2,100 barrels. A working force of seventy men is employed, at a weekly expense of one thousand dollars. This mill has also storage capacity for 141,000 bushels grain, and is valued at $300,000.

The "Dakota" mill was built in 1867, and is a frame structure, 16x100 feet, four stories high above basement. It is owned and operated by H. F. Brown and Company. The equipment consists of six run of stone, four sets of smooth and one pair of corrugated rollers; the motive power is furnished by a turbine wheel of two hundred horse-power, one-half of which is used. Its daily capacity is two hundred and fifty barrels, and ten men are required in its operation.

The "Galaxy" mill, Cahill, Fletcher and Company, proprietors, was built in 1871 by W. P. Ankeny, burned in 1874 and rebuilt the following year. In 1877 it was purchased by Mr. Cahill, and was destroyed in the mill "disaster" of May, 1878. In 1879, it was rebuilt by Cahill, Fletcher and Company, the present owners and operators. It is of stone and covers a space 65x100 feet; six stories high in front, and eight in the rear. The mill has six run of stone, thirty sets of Stevens rollers, sixteen sets of smooth rollers, and twenty-two Kirk purifiers. A 36-inch victor wheel of two hundred horse-power drives the machinery. The capacity of the Galaxy mill is two hundred barrels per day. Twenty-five men are employed, whose wages amount in the aggregate to $350 per week.

The "Holly" mill was built of stone, in 1872, and in 1878 was bought by Hinkle Bros., who are the present owners. Its size is 50x65 feet, five stories high above basement. It has six run of stone and twelve sets of rollers, which are propelled by a forty-eight inch four hundred horse-power turbine wheel. At present one hundred and twenty-five horse-power is all that is required to produce daily two hundred barrels of flour. The working force is fifteen men, who receive $175 per week.

The "Humboldt" mill was erected on the east side of Second street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues south, by Bull and Newton. It is constructed of brick, 65x95 feet and four stories high above the basement. The average height of the stories is fourteen feet. The power is furnished by a Victor turbine wheel of one hundred and fifty horse-power. Originally it was furnished with fourteen run of buhrs, but in the fall of 1880 it was refitted by Hinkle, Greenleaf and Co., its present operators, with forty sets of rollers and ten run of stone, making its capacity seven hundred barrels per day. The mill is valued at $85,000.

The "Minneapolis" mill, owned by Crocker, Fisk and Co., was built in 1865, by Frazee, Murphy and McHerron. At the time it was furnished with five run of stone and produced three hundred barrels per day. Destroyed by fire in 1871, it was immediately rebuilt by its present owners, who increased its capacity to four hundred barrels per day. It is 55x60 feet, four stories high, and requires the labor of sixteen men. In 1880 the roller system was adopted, using twenty sets of smooth and corrugated rollers.

The "Model" mill, owned by Russell, Hinkline and Company, is of stone, and was built in 1877, by Russell, Roots and Crosen. It is five stories high including basement, is 42x62 feet, and is valued at $60,000. A 25-inch victor turbine wheel of 100 horse-power propels seven run of stone, five sets of smooth and five of corrugated rollers, which daily produce 250 barrels of flour requiring eight men at a weekly expense of $120.

The "North Star" mill, valued at $40,000, built in 1870, by McMullen and McHerron, was purchased of them in 1871, by H. J. G. Croswell, its present owner. It is 45x100 feet, three stories above basement, and has six run of stone and three sets of rollers, for which power is furnished by a 42-inch Dayton wheel. The establishment daily produces 250 barrels of flour, requiring a working force of ten men whose wages aggregate $150 per week.

"Northwestern Roller" mill is owned by Sidle, Fletcher, Holmes and Company. It was completed in January, 1880, and is 50x107 feet, eight stories high including basement and sub-basement, and is capable of producing 1,000 barrels per day, using a 44-inch turbine wheel of 600 horse-power. The mill is thoroughly equipped with latest improvements in machinery, and requires a working force of fifty-six men whose aggregate wages average $1,200 per week.

The "Palisade" mill was built in 1872-3, at a cost of about $100,000, by L. Day and Company. It is 60x80 feet, four stories high in front and six in the rear. The stories average twelve feet in height. The machinery consists of twelve run of stone, sixteen sets of smooth and four sets of corrugated rollers. It manufactures 500 barrels per day. The motive power is furnished by two turbine wheels, one 36-inch of 295 horse-power, and one 30-inch, of 194 horse-power. This firm pays fourteen men about $200 per week.

The "Pettit" mill was first built in 1875 by Pettit, Robinson & Company, and after the great disaster of May 2d, 1878, was rebuilt. It is 60x100 feet, six full stories including basement. Twenty run of stone, twenty-three sets of smooth and four sets of corrugated rollers, propelled by a forty-eight-inch, 450 horse-power turbine wheel, produce 800 barrels of flour per diem. The mill, which is valued at $100,000, gives employment to forty-five men whose salaries aggregate $500 per week.

The "Phoenix" mill, a stone structure, 50x66 feet, four stories high with basement, is located at the corner of Main Street and Sixth Avenue, S. E., and is valued at $60,000. It is owned by Stamwitz & Schober. A thirty-five-inch turbine wheel of fifty horse-power drives three run of stone, five sets of smooth and six sets of corrugated rollers, which are capable of producing 200 barrels per day.

In 1879 the "Standard" mill was built by E. V. White & Company, the present owners. It is of brick with a heavy stone foundation, is 50x155 feet, and six stories high, valued at $200,000. A forty-four-inch victor turbine furnishes 600 horse-power to produce 1,200 barrels of flour daily. It requires the labor of thirty-five men.

The "Trades" mill, a brick structure 40x59 feet, two-stories above basement, is owned by Hawthorne Bros. It has three run of stone and one pair of corrugated rollers for flour, and one run of stone for feed. Its capacity is 100 barrels of flour per day. A 50-horse power engine operates the machinery.

The "Union" mill built by Henry Gibson, in 1861, was the second stone mill on the west side. It stands on the river side of the canal, foot of First street, is 47½x60 feet, and four full stories high above the basement story. Its wheel is a 48-inch turbine, its capacity 200 barrels per day, using 75 to 100 horse-power, with a reserve of 200. It has six run of stone, and employs ten workmen, running night and day, at an average yearly expense for wages, of $7,800. It is owned and operated by G. W. Goodrich and T. H. Perkins—firm name G. W. Goodrich and Company. Their principal sales are in Philadelphia, New York, Boston and European cities, making heavy shipments on orders from Liverpool, London and Glasgow, about one-third of their business being with the last named points.

The "Zenith" mill owned by Day and Rollins, valued at $70,000, is a stone structure 40x102 feet, five stories high. It was first built in 1870-1, but was destroyed by the explosion of May 2d, 1878, and was rebuilt in November of the same year. It has ten run of stone, eleven sets of smooth, and four sets of corrugated rollers. A 48-inch turbine wheel of 200 horse power propels the machinery. The capacity of the mill is 500 barrels per day.

The "North Star" feed mill, owned and operated by F. C. Rideout & Co., is located on Second street and Fourteenth Avenue north. It is 30x40 feet, one and one-half stories high: has two run of stone and a seven-foot reel for bolting produce, and is driven by a twenty-five horse-power engine. This mill manufactures fifteen tons of feed daily.

This firm has another feed mill in connection with their store, at 101, Sixth Avenue south. It has one run of stone, driven by a ten horse-power engine. The capacity is five tons of feed per day.

J. E. Osborne's feed mill is located in the Eastman manufacturing building, on Nicollet Island. It has one run of stone, which has a capacity of one ton per hour.

Upton's grist mill, also located in the Eastman manufacturing building, has two run of stone, and produces feed at the rate of one and one-half tons per hour. The power is furnished by the East Side Water Power Company, from a shaft running throughout the entire building. In connection with this mill, Mr. Upton has a furnace and two revolving cylinders, each holding two barrels, for roasting coffee, peanuts, etc.

The "Tower" mill, operated by Richards & Cooley, owned by Phillip Herzog, is situated on Main street corner Third Avenue south-east. It is run as a grist and feed mill, and contains one run of stone and a bolter for graham flour, etc.

MILLER'S ASSOCIATION.

The Minneapolis Millers' Association was organized in 1867, with the following members: Judd and Brackett, Eastman and Cahill, Taylor Brothers, Frazee and Murphy, Darrow Brothers and Tomlinson, Perkins and Company. Officers: president, George Brackett; vice-president, W. F. Cahill; secretary and agent, Dwight Putnam; purchasing agent, O. Mays. In 1869 this association, to which the present organization owes its existence, was dissolved. In 1875 the association was revived, though again as an experimental institution, with representatives of seventeen large milling establishments as members. The officers of the experimental association were: president, D. R. Barber; secretary, F. B. Mills; general agent, W. H. Dunwoody. The object of the organization was to provide against dangerous competition among purchasers, and the purchase of wheat was put into the hands of one general agent, with sole charge of local buyers at all inferior points as well as proper distribution upon its arrival at Minneapolis, pro rata among the members of the association, according to the capacity of their respective mills. Money was furnished by the members for purchases when called for by the general agent.

The temporary organization took a permanent form in 1876, as a corporate body in accordance with the laws of the state, with the following incorporators: John A. Christian, C. H. Pettit, W. P. Ankeny, Leonard Day, J. S. Pillsbury, C. G. Hazard, D. R. Barber, George W. Crocker, Carroll T. Hobart, M. W. Getchell, H. J. G. Crosswell, M. B. Rollins, William F. Cahill, F. B. Mills, G. Schober, Henry Darrow, and B. S. Bull.

The first president of the reorganized association was W. P. Ankeny; secretary, C. G. Hazard, and general agent, C. S. Bunker. The stock of the company was increased from $35,000 to $75,000, distributed in shares of $50 each. The membership is open to any co-partnership, corporation or individual operating a flouring-mill in Hennepin county, on subscribing and paying for at least twelve shares of the stock. Of the total 359 run of stone in Minneapolis in 1880, 310 are represented.

The total amount of wheat purchased by the association, of the crop of 1879-80, up to December 30th, was 12,826,899 bushels. The grand total of the purchases of the association from June 1st, 1875, to December 30th, 1880, was 29,044,113 bushels. The prices maintained by the association during its existence prove it far from antagonistic to the interest of producers, for prices have ruled higher relatively, for wheat of equal quality in Minneapolis than in Chicago or Milwaukee. By their position as consumers, one profit is saved, which enables the association to pay higher prices than middle men can afford.

The present officers of the association are: president, W. H. Dunwoody; vice president, W. F. Cahill; secretary, F. H. Greenleaf; treasurer, D. R. Barber; general agent, E. B. Andrews; board of directors, C. C. Washburn, John Crosby, W. H. Dunwoody, C. J. Martin, J. Christian, C. M. Hardenbergh, J. A. Christian, E. V. White, D. Morrison, H. E. Fletcher, J. K. Siddle, C. A. Pillsbury, W. F. Cahill, L. Day, Geo. W. Crocker, M. B. Rollins, D. R. Barber, F. L. Greenleaf, F. S. Hinkle, W. H. Hinkle, and G. Schober.

ELEVATORS.

The Minneapolis Elevator Company was organized as a stock company under the general laws of the state, in 1879, with a capital stock of $500,000. Elevator A, located on Chestnut Avenue, near the city limits, was built in 1879 and the first wheat taken in January 20th, 1880. The building occupies a space of 86x182 feet on the ground and rises to a height of 147 feet from the foundations. The latter are twelve feet in depth and the superstructure is of the heaviest timber, covered with corrugated sheet iron, which makes it practically fire-proof. This elevator, which was built at a cost of $150,000, is the largest and most complete in its appointments of any in the west, the total capacity being 780,000 bushels. The arrangement of bins, and the machinery for unloading and elevating grain are of the latest improved patterns, the unloading apparatus being especially ingenious. Two men, with the aid of shovels operated by steam power, being enabled to unload a car containing four hundred bushels of wheat, in four minutes.

An engine room of brick, 30x40 feet, in which a Corliss engine of two hundred and twenty-five horse power is placed, is located west of the elevator. This engine is the only one of the kind in use west of Milwaukee and is a fine piece of workmanship. Its fly-wheel is seventeen feet in diameter, and the main shaft fly-wheel of sixteen feet diameter. The tracks of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, and the Minneapolis and St. Louis railways, pass the elevator, the greater part of the grain handled coming over these roads from the great wheat fields of the Northwest and from Southern Minnesota and Northern Iowa. The officers of the company are, L. Fletcher, president; C. H. Pettit, treasurer; F. S. Hinkle, secretary; and C. W. Tracy, superintendent.

The Union Elevator was erected in 1867 by a stock company, the members of which were W. W. Eastman, A. H. Wilder, Col. Merriam and D. C. Shepherd, known as the Union Elevator Company. It is located on Washington Avenue, corner of Ninth Avenue south, and is now known as Union Elevator Station, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway. For ten years it was operated by the elevator company, the railway company paying one and one-half cents per bushel for handling grain. In 1877, the railway company purchased the elevator and has since continued its management, using it exclusively for grain carried over that line. The capacity of the elevator is 130,000 bushels. Mr. E. E.

Holt, the present agent, has been in charge for the past twelve years.

The Pacific Elevator is located on Washington, corner of Fourth Avenue north, at the crossing of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway. It was erected in 1868, by W. F. Davidson, and has since been under his control. The building is 50x80 feet, and 120 feet in height, the capacity being 85,000 bushels. The number of bushels handled amounting annually to from five to seven hundred thousand. The receipts are from the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, and the Minneapolis and St. Louis railways. The elevator is furnished with a thirty horse power engine of the Ames pattern. Six men find employment at this elevator, under the supervision of Mr. J. F. Low, who has been in charge since September, 1870. In 1874, Mr. Low, by working a force day and night passed one million bushels of grain through this elevator.

The Pillsbury Elevator is located on Como Avenue, on the east side, on the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba and Northern Pacific railways. It was built in 1880-81, for the purpose of storing grain for the use of the A mill, and has a capacity of 250,000 bushels. The cost of the building, including the seventy-five horse-power engine, was $25,000.

The Central Elevator was built in 1881, by a company known as the Central Elevator Company, composed of Huntington, Potter and Ermentrout. This elevator has a capacity for 150,000 bushels. In its construction 700,000 feet of lumber were used. Cost of the structure was about $25,000. A sixty-five horse-power engine supplies motive power for the machinery. It is located on the line of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, at the crossing of Holden Street, and is intended for the storage of coarse grains only.

The necessity for large store-houses for wheat was one long felt in this city, and led to the erection of the elevators just described. At times, some of the mills have been obliged to close, on account of short supplies of wheat, but the construction of these elevators, with a total capacity for storing 1,500,000 bushels of grain, afford the millers reservoirs from which they can draw at all times, and have no fear of creating a shortage.

CHAPTER LXIV.

WATER POWER COMPANIES—PRODUCT OF LUMBER—BOOM COMPANIES—LUMBER MILLS.

Saint Anthony Falls Water Power Company. By an act approved February 26th, 1856, the Saint Anthony Falls Water Power Company was incorporated for the purpose of improving the water power on the east side. The following gentlemen appear as incorporators: Franklin Steele, John F. A. Sanford, Frederick C. Gebhardt, Richard Chute and John S. Prince. The capital stock was placed at $160,000, divided into shares of $100 each. The act authorized Franklin Steele to call the first meeting and act as president pro tem., until a president should be elected regularly. The act also provided that the officers of the company should be a president, secretary, treasurer and three directors, with power to increase the number of directors by a majority vote of the stock. The first meeting was held in 1856, in New York city, pursuant to a call issued by Mr. Steele, which was attended by all the incorporators. The officers elected were: Franklin Steele, president; Richard Chute, secretary and treasurer; and Franklin Steele, Thomas E. Davis, Fred. C. Gebhardt, John S. Prince, Richard Chute and John F. A. Sanford, directors.

A question arose as to the legality and validity of the organization, on account of the first meeting being held outside the territory of Minnesota, and in 1857 an act was passed, legalizing the action of the New York meeting; also allowing meetings to be held in the territory only. In 1866 an act was passed, which gave the corporation the privilege of holding meetings at any place its officers might deem most convenient. In 1871 an act was passed authorizing the company to change its corporate name and changing the official list to that of president and twelve directors, but made no provision for secretary and treasurer, consequently was not accepted by the company, as it was not passed at its request. In 1875 an amendatory act was passed, providing that the officers of the company should be, president, secretary, treasurer and six directors, permitting the stock-holders to increase or diminish the number of directors by a majority vote, also allowing them to issue one or more classes of preferred stock and to carry on any kind of mechanical or manufacturing business. The capital stock was increased to $640,000, and April 16th, 1880, the whole was purchased by James J. Hill, acting for a syndicate. The officers of the company are R. B. Angus, president; Edward Sawyer, secretary and treasurer; R. B. Angus, James J. Hill and Edward Sawyer, board of directors.

The Minneapolis Mill Company was incorporated February 27th, 1856, for the purpose of improving the water power at St. Anthony Falls, from the center of the main channel to the west side. The incorporators were, Roswell P. Russell, M. L. Olds, George E. Huy, Jacob Elliot, Robert H. Smith, D. Morrison, George K. Swift, C. C. Washburn, Leonard Day, J. N. Newton, B. F. Brown and B. F. Friday. The first officers of the company were, Robert Smith, president; D. Morrison, treasurer, and George E. Huy, secretary. The board of directors R. P. Russell, D. Morrison and Jacob Elliot. This company own a number of mill sites located upon the canal constructed by them, and also operate the lumber mills, known as the Platform Mills. The present officers of the company are, C. C. Washburn, president; W. D. Hale, secretary, and H. H. Douglass, engineer and agent. The business office of the company is on the canal, at the foot of Sixth Avenue south.

The business to which Minneapolis owed its growth entirely for many years was that of lumber. This industry has been extended and is now one of vast dimensions. Situated near the southern boundary of the extensive pineries, the falls were first utilized in reducing its logs to lumber. Providentially, in these extensive forests lumber for building, and wood for fuel was stored centuries ago, a fortunate provision against the inclemency of the vigorous climate.

Every ray of sunshine ever shed here has been accumulating in various forms of pent up heat, waiting for the progress of civilization with its subtle alchemy to utilize it for comfort and for the development of the resources of the country. Every log that comes down the river bears testimony by the rings of its successive year's growth, to the preparation of centuries for the habitation of enlightened men. Important and necessary as this material is to the welfare and progress of the country, it is nevertheless true that the destruction of the forest which it entails, may at some future day be a source of regret, for forests exercise a modifying influence on climate and rain fall, and besides add greatly to the beauty of a country, easy to destroy but difficult to replace. Still lumber for building and wood to burn must be had, and Minneapolis is well supplied with both.

Twelve lumber mills located at Minneapolis furnished, in 1879, 149,754,547 feet of lumber; in 1880, 195,452,182 feet, 67,058,500 shingles and 31,432,500 lath. The waste from these mills furnishes summer fuel to the citizens and provides a large portion of the wood supply of the city. Employment is furnished by them to a vast number of men, who are seen in the fall in picturesque costume, conspicuous by flaming red frocks and buskins, preparing for their winter camps in the pineries. Again they appear on the streets in March, with the earnings of the winter in their pockets, but out of employment until the ice goes out of the river, which usually happens about the middle of April. During the few weeks of interim between the breaking up of the lumber camps and the opening of the river and starting of saw-mills, thousands of idle men spend too freely the hard earned wages of the winter, and often make the streets noisy by disorderly carousals. Some are, however, employed in the necessary work of breaking up the ice, a work done annually in the spring, from the falls up two miles on the river, by the use of saws and dynamite to avoid the dangers attending an ice blockade which would be inevitable, where ice forms during the winter to a thickness of three or four feet. After the season opens, sparks fly from the high chimneys, and the hum of the busy saws continues night and day. The logs, resulting from the winter's work in the upper streams come down in great numbers guided to their respective destinations by the booms of the boom company.

The Mississippi Boom Company, F. Steele, J. R. Brown, Daniel Stanchfield, and their assistant construction company, was chartered February 3d, 1851, for a term of fifteen years, subject to alteration and amendment after five years. Capital stock was placed at $25,000, and shares at $100. Stock-holders liable between St. Paul and St. Anthony. They were permitted to charge for all logs sorted, rafted and delivered at foot of boom, fifty cents per thousand, besides scalage, or cost of measurement.

The St. Anthony Boom Company, W. Getchell, F. Steele, J. G. Lennon, S. W. Farnham, Ard Godfrey, Joseph Libbey and assistant construction company, was organized, their charges being forty cents per thousand. These companies were subsequently merged into the Mississippi and Rum River Boom Company. On November 29th, 1856, a meeting was held by the projectors of this company, and articles of incorporation drawn up, in expectation of recognition at the ensuing session of the territorial legislature, and stock to the amount of $9,200 subscribed. March 21st, 1857, the act of incorporation was passed, with capital stock at $15,000. The first board of directors was composed of C. F. Stimson, R. Chute, J. B. Bassett, John R. Lovejoy and D. M. Hall. The first regular meeting was held November 29th, 1856 and the following officers elected: John S. Prince, president; G. W. Buckmore, vice-president and James A. Lovejoy, secretary. At that time the limits of the company extended from the limits of the St. Anthony Boom Company four miles above the falls, to a point five miles up Rum river. In 1862, by a legislative act, the limits were extended up the Mississippi to Crow river and down to Nicollet Island. This act took from them all jurisdiction on Rum river. In 1867, another amending act, enabled them to increase their capital stock to $100,000, as fast as improvements in the river were made, and also to condemn lands needed for improvement, and regulate the admission and discharge of logs. In 1868, the limits were extended up Rum river to Cedar creek, and in 1877 extended up the Mississippi to Monticello, the present boundary. The officers of the company are: S. H. Chute, president; O. C. Merriman, vice-president; James A. Lovejoy, secretary and S. B. Lovejoy, treasurer. Board of Directors, S. H. Chute, O. C. Merriman, James A. Lovejoy, J. Dean and L. Day. The business office of the company is at No. 36, Central avenue.

In 1850, S. W. Farnham commenced the manufacture of lumber in the first saw-mill at Saint Anthony, the one erected by Franklin Steele in 1847-8. The equipment of the mill was but one sash-saw and one sash-machine. Mr. Farnham seems to have got the mills in fair working order, as he states that from 1852 to 1855, the annual production was 1,200,000 feet of lumber. In 1855 Mr. Farnham retired from the lumber business, but in 1859 he again engaged in it at the present location of the Farnham & Lovejoy mill on Hennepin Island. The establishment then contained one muley saw, two rotaries, one shingle and one lath machine, and furnished employment to fifty men, producing annually from three to four million feet. In 1861 J. A. Lovejoy became a partner, and the mill was improved and new machinery added. From that time until 1873, when the mill was destroyed by fire, the production amounted to from nine to twelve millions annually. The mill was rebuilt and began sawing May 1st, 1874, with two double circulars, one forty-saw gang, two double edgers, and other necessary machinery. The mill is in size 65x110 feet, and produces yearly twenty-five million feet of lumber. One hundred and fifty men find employment with this company. In connection with the lumber mill the firm have a planing-mill and dry-house located on the corner of Sixth Street and First Avenue north-east, the building and yard occupying one acre of ground. Four planers and other minor machines are operated, driven by an engine of one hundred and forty horse-power. There is also one dry kiln containing four stalls.

The Butler Mill, built in 1877, by L. Butler, was in the fall of 1879 purchased by Eastman, Bovey, and Co. This mill is 50x150 feet, located on the East Side platform. The machinery, consisting of one gang of saws, one double circular, one double block shingle machine, edgers, trimmers, etc., is propelled by a turbine water wheel of one hundred and eighty horse-power. The capacity is 80,000 feet of lumber, 50,000 shingles and 20,000 lath per diem, and the entire cost for 1880, amounts to about 13,000,000. The company employs upwards of eighty men and the pay roll is about $5,000 per month. The valuation of the structure is $30,000.

In 1869 Eastman and Bovey bought of the Minneapolis Mill Company, the Pioneer Mill, located on the West Side platform next to the river. In 1871 the firm was increased by the addition of H.

D. Eastman. In 1879 Mr. W. W. Eastman retired from the company.

The J. B. Bassett and Co. saw mill, located at the foot of Fifth Avenue south, was built in 1870, by its present owners. The building, 80x100 feet, is equipped with one double circular, one forty-saw gang, one shingle and one lath machine, five planers, one re-sawing machine, edgers, trimmers, and all the fixtures belonging to a first class saw-mill. The motive power is furnished by a sixty inch turbine wheel of two hundred horse power, one hundred and twenty-five of which is used to produce daily 90,000 feet of lumber, 30,000 shingles and 30,000 lath. The valuation of the mill is $60,000, and it requires sixty men to operate it, with a pay roll of $3,500 per month. In connection with this mill is a thoroughly equipped planing mill.

Capt. John Rollins built the "Rollins" saw-mill in 1871, and operated it until 1873. At that time it produced from 40,000 to 50,000 feet of lumber daily, using one twenty-four-saw gang, one double circular and one lath machine, run by an 150 horse-power engine. With an increased capacity of 75,000 feet per day, it produced in 1880, about 7,500,000 feet. F. P. Clark, who now owns the mill, purchased it in 1873, and put in a patent trimmer. He employs about one hundred men in mill and yards.

Mill No. 2, on the east side platform was built by Todd, Conner and Gaines, in 1870-1. About 1876 or 1877, Frederick Butterfield became the owner and allowed it to lie idle until April 1st, 1880, when Cole and Hammond leased, and still operate it. Shortly after the date of this lease, W. W. Eastman purchased and now owns the mill. A fifty-four inch, 200 horse-power turbine wheel propels one double fleet gang, two double rotaries, a shingle and lath machine, which manufacture daily 100,000 feet of lumber, 45,000 shingles and 30,000 lath, requiring eighty men to operate.

The Platform mills are owned and operated by the Minneapolis Mill Company, of which C. C. Washburn is president, W. D. Hale, secretary, and H. H. Douglass, engineer and agent. The company control seven of the mills on the platform, viz: Pioneer mill producing 15,000,000 feet, of lumber annually, with one gang and one circular; the Day mill having one gang and one circular, makes 10,000,000 feet per annum; Jones, one gang and one circular, 17,000,000; Crocker mill, one gang and one circular, 8,000,000; Lincoln, two gangs and one circular, 18,000,000; Pettit, one gang and one circular, 10,000,000. The Morrison mill is at present dismantled and idle.

The Goodnow and Hawley mill was built in 1871, on the site of the mill known as the "Moffat Mill," corner of First street and Fourth Avenue north, a small structure with a few circular saws and devoted principally to the manufacture of doors, sash and blinds. In 1873 Mr. Moffat sold to Mr. Bedford who took as partners Messrs. Boyce and Baker. The mill was by this firm enlarged and new machinery added. In 1875, it passed into the hands of W. C. Baker who operated it until 1878, when he leased it for a term of years to Goodnow and Hawley, the present proprietors. The capacity of the mill during a ten hours run is 75,000 feet of lumber, 35,000 shingles, and 15,000 lath. The machinery consists of one twenty-six-saw gang, one rotary saw, one shingle and one lath machine, operated by an engine of 150 horse-power. The firm employs 140 men, and its pay roll amounts to $6,000 per month. In 1879, Messrs. Goodnow and Hawley rebuilt and improved the mill throughout. Its size is 40x80 feet.

Mill No. 1, on the East Side platform, owned by Merriman, Barrows and Company, built by L. Butler, in 1870-71, is run by a 200 horse-power wheel, and gives employment to 150 men, whose pay amounts to $7,500 per month. It was operated three years by L. Butler and Company, then passed into the hands of O. C. Merriman and Company, who run it four years, when the present firm of Merriman, Barrows and Company was organized, and took possession. This firm consists of O. C. Merriman, J. S. Lane, L. M. Lane and F. C. Barrows. The daily product of this concern is 120,000 feet, the machinery used being a thirty-eight-saw gang, two circulars, two shingle machines, making 16,000 shingles, and two lath machines making 20,000 lath per day.

In 1872, McMullen & Company built a mill on the site of their present structure, known as "Saw-mill No. 5," located on the East Side platform. Its capacity was 25,000 feet of lumber and 250,000 shingles every ten hours. In the winter of 1878-'9 this mill was found inadequate, and rebuilt and fitted with entirely new machinery. This increased its capacity to from 80,000 to 90,000 feet of lumber, 100,000 shingles and 30,000 lath every ten hours. The power is furnished by a fifty-four-inch, 250 horse-power turbine wheel. The company employs from 150 to 200 men, and their pay-roll amounts to $8,000 per month. The product of 1880 amounted to 20,000,000 feet of lumber, 15,000,000 shingles and 4,000,000 lath. The firm is composed of Jas. McMullen and two sons, Albert E. and Wilbur H.

Mill No. 3, on the East Side platform, built by Todd, Haven, Leavitt & Company, in 1873, is now owned by Todd, Martin & Company. The machinery, gang saw, one double rotary saw, one single and one double shingle machine and one lath machine, produces daily over 90,000 feet of lumber etc. The motive power is a 200 horse-power wheel. The company employs sixty men, paying them $4,500 per month.

The "Pacific Mill," owned by Camp and Walker. This mill is located on the west side, just above the suspension bridge, and is called the largest and most thoroughly equipped lumber mill in the country. The original mill was built in 1865, by J. Dean and Company, who conducted it until 1876, when the present firm became its proprietors. The old mill was destroyed by fire, October 6th, 1880, and the firm began at once to rebuild. The mill is in size 66x132 feet, its construction and machinery costing about $85,000. Steam is generated by nine two-flue boilers, 22 feet in length, the engine being of 600 horse-power when using steam pressure of eighty pounds. The immense smoke-stack, the foundations of which extend fifteen feet in depth, is 150 feet in height, and in its construction, more brick were used, than are in the Nicollet House. The foundations for the main shaft, gangs and circular mills, are of solid masonry, built up from the ledge below. There are two large circular mills, with steam feed and canters, one Wick's gang of thirty saws, and one twenty-six-saw gang, besides the necessary minor machinery, all of modern improved make. The estimated product of the mill, is 150,000 feet in ten hours and 25,000,000 feet annually. In 1880, the product of the old mill was 14,036,000 feet of lumber, 15,- 000,000 shingles and 8,000,000 lath. This firm furnishes employment to 200 men, in the mill and in their extensive logging operations.

The sash, door and blind factory of Bardwell, Robinson & Co., located at the foot of Thirteenth Avenue south, was established by Bisbee, Bardwell & Huntington in the spring of 1875. In the fall of that year Mr. Huntington retired, and in the spring of 1876 P. P. Eddy entered the firm. The following fall Mr. Bisbee sold to S. C. Robinson, and in January, 1877, Mr. Eddy was succeeded by C. N. Robinson, and the firm has since been Bardwell, Robinson & Co. They cut their own logs and have them manufactured into lumber, of which they annually use 2,500,000 feet, besides 1,000,000 feet which they purchase. Their trade, which amounts to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars per year, extends in all directions, and is steadily increasing. They employ one hundred men, paying them three thousand dollars per month.

Camp and Walker's planing mill is on the corner of Fifth street and Fourth Avenue north. Its size is 50x100 feet, contains three planing machines, one siding machine and one rip saw, propelled by a sixty horse-power engine. The engine room and office is a two story brick 18x10 feet. The work done by this mill is exclusively on lumber manufactured by the Pacific Mills, belonging to the same firm. It furnishes employment to ten men.

Johnson and Hurd's planing mill on Third street and Third Avenue south, was erected in 1866 by Jesse Copeland and Co. Between this date and 1870, several changes were made in the firm. At this time Mr. Johnson purchased of L. Lingenfelter three-fifths interest in the business and his partners were Jesse and Frank Copeland, who owned the remaining two-fifths interest. The mill was then 50x100 feet, and two stories high, containing three planing machines, a quantity of sash and door machinery, and a thirty horse-power engine. In 1871, Mr. Johnson purchased Jesse Copeland's interest and enlarged the mill. In the spring of 1876 he purchased Frank Copeland's interest and conducted the business alone for a year. In March, 1877, Mr. Johnson formed a stock company, known as S. L. Johnson and Co. In April, 1880, B. C. Hurd having purchased all of the stock except Johnson's, the name became Johnson and Hurd. They employ forty men, pay $2,000 per month and enjoy an annual business of about $75,000.

Henry T. Welles built the North Star planing mill, on River street, corner of Third Avenue north-east, in the fall of 1877, and two years later Joy and Erb leased it for a period of five years. Mr. Joy manages the North Star, while Mr. Erb superintends Goodnow and Hawley's mill. The mill contains three planing machines, one siding saw, one re-sawing machine and one rip saw. A forty-five horse-power engine furnishes power to plane 35,000 feet of lumber per day.

The planing mill of R. B. Langdon and Co. was erected on Third street, near Tenth Avenue south, in 1872, by the firm, and has been in continuous operation since, planing, and manufacturing mouldings. The building is 80x100 feet, has five planers, siding and rip saws, driven by a one hundred horse-power engine. The annual product is from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 feet, which requires sixteen men to handle.

E. Moulton and Son's planing mill, corner of Division and Taylor streets, East Division, is 36x56 feet and was built in 1878. It contains two planers and other machinery necessary to a first-class mill. Employing twelve men, it has a capacity of 70,000 feet every ten hours. Mr. Moulton, who was in the business for sixteen years, first built a mill on the island, which was destroyed by the tunnel wash-out of 1868.

The St. Louis planing mill, Ninth street and Central Avenue, was built in 1878, by W. C. Stetson and B. F. Nelson. In March, 1879, the firm of Stetson and Nelson dissolved, and Mr. Nelson continued alone until November 1, 1880, when it was leased for a year by the firm of Nelson, Tenney and Co. The structure is 22x80 feet, all stone and iron. A low pressure one hundred horse-power engine drives four planers, one moulding machine, one siding saw, and one rip saw. The company pays $1,000 per month to twenty-five men, who handle 80,000 feet of lumber daily. The firm of Nelson, Tenney and Co. are heavy dealers in lumber, sash and doors, occupying a yard containing three squares. Mr. Nelson also owns the large sash factory leased by Smith Parker and Co., who employ one hundred men. This mill is operated by a low pressure, one hundred and fifty horse-power engine.

The East Side planing mill, on Fifth street near the depot, was erected by Russell, Tennant and Company, and started up on September 20th, 1878. After this firm had conducted it eighteen months, Mr. Tennant bought out the other two gentlemen, and now owns and controls the establishment alone. The building is 16x60 feet, and is fully equipped as a first-class mill, turning out about 1,000,000 feet per month, requiring ten men, whose pay roll is about $400 per month.

The sash, door and blind factory, and planing mill of Wheaton, Reynolds and Company, Central Avenue, corner of Sixth street, was built in 1870, by W. C. and H. A. Stetson. The original building was 30x60 feet, but additions have been made from year to year until the establishment now consists of the sash factory, 40x110 feet, two-stories high, planing mill 20x60 feet, one story, steam department 20x40 feet, dry kiln 18x50 feet, and shed room covering space of one acre; one fifty and one thirty horse-power engine furnish the power. The company employs sixty men, paying them $600 per week. The business for 1880, was $100,000. Their planing mill turns out 80,000 feet per diem.

Jenson, Gilbrathson and Company's planing-mill and sash, door and blind factory was established in 1880, on Nineteenth Avenue south. The main building is two stories in height, 50 x 100 feet. The engine-room, containing a sixty-five horse-power engine, is two stories in height, built of stone. The second story of this building is used as a drying-room. This mill is fitted up in the most approved style; has elevators, telephones, etc. The members of the firm are: James Jenson, business manager, J. N. Gilbrathson, superintendent of factory, and W. H. Stringer.

John Briggs built his shingle-mill on Water Street, corner Tenth Avenue north-east, in the spring of 1880, and commenced operations in June. The structure is 22 x 75 feet, is operated by a forty horse-power engine, and employs seven men to run it. The machinery consists of one shingle-machine, and another will be added.

P. G. Lamoreaux's shingle-mill occupies the site of the Minneapolis Lumber Mill, which was burned in May, 1880. It is located at the east end of the upper bridge. The machinery consists of one single and one double shingle-machine. Mr. Lamoreaux has commenced to rebuild his saw-mill, which will be 36 x 126 feet, containing one gang and one circular saw.

Hobart and Chatterton's mill, located at the east end of the upper bridge, was built in 1876. The firm manufactures cedar posts, telegraph poles, piles, and shingles. A twenty-five horse-power engine operates one shingle-machine, one circular saw, and a trimmer, producing 25,000 shingles and from 2,000 to 3,000 posts per day. The firm employs twenty-five men, whose pay roll amounts to $900 per month.

The door, sash and blind factory of Frazer and Shepherd, corner of Fifth street and Fourth Avenue north, was built in January, 1879. The factory consists of main building, 30 x 64, two stories high, dry-house, 18 x 24, and an addition 18 x 24. It is thoroughly equipped with improved machinery, and employs sixty men. The power is furnished by the engine of the Camp and Walker planing-mill, on the opposite side of the street, and is transmitted by cable.

CHAPTER LXV.

IRON MANUFACTORIES—MILL FURNISHERS— HARVESTER WORKS—PLOW FACTORIES—MIS- CELLANEOUS MANUFACTURERS.

The extensive milling interests, previously described, necessarily make room for large manufactories of iron work. This is especially true of the flouring mills in consequence of the progressive character of the business. No sooner is a mill in running order than improved machines are invented and introduced, furnishing employment to numerous shops. The heavy iron work and the ornamental iron, brass and copper works are represented by several firms, whose establishments, though from time to time extended, are still overtaxed. The principal firms are the North Star Iron Works Company; Minneapolis Iron Works, O. A. Pray & Co.; the Union Iron Works, J. E. Lockwood & Co.; Gregor Menzel & Company; and the Northwestern Stove Works, Spear & Bushnell. Other extensive manufactories of wood, iron, etc., find abundant patronage from the demands of the city and surrounding country, a demand increasing beyond the ability of the present establishments to supply. Of the eighty different concerns, half have been established during the last five years. The total value of goods manufactured during the year 1879, inclusive of flour and lumber, was $8,155,100, giving employment to 5,475 men. In 1880 the amount was increased to $10,333,000, with 7,250 men employed.

The Minneapolis Iron Works of which O. A. Pray and Company are proprietors, were originated by Otis A. Pray, who, in 1866, formed a partnership with John Webster. This firm was organized for the manufacture of mill furnishing and mill-wright goods. They opened an office in Harrison's block, and during the winter began the erection of a brick building on Washington Avenue, between First and Second Avenues south. After conducting business here for several years, the firm purchased a one-third interest in the Minnesota Iron Works, which were then owned by Lee and Hardenbergh, and occupied the site of the Crown Roller Mill. After remaining with this firm eleven months, Mr. Pray sold his interest to Lee and Hardenbergh, and purchased the machine shops of Plummer and Moore, corner of Sixth Avenue south and Second street. After conducting this business for a few years, Mr. Pray sold to the North Star Iron Works, arranging with them for the manufacture of his goods, though he controlled their sale. In 1873, he leased all of the Minnesota Iron Works, excepting the foundry, which was conducted by C. M. Hardenbergh, who continued until 1876, when Mr. Pray obtained control of the entire works.

The present firm of O. A. Pray and Company, was formed June 1st, 1878, by the association with A. L. Miner, who had been Mr. Pray's superintendent since 1873, and C. E. Holt, his head book-keeper since 1875. Adopting the name of "Minneapolis Iron Works," the new firm leased for ninety-nine years, the ground they now occupy and immediately began the erection of a new foundry and machine-shop. All the tools and patterns of the old Minnesota Iron Works were purchased, but as the tools were worn, they were sold, the patterns valued at $40,000, being retained. Purchasing new tools and machinery, the firm rapidly completed the establishment which consists of a stone building 35x95 feet, two stories high, fronting on Fifth Avenue south, corner of First street, the first floor being used for offices and the second for ware-rooms; a large fire proof vault adjoining the office used to store bolting cloth; a three-story brick warehouse 32x330; two brick one story machine-shops, one 50x100 feet, and the other, used for wood work, 50x65 feet, and a stone building 60x80, used as foundry and blacksmith shop. These buildings and materials of the firm are worth not less than $100,000. They employ from eighty to ninety men, and the sales for 1880, amounted to about $300,000.

In addition to the large local sales, the company ships goods to all parts of the north-west. Prominent among their splendid facilities for manufacturing heavy iron goods, is a large boring machine for iron, one of the best in the country, and the only machine in the west for re-grinding crusher rolls. To facilitate shipping, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul have laid to the shops, three side tracks which enables the firm to fill large orders from abroad with promptness and dispatch, otherwise impossible. The machinery is driven by a 50 horse-power Buckeye engine and boiler, which is soon to be replaced by more powerful machinery.

The shops are heated throughout by steam, and in every department is manifest that complete arrangement and precision which insures that perfection upon which rests the popularity of this prosperous manufactory.

North Star Iron Works, which stand high in the rank of American iron works, occupy two and one-half acres of ground on River street and Second Avenue north. Formerly this manufactory was on the East Side, but when Mr. J. W. Johnson came into the firm in 1870, it was removed to its present location, and its capacity increased by the introduction of the most practical and improved machinery. So great was the demand for its work that though operated fourteen hours per day for months at a time, the orders could not all be filled. In August, 1880, Mr. Johnson disposed of the entire property to the present proprietors, the North Star Iron Works Company. Principal among the products of this concern are mill machinery and mill furnishings, wrought iron pipes, engine trimmings, steam and water gauges, water wheels, smut machinery, French buhr mill stones, separators, flour packers, smooth and corrugated rollers, middlings feeders, improved Corliss and other stationary engines, steel and iron boilers. A 50 horse-power engine keeps the vast array of machinery in motion, and 125 men are required to perform the labor necessary to meet the demands of trade. With the manifest enterprise of the new firm it is safe to say that the splendid reputation of the North Star Iron Works will not diminish, but will retain its place in the rank of first-class iron-working establishments of the country.

North-western Foundry, corner of Third street and Tenth Avenue south, was established in 1874, by G. Menzel, his son, Charles G. Menzel, and D. C. Howard, under the firm name of G. Menzel and Company. In the fall of that year, L. V. N. Blakeman purchased the interests of Charles G. Menzel and D. C. Howard, but the firm name was unchanged. The building and grounds occupy about one and one-half acres. Fronting on Tenth Avenue south is a building 20x60 feet, one and one-half stories high, in the south-west corner of which is the office. The remainder of the building is used for a pattern room. Back of this is the foundry, a two and one-half story building, 60x120 feet; attached to this is the engine room 20x30 feet, and above this is the pattern shop.

This firm furnishes all the car wheels for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, west of the Mississippi river, and most of those used by the Northern Pacific, Minneapolis and St. Louis, St. Paul and Duluth, and St. Paul and Sioux City, besides all the wheels used by the Street Railway Company of this city. Besides the manufacture of car wheels, this firm does a large business in all kinds of architectural, machinery and ornamental castings, employing about sixty men.

The Union Iron Works, owned by J. E. Lockwood & Company, is the outgrowth of a machine shop opened by Mr. Lockwood in 1872, on the present site of the Humboldt mill. After remaining three years in that locality he removed to the vicinity of J. B. Bassett's mill where he remained four years. In June, 1879, the present firm was founded, Mr. Lockwood taking into partnership C. H. Upton and Nils Nyberg. They at once commenced to fit up their present quarters on Main street and Second Avenue, S. E.

Having increased their facilities by purchasing the stock and machinery of the St. Anthony Iron Works, which had been destroyed by fire the previous April. A stone building fronting on Main street is three stories high, including basement. Its size, 45x60 feet, with a leased basement 15x60 feet, gives them a machine shop of 60x60 feet. On the first floor is the office and another machine shop, and the second floor is devoted to mill-wright and pattern shops. In the rear of the basement is the foundry, 45x60 feet, one story high. The firm also have at Mr. Lockwood's old stand, on the west side, a blacksmith shop and bolting-cloth manufactory. They employ from fifty to sixty men, and manufacture about $63,000 worth of goods annually, embracing all kinds of flour and saw-mill machinery. The motive power is furnished by an American turbine wheel of 100 horse-power, part of which is used by other manufacturers.

Variety Iron Works of Hashow, Maish & Davis were started by Hashow & Maish on the 1st day of May, 1878, in the basement of Brackett's block, with capital invested to the amount of ten dollars. After remaining three months in the basement they took a room on the ground floor. On the 1st of October, 1879, Wm. H. Davis was admitted to the firm, and the name changed to Hashow, Maish & Davis. Business continued to increase, and in 1880, the firm sought more commodious quarters, and leased lots on Second street and Fifth Avenue south for fifty years. On this they have erected a three-story building, 50x60 feet, with an ell 20x24 feet. The lower story, or half basement, is used for the coarser work of dressing rollers, the second floor for the machine shop and the upper floor for mill-furnishing and general mill-wright work. The principal manufactures are flouring and saw-mill machinery, brewers' machinery, shafting, pulleys, etc. Twenty or more men are employed, producing in 1880 $50,000 worth of goods.

The Minneapolis Boiler Works of M. W. Glenn were established in 1867, by Emmerman and Hardenbergh, who operated them until February, 1878, when they were purchased by the present proprietor. These works are on Fifth Avenue south between First and Second streets, and are devoted to the manufacture of boilers and all kinds of sheet and boiler iron goods. Its products may be seen in almost every town in the north-west, and its present business amounts to about $80,000 per year, requiring the labor of thirty-seven men. Mr. Glenn, the proprietor, is a practical machinist having spent much of his time from childhood in various departments of iron manufactories.

North-western Stove Works, owned by Bushnell and Spear, though comparatively new is the only institution of the kind in the state, and has already acquired a good reputation with the trade. The buildings and yards occupy two and one-half acres of ground in South Minneapolis near the Harvester Works, besides extensive ware-rooms at 204 Hennepin Avenue. The enterprise was established in 1878, by Edward Spear, Jr., whose twenty years experience enabled him to lay a strong foundation for a large business. In January, 1880, he formed a partnership with Charles R. Bushnell, practical machinist, and the firm is now known as Bushnell and Spear. The factory is devoted exclusively to the manufacture of stoves, making a specialty of hay stoves for the use of the settlers on the prairies. The full working force is seventy-five men.

In 1867, Frank Grygla and Company began the manufacture of galvanized iron cornice, shutters, sky-lights, pitch and gravel roofing. Since then a number of changes have occurred in the firm prior to March, 1880, when H. E. Selden became the sole partner of Mr. Grygla, under the firm name of Grygla and Selden. They retain the original site, 111 North Third street, occupying a frame building, 22x100 feet, three stories high, the first story of which is used for manufacturing, and the ware-room is on Eleventh street. Their products, amounting to $60,000 per annum, are shipped to all parts of the state, and to Wisconsin, Iowa, Montana and Manitoba.

M. H. Crittenden, senior partner of the firm of Crittenden and Scribner, came to St. Paul in 1866, and engaged in pitch and gravel roofing. This he soon after extended to Minneapolis, and in 1871, took into partnership, Edward E. Scribner.

In 1868 they commenced the manufacture of their own tar paper and other roofing material, and in 1875 they added the production of galvanized cornice, tin and slate roofing. In April, 1880, the firm procured its present quarters, 203 and 205 First Avenue north, occupying a building 45x62 feet, all of which is used for shop and storage room. Besides this they conduct an extensive business in coal tar, concrete and asphaltum sidewalks and roofing, requiring the labor of ten workmen.

Strothman Brothers, proprietors of the North-western Iron Works, began operations June 1st, 1880, on the corner of Third street and Ninth Avenue south, where they leased ground and erected a building 30x60 feet. They make mill machinery, shafting, pulleys, boxes, and gearing. Both members of the firm are practical machinists. J. H. Strothman is at present superintendent of O. A. Pray and Company's works, and his brother, E. E. Strothman, manages their own establishment, which is operated by a ten horsepower engine. The firm expects soon to enlarge to meet the demands of their rapidly increasing trade.

H. C. Butler, manufacturer of mill picks and iron work, established business in 1857, in a small shop on Ninth Avenue south, with but one forge, and a capital of about ten dollars. He, with one assistant, set to work, and in 1858, just as he was commencing to realize some reward for his industry, his shop was destroyed by fire. He then built on Sixth Avenue, where he did a prosperous business until 1860, when his shop was again destroyed by fire. He again built, and was again a sufferer by fire. He then built on the present site of the Humboldt mill, and there enjoyed a season of unobstructed prosperity, until the explosion of the mills in 1878, when his shop was totally destroyed. He then purchased his present location, 255 Sixth Avenue south, where he occupies a building 27x100 feet, in which are six forges, furnishing employment to fourteen workmen. Manufactures mill picks and other iron and steel work.

Edward Kennedy, mill-pick maker, first began business in 1873, at No. 514 Second street south, where he occupied a building 22x68, used three forges, and employed five workmen. He began manufacturing for the home trade only, but has received orders from abroad until now he ships goods to all the north-western states, Manitoba, Washington Territory and California. The shop was burned November 10th, 1880, and was a total loss, but Mr. Kennedy immediately rebuilt on First street between Fourth and Fifth Avenues south.

The Minneapolis Fence Works, owned by Melony & Kyle, was established in 1871, by Day & Rollins, whose shop was located on Second street and Fifth Avenue south. Its manufactures consist of wood and iron fencing and roof cresting. After conducting the business four years, Mr. Day died. Mr. Rollins ran it alone until December, 1878, when he took E. F. Melony into partnership under the firm name of Charles G. Rollins & Co. In July, 1879, Mr. Rollins sold his interest to J. N. Kyle, and the firm of Melony & Kyle was established. In the spring of 1880, they moved to their present site, corner of Third street and Fourth Avenue south.

The North-western Fence and Architectural Iron Works of Philip Herzog, dates its existence from 1869, when Mr. Herzog opened a small shop in the upper part of the old Morrison planing-mill, where he employed but one assistant the first year. In 1872 this mill burned, and Mr. Herzog purchased ground on Third Avenue south and Second street, E. D., and built a shop 40x80 feet, which now constitutes his main building. His business, constantly increasing, has compelled him to enlarge, from time to time, until he now occupies 115x132 feet and employs twenty-six workmen. The machinery is driven by a 150 horse-power turbine wheel, though it requires but fifty horse-power to operate the mill. The business amounts annually to $90,000, the products being iron and wood fences, iron lawn-chairs, settees, roof-railings, etc.

Bachner Bros. in 1867, opened a gun store on Hennepin Avenue, between Washinton Avenue and Second street. In January, 1878, they removed to their present quarters, at 36 Washington Avenue south. For a number of years they manufactured muzzle-loading rifles, but lately have added machinery by which they are engaged in making breech-loading shot-guns. They do an extensive repairing business, and carry a large stock of fire-arms, hunting, trapping, fishing, camping, skating and police equipments.

In the fall of 1879, Henry Krueger came to Minneapolis and opened a gun-shop at his present location, No. 10, Second street south. His business has increased, and he now enjoys an annual trade of about $7,000, carrying a complete stock of guns and other hunting materials.

H. J. Pyle on the 1st of May, 1880, commenced the manufacture of fire-arms at 400 Nicollet Avenue, where he still remains, carrying a full stock of fire-arms and other goods pertaining to his line of business.

In 1880, John Grime and Company, organized for the manufacture of machinists and engineer's tools, taps, dies, etc. They are located on Nicollet Island, in the basement of the manufacturing building, where they have a room 35x80 feet, employing six workmen. This firm makes a specialty of J. Grime and Company's new pipe vice, and also have other inventions nearly ready to introduce to the public.

The Minneapolis Drill Manufactory was started in 1865, by I. L. Penny, on the ground now occupied by M. W. Glenn's boiler works. The first machinery was a foot lathe which sufficed the first year. At the close of the second year he removed to his present quarters, 315 Third Avenue south, where he erected a building 25x70 feet, two and one-half stories high, in which he employs fifteen men, manufacturing coopers' tools, drills, and forging hammers, besides doing an extensive jobbing business. The machinery of this institution is driven by a fifteen horse-power engine.

CHAPTER LXVI.

WHOLESALE TRADE—DRY GOODS—GROCERIES— OTHER BUSINESS HOUSES.

Minneapolis enjoys such facilities, from the many lines of railroads centering here, as makes it naturally a great distributing point for the north-west. Many wholesale establishments have been located here, and the trade is increasing. The failure of N. B. Harwood and Company, a large dry goods house, during the last year, was a blow to the trade, though attributable to the personal management, and not to lack of advantages in the location. The tributary territory is constantly increasing by the extension and multiplication of railroads, in fertile agricultural districts. The wholesale trade in 1880, amounted to $24,299,000, with an increase of $10,000,000 over that of the preceding year, divided as follows: groceries, $6,285,000; dry goods, clothing, hats and caps, $3,691,000; wines, liquors and cigars, $1,150,000; queensware, drugs and oils, $850,700; hardware and stoves, $1,825,300; boots, shoes, leather and hides, $1,675,200; crackers and confectionery, $260,000; paper and stationery, $350,000; agricultural implements, $3,750,000; furniture, and carpets, etc.; $637,000; produce commission, $3,625,000.

The retail trade of the city is represented by more than four hundred firms, whose business aggregates about $18,000,000, according to trustworthy estimates.

The wholesale dry goods and notion house of Wyman, Mullin and VanDyke, 214 and 216 Hennepin Avenue, was established in April, 1875, by Wyman and Mullin, and is the first wholesale dry goods and notion house founded in Minneapolis. At first the firm occupied but one floor, but the trade soon increased, and they were compelled to rent the entire building, including three floors and a basement. In the spring of 1880, they had a building erected expressly for their business. This is a brick structure, four-stories high, cut stone front, 30x125 feet. In July, 1880, W. J. Van Dyke entered the firm, the capital was increased, and trade extended. The firm employs thirty men in and about the building, and keeps seven traveling salesmen constantly on the road. The trade extends throughout Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota and Montana, and is a fair indication of the splendid facilities presented by Minneapolis as a wholesale business centre.

Coykendall Brothers and Company, wholesale dealers in dry goods, notions, hosiery, white goods, etc., No's. 118 and 120, Washington Avenue north, commenced business in 1873, in a retail dry goods house, which they continued until 1877, when they retired from this, and confined their attention exclusively to wholesale trade. Their building is 50x100 feet four stories high, where they employ twelve men as salesmen, book-keepers, etc. They also have four traveling salesmen, who carry the trade throughout Minnesota, Iowa, Dakota, and a portion of Wisconsin. The sales for 1880 amounted to $500,000.

The wholesale and retail dry goods and notion house of Goodfellow and Eastman, was started in the Herrick block, in 1878. These quarters soon proved inadequate for their business, and they moved into the block built expressly for them by Mr. Casey. This building has a front of Lemont, Illinois, limestone, and is four stories high. It is one of the finest buildings in the state, and is wholly occupied by this firm. The basement is used for storing and receiving goods, the first floor as general retail sales-room, second floor as cloak and show room, the third floor for storing heavy goods, and the fourth floor is devoted entirely to fancy goods and notions. They employ about sixty persons in and about their house. Their retail business extends over the whole of Minnesota, and the jobbing business over the Northern and Western states and territories to the Pacific.

George W. Hale and Company, retail dealers in dry goods and notions, began business in 1868, on Washington Avenue south, with but two salesmen. In 1872, they removed to their present quarters, 301 and 303 Nicollet Avenue. The building has a frontage of 44 feet, a depth of 120 feet, and was built expressly for this firm, by J. G. Gluck. The first year the business amounted to but $25,000; in 1880 it was $300,000. The members of the firm are George W., and Jefferson M. Hale.

Eichelzer and Company, hatters and furriers, No. 212 Nicollet Avenue, do principally a retail business, and manufacture fur goods, cloth hats and caps, and Mackinaw hats. The house was established in 1871, by D. and W. Handly, at the present stand, and purchased in August, 1872, by P. F. Eichelzer and J. S. Snoddy. Mr. Snoddy died in July, 1874, and August following, Mr. Eichelzer became the sole proprietor. At the time of the Central block fire, Mr. Eichelzer suffered with his neighbors, but saved most of his stock. In March, 1879, R. A. Lanpher, of St. Paul, was admitted to the firm, which became Eichelzer and Company.

E. B. Preston and Company, wholesale and retail dealers in leather and rubber belting, rubber boots, clothing, and all kinds of rubber goods, began business at No. 240 Hennepin Avenue, in January, 1880. As their trade increased, they removed, in May following, to No. 203 Nicollet Avenue, where they occupy one floor and the basement, 25x100 feet. The firm employs six men, two of whom are traveling salesmen, who do business throughout Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Dakota. The members of the firm are E. B. Preston, who has a large house in Chicago, and W. S. Nott, who has charge of the Minneapolis department. They represent the New York Belting and Packing Company in the West, and are the only firm who handle this line of goods exclusively.

H. G. Harrison and Co., wholesale grocers, organized in May, 1880, and located in the Wolford block, on Hennepin Avenue, but the building was insufficiently strong to hold the heavy goods which were stored on the upper floors, and soon fell. In June they occupied three floors, one hundred feet square, in Brackett's block, doing an exclusively wholesale business, and carrying an extensive stock, doing business in northern Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota and Montana. The firm employs twenty men, six of whom are constantly traveling. During the first year the sales amounted to $1,500,000. The members of the firm are H. G. Harrison and Frank B. Felt, both of extensive experience.

Anthony Kelly and Co., wholesale grocers, Nos. 125, 127 and 129 Washington Avenue north, located there in 1877. In 1858, Messrs. P. H. and Anthony Kelly established a grocery business on Washington Avenue and Second Avenue south, doing a retail trade. In 1860, their business had increased to such a degree that they were compelled to seek more room, and they removed into the building now used as the National hotel, and after a year into Dayton block; removed next to Bridge square and First street. The firm was known as Kelly and Brother until 1864, when P. H. Kelly retired, and commenced business in St. Paul. Anthony Kelley continued the business alone, and in March, 1866, was burned out, and then took possession of the building known as the Kelly block. The firm was then known as A. Kelly and Co., and remained in Kelly's block until 1877. The building now occupied is 66x100 feet, and three stories in height, above basement, and has an extension of 57x66 feet, one story and basement, in rear. The business is exclusively wholesale, and employs thirty-two men, six of whom are traveling salesmen. In 1880, it amounted to $1,500,000, and extended throughout the northwest.

Hart, Monroe & Thomas, proprietors of the Minneapolis Spice Mills and wholesale fancy grocers, are located at 108 Washington Avenue south. The business was established in 1870, by Squires, Hart & Company, who continued it until 1876, at which time the firm of Hart, Monroe & Thomas was organized, and has since conducted the business. It is the only establishment of the kind in the state that makes a specialty of its own brands, and grinding spices of all kinds. Their building is 22x130 feet, three stories high above the basement. In the rear is a brick building used as an engine, roasting and grinding-room. An engine of fifteen horse-power turns the machinery. This consists of three large roasting cylinders of recent invention, two grinding machines, one of which is a small set of buhrs, and two machines for roasting coffee, the capacity being one ton per day. The firm employs ten men, four salesmen traveling constantly, the trade being extended throughout northern Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota and Montana.

CHAPTER LXVII.

BANKS—BOARD OF TRADE—CLEARING HOUSE —RAILROADS—INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The records of the past twenty-seven years, which have elapsed since the first bank in what is now Minneapolis, came into existence, show twenty-four such institutions, only ten of which are still in existence. Before entering the field of the banks of to-day, we will review the institutions which once in existence, have since wound up their affairs. The history begins with Snyder & McFarlane, bankers and brokers, who commenced business in 1851, continuing to 1858, about four years. C. H. Pettit, banker and broker, was the second, commencing in the fall of 1855, continuing to 1859. Next, Beede & Mendenhall, bankers and brokers, organized April 27th, 1856; they afterward organized the State Bank of Minnesota, with R. J. Mendenhall, president, and R. J. Baldwin, cashier. Dorman & Phinney, bankers and brokers, commenced business in the spring of 1857, and continued till 1861. Grow & Phinney began in 1857, continuing to 1862 as bankers and brokers.

R. J. Baldwin, banker and broker, commenced business in 1857. In 1862 he organized the State Bank with R. J. Mendenhall, president, and R. J. Baldwin, cashier. The State National Bank grew out of the State Bank of Minnesota and continued up to 1876, when it wound up business. The National Exchange Bank started in 1867, with Henry Miller, president, and W. P. Westfall, cashier, and in 1875 closed its business. The State Savings Association was organized in 1866 and continued business to 1873. The Exchange Savings Bank was organized in 1868 and in 1871, it closed business. The National Exchange was organized in 1869 and merged into the Merchants National of Hastings. It subsequently moved to Minneapolis and changed to the Merchants National Bank, but February 1st, 1881, went into liquidation. In 1873 the Scandinavian Bank came to the surface but immediately sank. Sparks and McPherson, brokers, opened in 1870 and in 1875, wound up. The Lumbermen's Bank commenced business in 1876 but soon after closed up its affairs.

EXISTING BANKS.

Ten banks are now doing business in Minneapolis, seven of which represent an aggregate capital of $2,550,000; the remaining three are private bankers and brokers. The capital of companies of the first class varies from $1,000,000, the capital of the Security to $50,000 of the City Bank. To facilitate the banking business of the city a clearing house has been established, where the daily balances of the banks are settled.

The Security Bank. This staunch and vigorous institution takes prominent place among the many successful business enterprises of which Minneapolis can boast. Launching upon the financial tide January 2, 1878, with a cash capital of $300,000, its admirable management so developed its business that early in 1879, $100,000 more stock was added, and in February, 1880, the further addition of $600,000 brought its capital up to $1,000,000, all of which was promptly paid in, and of the entire stock all but $29,200 is owned by residents of Minneapolis.

The Bank building is situated on Hennepin Avenue, corner of Third street, and is one of the finest buildings in the city. The officers of the bank are: President—T. A. Harrison; Vice President—H. G. Harrison; Cashier—J. Dean; Assistant Cashier—A. J. Dean; Directors—T. A. Harrison, H. G. Harrison, J. Dean, Hon. C. E. Vanderburgh, Franklin Beebe, W. W. McNair, J. M. Shaw, C. C. Washburn and Franklin Steele.

First National Bank. The history of this bank is one of general interest, and deserves more than a passing notice. Its existence dates from October, 1857, when a local bank was opened under the firm name of Sidle, Wolford and Company, under which title they enjoyed a flattering degree of prosperity for three years, when they organized a Bank of Issue under the state law, as the Bank of Minneapolis. Under this title they did a prosperous business until 1861, when the system of national banks was instituted and the name was again changed to the First National Bank of Minneapolis. The financial history of the bank is one of steady, solid growth. Its reverses have been few, while its prosperity has been all its founders could wish. Beginning with a cash capital of $50,000, it soon rose to $200,000 by the accumulation of undivided profits, after paying a regular dividend of twenty-four per cent. to its stock-holders. January 1, 1879, $400,000 was subscribed and paid in, making a cash capital of $600,000, mostly owned by residents of Minneapolis. Its stock has always been far above par, and is eagerly sought to-day at 125 per cent. The elegant bank building is situated on the corner of Nicollet and Washington Avenues, and is a credit to the city.

Northwestern National Bank. This institution was founded in 1872, with a paid up capital of $200,000, and started on a career of prosperity equalled by few, if any, of the banking institutions of the northwest. At the time of the organization, D. Morrison was elected president, and S. E. Neiler cashier; and in 1875, Mr. H. T. Welles was elected president, in the place of D. Morrison, whose term had expired. In 1876, an addition of $300,000 was made to the original stock, making the capital stock a half million dollars. In the fall of 1879, owing to the defalcation of the assistant cashier, a loss of $127,000 was sustained, but on account of the flourishing condition of the bank, the loss had been made good before January 1st, 1880, by the subscription of $100,000 from the stockholders, and $27,000 earnings of the bank. July 1st, 1880, the surplus earnings amounted to $24,000. This institution is considered one of the solid establishments of the city, and their elegant and substantial building, erected in 1872-3, located at the corner of Washington and First Avenues south, is looked upon with pride by the citizens of Minneapolis. The present officers of the bank are as follows: H. T. Welles, president; S. A. Harris, cashier; W. E. Burwell, assistant cashier.

The City Bank. The organization of this institution dates from 1869, when a private bank with a capital of $50,000 was established. J. W. Pence, president, and T. J. Buxton, cashier. October 10th, 1872, it was reorganized as a stock bank, with a capital of $150,000, which was increased the following year to $200,000. The officers were J. W. Pence, president; T. F. Thompson, vice-president; T. J. Buxton, cashier. January, 1874, Mr. Harrison succeeded Mr. Thompson to the office of vice-president, and in 1878 he was succeeded by John Watson. The officers at present are: J. W. Johnson, president; John Watson, vice-president; T. J. Buxton, cashier, and Charles McC. Reeve, assistant cashier. The bank has had a prosperous career from the outset and from its organization as a stock bank has declared large dividends, without the omission of a single year. As evidence of the increase of business, the bank handled in 1872, $5,108,000, and in 1880, only eight years later, this sum was increased to $35,374,000, actual cash transactions. The bank is located corner of Hennepin Avenue and Second street.

The Hennepin County Savings Bank. This institution first opened its doors to the public September 1st, 1870, and is therefore just entering upon its second decade of remarkable prosperity and usefulness. Its founders and first Board of Trustees were the following well known gentlemen: E. S. Jones, J. E. Bell, S. A. Harris, D. C. Bell and J. H. Clark. Its first corps of officers from their number as follows, viz.: E. S. Jones, president; J. H. Clark, vice-president; J. E. Bell, cashier. In 1873, Mr. D. C. Bell was elected vice-president in place of Mr. J. H.

Clark, deceased—during the same year Mr. S. A. Harris was chosen to the newly created position of assistant cashier. Such comprised the management until September, 1879, when Mr. Harris resigned his position to accept the more responsible one of cashier of the North-Western National Bank of this city. Mr. W. H. Lee for many years, the bank's efficient teller, succeeded Mr. Harris as assistant cashier. The present board of trustees is the same as the original board, with the exception of Hon. George A. Pillsbury in place of J. H. Clark, deceased. The present officers are—E. S. Jones, president; D. C. Bell, vice-president; J. E. Bell, cashier; W. H. Lee, assistant cashier. The high esteem and confidence in which this institution is held by the public, is evidenced by the fact that it ranks to-day, the foremost institution of its kind in the state. In one decade its deposits have reached the handsome aggregate of over $400,000, representing 2,000 and more open accounts, and the rate of increase in the total of deposits has never been greater than at the opening of this second decade.

Farmer's and Mechanic's Savings Bank of Minneapolis. This institution was organized September 10th, 1874, with a capital stock of $50,000. Officers: A. D. Mulford, president; C. Morrison, vice-president; and E. H. Moulton, treasurer. May 15th, 1875, Dr. Levi Butler was made president, the other officers remaining the same. Dr. Butler died, and Winthrop Young was elected president June 10th, 1878, and has held the office since. The legislature of 1879 passed a law making all savings banks mutual, and in January, 1880, this plan was adopted. This is the only mutual savings bank in the state, the depositors receiving the benefit and sharing in the earnings of the institution. As evidence of the confidence of the public, the deposits increased to more than double after the adoption of the mutual plan, being for the year 1879, $186,200, and in 1880, from January 1st to August 1st, $292,000.

The Citizens' Bank was organized November 1st, 1876, with a capital of $50,000. The bank is located corner of Washington Avenue and Fifth Avenue south, where it has had a prosperous business since the inauguration of the enterprise. The officers are: N. F. Griswold, president; Joseph H. Clark, vice-president, and George B. Shepherd, cashier. The greater part of the stock is held by citizens of Minneapolis.

PRIVATE BANKING INSTITUTIONS.

The Bank of Minneapolis was established in 1867, by Thomas W. Wilson and Erastus Byers, and is the only bank in Minneapolis that has conducted business since 1867, without change in name or management. The bank first occupied a room in the old post-office building, with Mr. Wilson, president, and Mr. Byers, cashier. They subsequently moved to the Nicollet House block, their present location. The death of Mr. Byers in June, 1880, caused no change in the management, since Mrs. Byers retains the interest held by her late husband. Mr. Wilson directing affairs as before. A general banking and collection business is transacted.

V. G. Hush. This bank was established by V. G. Hush in 1878, located in the Pence block, corner of Nicollet Avenue and Second street. Mr. Hush was interested in the City Bank at its establishment and when that was made a stock bank, withdrew and founded a private bank. He transacts a general banking business and deals in commercial paper, being one of the largest dealers in the state. Mr. Hush has been a resident of Minneapolis fourteen years, eleven of which he has passed in banking. The business has been successful from the start, and for the past year or two has doubled each year. Mr. A. B. Hush occupies the position of cashier in this bank.

The Commercial Bank was established in February, 1880, and although its experience has been short, enjoys a flattering degree of prosperity, occupying the bank building on the East Side, corner of Central Avenue and Main street. Davison and Dean, the proprietors, have had a long experience in banking. Robert A. Davison was with the First National Bank, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, from the time of its organization. John Dean, a native of this city, has been favorably known in connection with the Security Bank from the date of its organization until he became identified with the "Commercial." They do a general banking business, paying special attention to loans on city and farm property and investment securities. This is the only bank on the East Side and enjoys the confidence of all the business men of that portion of the city.

Minneapolis Clearing House. The Minneapolis Clearing House was organized January 1st, 1881, and has its place of business in the basement of the Security Bank building. Though recently established, its operation has proved valuable and satisfactory to the banks concerned. All banks in the city, excepting the First National, belong to its membership. The officers are: president, J. Dean, cashier of the Security Bank; manager, W. E. Burwell, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National Bank; directors, J. M. Williams, cashier of Merchants National bank, Chas. McC. Reeve, assistant cashier of City Bank, T. W. Wilson, president of Bank of Minneapolis, G. B. Shepherd, cashier of Citizens Bank, V. G. Hush, private banker. Meetings are subject to call of the manager.

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF MINNEAPOLIS.

The Board of Trade of the city of Minneapolis was organized by W. D. Washburn, H. T. Welles, Richard Chute, John Potts Brown, A. B. Barton, J. S. Walker, E. W. Herriek, Jacob Stone Jr., and W. W. McNair, who associated themselves together October 30th, 1872, as a body corporate under the above name. "The purpose of the association is to facilitate and promote the commercial, mercantile, and manufacturing interests of the city of Minneapolis; to encourage just and equitable principles of trade, and uniformity in the commercial usages of the city; to acquire, preserve and disseminate valuable business information; to adjust controversies and misunderstandings that may occur between parties engaged in trade, and to advance the general prosperity of the city of Minneapolis." The first annual report of the association was made in 1876, since which time a daily record of business has been kept. The present officers are: George A. Pillsbury, president; Samuel C. Gale, vice-president; F. W. Brook, second vice-president; C. C. Sturtevant, secretary; Valentine G. Hush, treasurer; N. W. Yersa, grain inspector.

RAILROADS.

From the arrival of the "Anthony Wayne," the first steamboat at the falls, April 13th, 1850, with Gov. Alexander Ramsey and other distinguished persons on board, to the present time, the "Common Carrier" by land and water has been intimately associated with every step in the progress of this city. Steamboats and stages carried the mails, merchandise and limited products of the pioneer. These were looked upon with pardonable pride as a great advance from the days of the uncertain voyageur, or the half-breed courier, pursuing his course through the trackless forests.

The first Minnesota railroad, opened for traffic, was the St. Paul and Pacific, June 28th, 1862, on the line commenced by the Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company, which was chartered May 22d, 1857, as a land grant road. This road was only ten miles in length, extending from St. Paul to St. Anthony, and had its terminus and depot near the foot of Central Avenue, running thence along the river bank, and striking the present line near the University. Upon the completion of the proposed union depot and iron railroad bridge, much of this ground will be again devoted to railroad use.

The branch line was completed to Anoka, January, 1864, and in the fall of 1867, to Sauk Rapids. In the winter of 1866 and 1867, a bridge was built and a depot located on the west side. Cars by this line were run into Minneapolis the latter part of March, following, and to Wayzata the same year. December 31st, 1868, the road was completed to Howard Lake. E. F. Drake was contractor for the first ten miles, and Edmund Rice was president at that time. J. P. Farley operated the road for some years, as general manager and receiver.

The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, organized in 1879, with George Stephen, president; R. B. Angus, vice-president; and J. J. Hill, general manager, now owns and operates these and other roads. A branch to Osseo is in process of construction.

The next road, in point of time, operated from Minneapolis, was that now known as the Iowa and Minnesota Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the first record of which is a charter, dated March 1st, 1856, to the Minneapolis and Cedar Valley Railroad Company, organized October 9, 1860. Name changed March 6, 1863, to Minnesota Central Railroad Company. This company built and operated the road and received the land grant. August 5th, 1867, the main part of the line was transferred to the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company and on February 15th, the eleven miles south of Austin was sold to the same corporation. By the terms of the sale, the Minnesota Central Company continue to own the lands granted to aid in constructing the road. All Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul trains to St. Paul and Chicago, were formerly run over this road as far as Mendota but during the year 1880, a double track short line to St. Paul was constructed. This road crosses the Mississippi at Meeker's Island, three miles below the falls, on a magnificent iron bridge, and was opened for passenger traffic from September 6th to the 11th, and November 20th it was permanently opened for business. The same year a "cut-off," extending thirty miles south-west, to connect with the Hastings and Dakota Railroad, was built. Extensive shops, employing four hundred men, and round-house, are located at South Minneapolis. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Company generally own and run their own sleeping cars. The express business is done by the American and United States express companies, but no concessions are made to fast freight lines.

The Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway originated in a charter by the legislature of the Territory of Minnesota March 3d, 1853, as the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, to build from some point on the St. Croix river to St. Paul and St. Anthony, thence across the Mississippi river to the western boundary of the state. The name of the corporation was changed by vote of the board of directors, May 27th, 1870, to the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway Company, and in 1871, twenty-seven miles were finished to Merriam Junction. The road was completed to Albert Lea, 108 miles November, 1877. This company never had any land grant, but received $250,000 in bonds from the city of Minneapolis. They have a permanent lease of the Minneapolis and Duluth Railroad, and a lease for use of track from the St. Paul and Duluth Company. The general offices and shops are located at Minneapolis. Work was commenced on the Minneapolis and Duluth Road April, 1871, and August 15th it was opened for traffic.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company, chartered by congress July 2d, 1864, re-organized September 29th, 1875, have no road to this place, but run their trains and do a regular business in connection with their main line by a lease for ninety-nine years of the Western Railroad of Minnesota, 60.5 miles, and a permanent contract with the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Company for the use of their track from St. Paul to Sauk Rapids, 75.5 miles, paying for this privilege $40,000 per annum, and a portion of expenses. The Northern Pacific Company do their own express and sleeping-car business.

The Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Company have a freight depot and extensive yards at the foot of Fourth Avenue north, receiving and sending cars over the Manitoba line, having no road in Hennepin county.

The Minneapolis and Eastern Railroad was incorporated June, 1878, and completed in the spring of 1879. It is used jointly by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha companies for switching and running cars to and from the mills. Cost, $175,000, for about two miles of track.

The Lyndale Railway Company was organized as a stock company under the general laws of the state, the object being the construction and management of a suburban excursion line. The company was incorporated in June, 1878, with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars. They secured the right of way, and May 19th, 1879, commenced the construction of the line. June 26th, a little more than one month after the commencement of operations, trains were running regularly to Lake Calhoun, a distance of four miles from the terminus in Minneapolis. During the first year, over three hundred thousand people were carried over this line, and in 1880 the number reached three hundred and seventy-five thousand. June, 1880, the line was extended to Lake Harriet. The same company run a steamer on Lake Calhoun in connection with the Lyndale line. The line is equipped with six passenger cars, three flat cars, and two motors, operating four and a half miles of road, all cars being furnished with the Eames vacuum brake. At Lake Calhoun are sheds for the cars and motors when not in use, also cottages for the employees and their families. Trains start from the terminus, corner of Hennepin Avenue and First street, and from the corner of Washington and First Avenues south, making trips regularly every hour and a half. Business offices of the company are located over the Northwestern National Bank. So great is the care taken in the management of the road, that there has never been an accident. Property along the whole line has greatly advanced in value, and no streets in the city show more new buildings than those which the Lyndale road follows. The Minneapolis and Lake Park Railway is projected, and will be in operation August 1st, 1881. This line extends from Minneapolis to Excelsior and Lake Park, and will be operated in connection with the Lyndale road. The officers of the road are as follows: C. W. McCrory, president; R. S. Innes, secretary; S. E. Neiler, treasurer.

The Minneapolis Street Railway was incorporated June 24th, 1873; incorporators, D. Morrison, R. J. Mendenhall, W. W. Eastman, W. D. Washburn, W. P. Westfall, R. B. Langdon, William S. King, J. C. Oswald, W. W. McNair, Paris Gibson. September 2d, 1875, the road was opened for travel and the first car started. The first officers were Philo Osgood, president; Thomas Lowry, vice-president; William S. King, secretary; James Tuckerman, treasurer and superintendent. The company have at present eleven and a half miles of track, twenty-one cars and 150 horses, giving employment to about one hundred men. Plans are made for about eleven miles of additional track, with corresponding increase of cars and horses, during the coming season. The present officers of the company are Thomas Lowry, president; Clinton Morrison, vice-president; C. G. Goodrich Jr., secretary; W. W. Herrick, treasurer; D. Atwood, superintendent.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES—LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—MILITARY COMPANIES —AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY—MEDICAL SOCIETIES—ATHENAEUM.

When the North-western Telegraph Company first projected its lines to Minneapolis, it opened its office in St. Anthony, and afterward in a room over R. J. Baldwin's bank on bridge square. In February, 1866, L. C. Robertson took charge of the business, in Dayton's block, now St. James hotel, in a room also occupied by the Minnesota Central Railway Company. At this time the company seriously contemplated closing the office as unprofitable, the monthly receipts being only $140. The commercial and railroad business was transacted over one line, in one office, and required but one operator, and no messenger boys. The line extended from St. Paul to Faribault, via Minneapolis. When the Minnesota Central Railway built their depot in 1868, they provided rooms for general offices, and the railroad and commercial telegraph business were separated, the latter going into the Warner block, opposite the Nicollet, and thence into the city hall building, where it now remains. Here are employed eleven operators, two chiefs and the manager. The company's lines extend all over the north-west, and the receipts of this office for one month in 1880, were $1,700.

Telephones were first introduced in this state in 1877, by R. H. Hankinson, who had been appointed exclusive agent of the Bell Telephone Company for Minnesota and Dakota. The first line built was that of the Monitor Plow Works, connecting the factory and offices. In December, 1878, Mr. Hankinson organized the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Company, which immediately established the exchange at Minneapolis and St. Paul, and opened in March following with fifty-three subscribers in Minneapolis and thirty-seven in St. Paul. The first officers elected were: John Watson, president; R. H. Hankinson, vice-president and general manager; F. B. Jilson, secretary; L. M. Towne, treasurer. The present officers are: H. M. Carpenter, president; John Watson, vice-president and general manager; F. B. Jilson, secretary; C. H. Prior, treasurer; L. M. Towne, auditor. During 1880, exchanges were established in Stillwater, Winona and Duluth, and others will be started during the present season. The number of subscribers in Minneapolis at present is five hundred and fifty, and in Hennepin county 1,000 instruments are in use. In Minnesota and Dakota 2,200 are used, and the number is constantly increasing.

Hennepin County Catholic Building and Loan Association, limited to twenty years, was incorporated August 18th, 1874. The object is to accumulate a fund from the savings of its members with which to purchase real estate, build residences, and invest in such other channels as may be deemed advisable. The first issue of stock was limited to 1,500 shares, payable in monthly installments of $1.05; this number has been increased to 2,200. The original officers were: president, Matthew Walsh; secretary, D. L. Toner; treasurer, J. F. O'Neill; managers for a term of five years, M. W. Glenn, B. McElroy and P. J. Callaghan; for two years, John Fewer, M. Kennedy and M. W. Nash; for one year, M. Hoy, Stephen Cody and W. E. Nannary. Meetings began August 20th, 1874, and are held on the first Thursday after the 15th day of each month, until every share shall end and be determined. The present officers are: M. Walsh, president; John McGovern, first vice-president; John Fewer, second vice-president; Peter McCormick, secretary; J. C. Scallon, assistant secretary, Wm. McMullen, treasurer; managers, first section, M. W. Nash, John Fewer and John Hayes; second section, Michael More, James Cullen and J. C. Scallon; third section, J. P. Courtney, B. Monso and Thomas Mulcahey; stewards, J. Lahly, James Sweeney and John McElroy; attorney, J. T. Burns.

Mechanics' and Workingmen's Loan and Building Association, organized September 7th, 1874. The price per share of the stock is $200, and when it started five hundred were immediately taken. In February the number of shares taken was 1,250. The association now issues semi-annual series of shares, in March and September. This corporation has for its object the investment in lands and residences, of the savings of its members. Meetings are held the second Tuesday of each month, in the board of trade rooms in the city hall. The present officers are, president, S. L. Brearly; secretary, O. M. Laraway; treasurer, F. S. McDonald; attorney, Charles Robinson. The managers are, W. H. Stickney, C. N. Boardman, F. M. Dunn, Ralph Rees, W. M. Tweedie, Selah Matthews, A. J. Hart, John Walker and J. J. Jeffery.

The Minneapolis Mutual Benefit Building Association was incorporated in January, 1871, for the accumulation of a fund, by the savings of the members, for purchasing of real estate and building of residences and such other investments as may be decided upon. The capital stock was first fixed at 2,500 shares, with power to increase the same from time to time. The first meeting was held on January 31st, and the regular meetings have been held every fourth Saturday since. The present officers are president, R. E. Grimshaw; secretary, W. P. Northway; treasurer, O. M. Laraway; attorney, G. W. Chowen.

The Turners' Building Association was organized in September, 1877, held their first meeting October 5th, and filed their articles of incorporation, October 10th, following. The first officers were, George Thele, president; Herman Hein, vice-president; J. Monasch, secretary; William Mas-solt, treasurer; Anton Grethen, attorney. The first issue of stock amounted to 868 shares; since then four series have been made, amounting in all to 3,440 shares, 670 of which have been withdrawn.

MINING COMPANIES.

The Bristol Silver Mining Company was organized December 2d, 1879, with a capital of $50,000, and the first officers were George H. Keith, president; Frank A. Lewis, vice-president; R. J. Baldwin, secretary and treasurer. The capital has been increased to $200,000, and the officers are unchanged excepting secretary and treasurer, who now are F. Hughes and W. D. Hale. The mines are in Lincoln county, Nevada.

The Lincoln Mining Company was organized in October, 1880, with a capital of $250,000. The mines are in Lincoln county, Nevada. The officers are Wm. Windom, president; C. C. Jones, vice-president; H. M. Goodhue, secretary; R. S. Jones, treasurer; G. J. Goodhue, manager.

The Arizona Northern Mining Company was organized in March, 1880, with a capital of $70,000. They own the "Cerberat," "Connor" and "Snowflake" mines in Mohave county, Arizona, and are rapidly developing them. The officers are: Anthony Kelly, president; R. J. Baldwin, secretary; T. S. King, assistant secretary; J. K. Sidle, treasurer.

The Minneapolis Gas Light Company was organized February 24th, 1870, with D. Morrison, president; W. P. Westfall, treasurer; George H. Rust, Secretary; and a board of directors consisting of D. Morrison, W. P. Westfall, H. S. Southard, S. C. Gale and F. S. Gilson. The company has continually extended its gas mains, and now has twenty-five miles laid in the various streets of the city. The present officers are: A. C. Rand, president; H. W. Brown, superintendent; A. T. Rand, secretary. The office is at No. 413 Nicollet Avenue.

The North-western Globe Gaslight Company was incorporated in 1877, with a capital of $100,000. Its object is to light private grounds and streets with gasoline. The business is extensive, sixty per cent. of the city being lighted by this process. The officers are Dorilus Morrison, president; A. M. Reid, vice president; S. A. Harris, secretary and treasurer, G. A. March, general manager. The directors are D. Morrison, A. M. Reid, S. A. Harris, W. W. McNair and G. A. March.

The Minneapolis Light Infantry was organized in July, 1879, and sworn into state service October 9, following, by S. A. Sims, mustering officer. The company had at that time a membership of thirty-two persons, and the highest officer was second lieutenant, to which place Mr. Sims was elected, and F. B. Moore was chosen orderly sergeant. In December the number of officers was increased, Mr. Sims elected first lieutenant and W. L. Eldred, second. At this time they received fifty breech-loading Springfield rifles, and fatigue equipments. In February, 1880, the office of captain was created and J. P. Rea elected. In October, 1880, they received twenty-five more rifles and equipments from the state. During the summer season the company meets in squads for rifle practice on their range in the East Division. The present officers are captain, J. P. Rea; first lieutenant, S. A. Sims; second lieutenant, G. M. Naylor; orderly sergeant, F. S. Barnard; second sergeant, J. G. Rogers, third sergeant and quarter-master, Perry Harrison; fourth sergeant, E. D. Hill; color sergeant, d'B. O. Scott; corporals, E. L. Lockwood, A. Baker, C. Langdon, and F. L. Foote. The officers of the civil organization are, J. P. Rea, president; G. M. Naylor, vice-president; F. W. Greene, recording secretary; William Wright, financial secretary; E. L. Goddard, treasurer. The first child born after the organization of the regiment was a daughter of N. F. Warner. This child, Mary E. Warner, born May 23d, 1880, was, on the 25th of the same month, adopted as the "Daughter of the Regiment."

The Minneapolis Zouave corps of the Minnesota National Guards, was formerly the Knights of Pythias drill corps, but organized independent of that order, February 14th, 1880, and was mustered into state service on the 24th, of the same month. The officers are A. A. Ames, captain; G. R. Seaton, first lieutenant; L. E. Harrison, second lieutenant; C. B. Case, orderly sergeant: Mr. Harrison resigned January 5th, 1881, and Albert Marsh was promoted to his place. When mustered into service, the corps numbered thirty-six men besides the officers, and now has seventy-five and a drum corps of seventeen members. The intention is to form the corps into an infantry and cavalry company, and battery with two pieces.

Minnesota Agricultural and Mechanical Association. The officers are: Wm. S. King, president; Charles H. Clarke, secretary; Valentine G. Hush, treasurer; and an advisory board composed of Wm. W. Folwell, President University of Minnesota, chairman; Hon. D. L. Buell, Houston county; James Archer, Hennepin county; J. C. Easton, Fillmore county; David L. How, Scott county; H. F. Morse, Winona county; Hon. John F. Meagher, Blue Earth county; Hon. J. P. Rahilly, Wabasha county; Gen. James H. Baker, Blue Earth county; Col. W. H. Feller, Wabasha county; Hon. E. S. Brown, Washington county; Hon. J. A. Thatcher, Goodhue county; Hon. Knute Nelson, Douglass county; Hon. Jared Benson, Anoka county; Hon. T. C. McChure, Stearns county. This association organized in the season of 1877, has become thoroughly identified with the interests of not only Minneapolis and Minnesota, but of the entire north-west. Its efforts in the direction of laying before the public, the vast resources of the north-west, as demonstrated in the unqualified success of its annual fairs and expositions, have been largely conducive to the general interests of Minneapolis, in that, large gatherings of people from all parts of the United States, are here brought face to face with western and particularly Minnesota energy and enterprise. The results shown from year to year, thus far, in the improvement of stock and machinery, and in the general growing spirit of emulation, proves the value of such a stimulus as this organization. The management disburses annually for expenses and in premiums not less than forty thousand dollars, has always paid its liabilities, and aims to keep not only pace with the general growth, but a place at the front, in the rapid and wonderful prosperity of the country. With an advisory board made up of well known and representative men, located in different parts of the state, the executive control of its affairs rest solely in the hands of the president, Wm. S. King, and secretary, Charles H. Clarke. Patriotism and public spirit alone, actuate, and a desire to forward the march of improvement, alone rules. The association so far may be said to have paid its own way, only a comparatively small sum, commensurate with the large outlay, having been contributed or donated. The attendance at the annual gatherings approximate 100,000 people that come from a distance, the city of St. Paul by its close proximity, and frequent railroad connection, receiving its full share of the immediate patronage of so large an attendance. This association was not organized with a view of taking the place of any similar organization already in existence, but solely independent, with a settled location to grow and accumulate with Minneapolis.

The Hahnemann Medical Society of Hennepin county, Minnesota, was organized September 16th, 1872, and was the result of an informal meeting of the homeopathic physicians of the city, held in Dr. W. H. Leonard's office, September 2d of that year. A constitution and by-laws were adopted and signed by Drs. D. M. Goodwin, W. H. Leonard, G. T. Flanders, T. R. Huntington, M. H. Wallens, and Petrus Nelson. Dr. Huntington died in March, 1873. The membership of the society continued to grow rapidly, and during the eight years of its existence the following events of importance have occurred: In April, 1875, a medical fee-bill was established, regulating the charges of the society; a joint committee of both the homeopathic and alopathic schools met and agreed on the rates which they should charge. In May, 1880, the joint committee met and drew up a schedule, fixing the rates for certain surgical operations. The same month, a plan was formed for the establishment of a free dispensary, where the poor might secure such medical aid as they stand in need of. The result was that it was opened in Cottage Hospital. About 1,500 people, who were unable to pay for medicines, have been treated, nearly 3,000 prescriptions have been put up, and about 300 families, who were unable to apply personally at the dispensary, have been visited. The officers of the society are: A. A. Camp, president; M. L. Swain, vice-president; A. J. Hutchinson, secretary and treasurer; D. M. Goodwin, A. E. Higbee, and W. H. Leonard, censors. Monthly meetings are held.

The Union Medical Society was organized early in 1856, with A. E. Ames, president; C. L. Anderson, vice-president; Dr. Wheelock, secretary; C. W. Le'Boutillier, treasurer. Among the old members were Drs. A. E. Ames, C. L. Anderson, Wheelock, C. W. Le'Boutillier, A. E. Johnson, W. H. Leonard, Loewenberg, A. Ortman, Ward, A. J. White and W. D. Dilb. Of these, Drs. Johnson, Leonard and Ortman remain; the rest are dead, or have removed from this city. June 7th, 1870, the society re-organized as the Hennepin County Medical Society, with Drs. A. E. Ames, and N. B. Hill, both since deceased, as president and vice-president. The present officers are, O. J. Evans, president; C. L. Wells, vice-president; A. C. Fairbairn, secretary; W. Miller, treasurer; W. A. Hamilton, librarian. The meetings are held the first and third Mondays of each month, at places designated before adjournment.

Minnesota Academy of Natural Sciences. The initiatory step to the formation of this institution which has for several years maintained an unostentatious but not unproductive activity in our midst, was taken on January 4th, 1873, when a number of gentlemen gathered in the office of Dr. Johnson, to discuss the feasibility of forming a society, having for its object, "The cultivation of Natural Science in general, and especially the sciences of Geology and Archaeology." Prof. E. W. B. Harvey was elected chairman, and Dr. Charles Simpson, secretary. It was resolved to incorporate a society under the general law, with the above name, and a committee consisting of Charles Simpson, E. W. B. Harvey, and A. E. Johnson, was appointed to frame the articles of incorporation which were more fully discussed at the next meeting, at which time the first officers of the academy were elected as follows: president, A. E. Johnson; vice-president, S. C. Gale; secretary, Charles Simpson; corresponding secretary, A. E. Ames; treasurer, E. W. B. Harvey; trustees, Paris Gibson, C. E. Rogers, W. H. Leonard, A. F. Elliot, O. V. Tousley, and M. D. Stoneman. From this time onward there has been a gradual increase in numbers and interest, so that the rolls now show about fifty members in place of the eleven charter members. The earlier meetings of the academy were held in the office of Dr. Johnson, but in November of 1875, the academy removed to the west side and was installed in commodious rooms in Centre block, 214 Nicollet Avenue. The museums, which are chiefly dependent upon occasional donations, have assumed respectable proportions, notably in the direction of ornithology through the labors of Dr. Hatch and others; valuable contributions to the mineralogical and entomological cabinets were also secured, while the library contains a large number of valuable government reports, and proceedings of various scientific societies. The academy has, from time to time, published bulletins containing not only interesting discussions of living scientific questions, but the results of extensive original investigation. It has also proven its public spiritedness by securing the services of eminent platform speakers. Within a short time it has been found expedient to divide the academy into sections, for purposes of co-operative investigation and study, each section forming an organic part of the academy. During the early part of 1881, a protracted session of the academy was held at which papers by scientific men from different sections of the country were read. To this course of lectures and essays the general public was invited, and responded largely. Thus began an era of broader influences for the institution, and it took its place among the educational influences of the state.

Minneapolis Athenæum. Early in the spring of 1859, it was announced that Bayard Taylor would visit the north-west and would lecture before any literary society or library association that would pay his expenses, the balance of the receipts to be applied to the benefit of such association. A few of the citizens met together at the office of Nicholas & Charlton and resolved to organize a library association. A committee was appointed to draw articles of incorporation. They reported on the 18th of May, 1859, that it was not expedient to draft articles of incorporation, but recommended that the "constitution of the Young Men's Library Association" be, and it was adopted, and the officers elected. May 25th, 1859, Mr. Taylor delivered his lecture, the proceeds of which amounted to one hundred and forty-one dollars and seventy-five cents. Fifty-eight dollars and twenty-five cents were paid to Mr. Taylor, and the balance was received by the association. The name "Minneapolis Athenæum" was adopted; it was thought best that the society should be a chartered corporation, and public notice was given that a meeting would be held on January 3d, 1860, to take measures to procure a charter. A draft of a charter was made and sent to Jesse Bishop to be presented to the legislature for enactment, but was refused, as it was unconstitutional to grant, and also unnecessary, as there was a provision under the general statutes for the organization of scientific and educational societies, including libraries. During the summer of 1865, the lot on which the Athenæum building now stands, was purchased for $1,500, and the structure erected in 1866, subscriptions to the amount of $10,693.93 being received for that purpose. Dr. Kirby Spencer, who died March 19th, 1870, a shareholder and staunch friend of the Athenæum, left a fund of about $45,000 which yields an income of $2,000 annually, to be invested solely in books for the library. The library is valued at between $18,000 and $20,000, and consists of about 30,000 volumes, besides which are received forty magazines and fifteen weekly and daily newspapers. The present officers are: J. E. Bell, president; R. W. Laing, vice-president; W. H. Hinkle, secretary; C. McC. Reeve, treasurer; T. B. Walker, C. A. Boyce and H. G. O. Morrison, directors.

CHAPTER LXIX.

EDUCATIONAL—PUBLIC SCHOOLS—UNIVERSITY
—MACALESTER COLLEGE—PRIVATE SCHOOLS —BUSINESS COLLEGES—AUGSBURG SEMINARY —KINDERGARTEN SCHOOLS.

The educational system of Minneapolis is justly a source of satisfaction and pride to the citizens. It consists of public graded schools, providing a course of instruction preparatory to the University, private schools, supplementary to these, and finally the University and theological Seminaries. However perfect the system of public schools may be, a field is always open for private institutions, more especially for families of wealth, whose children can be afforded higher culture in what are called the ornamental branches. In the lower grades of education a similar demand is found in all towns, even under our democratic government. These wants are supplied in Minneapolis by several institutions that rank high in the estimate of their patrons. The great demand, however, will always be for what the Germans call the "bread and butter sciences," by which term they intend those branches of education that are immediately convertible to practical use, by means of which a man may secure more elevating employment and command higher wages.

It has long ceased to be a matter of pride to know how to read and write, but it is a positive disgrace not to know how; so the voice of the people, more potent than any state law on the subject, compels the education of all children, at least in the primary branches. Primary education is a "sine qua non" in the struggle for existence; above the primary, branches more or less liberal in the regard to the true function of education usually operate to the discouragement by the public of the more liberal branches taught in the high schools of the country. When all vote and all feel at liberty and consider themselves qualified to pass judgment on plans and methods of education, it is not strange that differences in opinion exist. The higher the culture of the critic, the more ready he is to admit that there is no science of education, and it must remain empirical until a superior of Edison shall arise, who can take brains upon his experimental table, locate the mind itself and each of its faculties, explain the subtle relation between it and matter, and show a course of training by which each individual faculty can be cultivated, developed or even created. Fortunately for Minneapolis, its educational interests have fallen into the hands of high-minded and cultivated men, whose liberal views have extended beyond the limited range of the ordinary critic. Fortunately, too, business has so engrossed those, who might otherwise be intrusive critics, that greater progress in the right direction has taken place in the school system than would have been possible in an eastern town, where wealth, secure position and leisure afford unlimited opportunity for interference. Narrow criticism looks to minutiae and technicalities while broad culture looks to the development of the active powers of the mind. The former regards the possession of knowledge as the end of education, while the latter regards that education as the most complete, which permits the longest pleasurable extending of the attention on a given subject. In a word knowledge is the mean and culture the end toward which the educational system of Minneapolis gravitates. The result of the system is, and must be the development of the highest degree of fitness for the exigencies of life. The value of property permanently invested for school purposes in Minneapolis amounts to $2,241,897.59.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

This view of education requires an elastic system adapted to the variety of minds with which it has to deal. Such a system has been formulated under the management of O. V. Tousley, which has extended over a period of about twelve years. During this time the present extensive arrangements have been perfected. At the time of Prof. Tousley's appointment as principal of the high school, only four of the present school buildings had been erected. Ten have since sprung up in the various parts of the city most convenient for the daily attendance of pupils.

The first legislation of Minnesota was an act, passed by the first territorial legislature on the last day of its session, November 1st, 1849, to establish and maintain common schools.

On the 3d of March, next preceding, congress, in the act by which the territorial government of Minnesota was established, provided in section 18, "That when the lands in the said territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections numbering eighteen and thirty-six in each township in said territory, shall be, and the same are hereby reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said territory, and in the states and territories hereafter to be created out of the same." This gave Minnesota about 3,000,000 acres of land for the support of public schools.

To Governor Ramsey, the first territorial governor, Minnesota is indebted for timely suggestions pertaining to educational matters, and for appealing to congress for gifts of public lands for higher learning. The school code of 1849 is declared to be an honor to the legislative assembly that passed it.

The history of the educational institutions of Minneapolis begins, before the legislative act referred to, and before the territorial organization, by the little school of Miss Electa Bachus, on the east side, with the school-house built in 1849; and on the west side, that of Miss Mary E. Miller, commenced December 3d, 1852, already referred to.

"The earliest books of record in the possession of the board of education contain the following proceedings, and relate to the east side:

"The board of public school directors for the city of St. Anthony, consisting of John L. Lovejoy, Orrin Curtis, John B. Gillfillan, Martin Stites, S. F. Rankin, and Charles Crawford, duly elected at the annual city election for said city, on the third day of April, 1860, held their first meeting at the office of Orrin Curtis, in said city, on Saturday, April 7th, 1860, at 7 o'clock P. M.

"A resolution offered by Mr. Gillfillan was adopted, to the effect that the secretary be instructed to notify the trustees of the several school districts in this city that this board is duly organized, and require them to deliver up to this board the books and effects of their respective districts, and also to make a report of their proceedings as required by law.

"The first records in the possession of the west side Board of Education are dated June 23d, 1865. The salary of the principal, Professor Jenness, was at that time fixed at $1,000; his principal assistant, Mr. Riegel, $400; and a force of female teachers, among whom are some who are still employed as teachers, had salaries ranging from $325 to $375. In October, 1865, it was determined to lay the foundation for the Union (now Washington) school building, which was completed the following season, and is now the oldest public school building in the city. The first move for the Central (now Winthrop) building, on the east side, was made April 13th, 1865, when it was voted to be expedient to buy a site for a building, which was done, and the building erected in 1867."

We may safely pass to the beginning of the present incumbency, without omitting any important details. Professor Tousley began his administration as principal of the high school in 1869, and was subsequently chosen superintendent. The influence of his liberal ideas was soon felt, and from them was developed the present educational scheme of the city. Perfect harmony has existed between the school board and the superintendent, and such confidence is felt in him that much of the power vested in them is relegated to him.

In the management of the schools several items are especially noteworthy. All religious exercises are forbidden in the schools; by which provision all causes of controversy growing out of the heterogeneous element of the population are avoided. Another item is that, while culture is demanded on the part of the teachers in all grades, in the primary, especially, a cheerful temper full of sunshine is considered an essential requisite of a teacher. A third point, and one which is especially valuable, is that frequent examinations are required in the intermediate and higher grades, by means of which the varying capacities of pupils are measured and provision is made for the rapid advance of some and the corresponding delay of others. Examinations are required, under the direction of the superintendent, of all pupils before passing from one grade to another. It would be impossible to touch on all the many valuable and progressive features of the public schools, such as general and oral lessons, the introduction of supplemental reading matter, etc., etc. It is sufficient to say that the educational systems of the older states have been canvassed and from their several departures, modified by good judgment for the differing conditions, an admirable system has been developed.

The public schools are divided into four departments, viz: Primary, intermediate, grammar school and high school. The primary schools include the first, second and third grades; the intermediate, the fourth and fifth; the grammar schools, the sixth, seventh and eighth.

The total expense of conducting the schools of the city during the last year was $88,431.87; of which sum $68,728.75 was salaries of teachers. This does not include expenditures for bonds, interest, or permanent improvements. Fourteen school buildings are in use in the city, viz: Washington, built in 1866, value of building and site

$40,000; Lincoln, 1867, $16,063; Jackson, 1867, $15,000; Winthrop, 1867, $45,500; Madison, 1870, $14,000; Everett, 1871, $8,100; Marcy, 1872, $14,000; Franklin, 1873, $18,000; Adams, 1874, $19,000; Sumner, 1876, $17,000; Jefferson, 1877, $29,763; Monroe, 1878, $22,920; Humbolt, 1878, $13,589; High school, 1878, $86,427. Total value of buildings with estimated value of sites, $359,362. Unoccupied real estate for school purposes, in addition is $5,400. The number of sittings furnished for pupils is 5,618.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

From the recently taken United States census it appears that the children of this city are distributed as to ages as follows: Under five years, 5,362; five years, 1,231; between six and fifteen years, 7,157; between fifteen and twenty-one years 5,619. Total under twenty-one, 19,399.

From the last report of the board of education it appears that 6,112 pupils were enrolled in the schools. Of this number 352 were between fifteen and twenty-one. Our schools thus reach over eighty per cent. of the pupils who in the west attend the common schools. It is believed that this is a larger per cent. of what may be termed (for the lack of a better word) schoolable persons than in any other state this side of the Alleghany mountains.

An examination of the schools of the country shows that, of the pupils that enter the schools at the age of six years, a larger per cent. reach the high school in Minneapolis than in almost any other city. Out of an enrollment of 5,000 in round numbers, there are now 300 in attendance at the high school, which is six per cent.; and upon this basis schools seldom reach five per cent. This shows at once the tendency of the scholars toward the high school, and its close sympathy with the connecting grades below it. It is also a noteworthy fact that among all the graduates of the high school, over seventy-five per cent. have been from the families of intelligent mechanics and people of limited, or, at the most, of moderate means showing that the interests of these classes of the people are closely bound up in maintaining a high school in fact, as well as in name. Not ten per cent. of the graduates are from the families of the really rich.

The average number of pupils in daily attendance is 4,248. The cost per pupil, based on average daily attendance is $19.24; based on the total number enrolled, $13.31 per capita. The whole number of teachers employed is one hundred and twenty, of whom five are males. The money necessary for the maintenance of public schools is derived partly from the general school fund of the state, which has become large by reason of the careful husbandry of government land endowment, and from direct taxation. The power of taxation is vested in the board of education, the only limitation of which is, that the tax shall not exceed the generous allowance of fifteen mills.

Experience has proved that Minneapolis can elect men worthy of the confidence thus reposed in them. The following is the school board of 1880: Hon. Dorilus Morrison, president. Hon. A. C. Austin, Hon. Winthrop Young, Hon. J. W. Johnson, Prof. S. Oftedal. Hon. S. C. Gale, Prof. O. V. Tousley, superintendent of schools.

The University of Minnesota. The Territory of Minnesota was created by act of congress, March 3d, 1849. A subsequent act passed February 19th, 1851, authorized and directed the secretary of the interior to set apart and reserve from sale, a quantity of public lands not exceeding two entire townships, for the use and support of a university in said territory. In anticipation of this act of congress, the territorial legislature had on the 13th of February, 1851, passed a law providing for the establishment of an "institution under the name and style of the University of Minnesota," and for its location at or near the Falls of St. Anthony. Under this act a board of regents was elected by the legislature a few days later. This board organized, selected a site near the center of St. Anthony (now the east division of Minneapolis) just above the mills fronting on Main street and the Mississippi river, built a small wooden building by means of private subscriptions, and in November of 1851, opened therein a preparatory department. In January, 1854, order was taken for the location of the public lands already mentioned. In the course of the same year, the site at first selected having been found to be in too close proximity to the business and manufacturing of the town, another, being that now occupied, lying on the high bluff on the east bank of the river, about one mile below the falls, was purchased. Owing to this change, the preparatory department was discontinued. In the summer of 1856, a contract was made for the erection of the south wing of a university building of large dimensions, to be completed within eighteen months from September 6th, 1856. By this time the public lands had all been located except 11,000 or 12,000 acres.

The state constitution, adopted by the people October 13th, 1857, and approved by congress May 11th, 1858, contains the following generous and emphatic provision for the university:

"The location of the University of Minnesota, as established by existing laws, is hereby confirmed, and said institution is hereby declared to be the University of the State of Minnesota. All the rights, immunities, franchises, and endowments heretofore granted or conferred, are hereby perpetuated unto the said University; and all lands which may be granted hereafter by Congress, or other donations for said University purposes, shall vest in the institution referred to in this section."—Constitution, Article VII, Section 4.

The effect of this action was to convert the University of the Territory of Minnesota into the University of the State of Minnesota, but there was no change of administration until 1860, in which year a new board of regents was constituted. This board, during its continuance, was mainly occupied in futile endeavors to liquidate the debts of the old corporation incurred in the erection of the building.

It is but justice to say that the territorial board, composed of honest, high minded men, such as Franklin Steele, H. M. Rice, H. H. Sibley, Wm. R. Marshall, Isaac Atwater, and John H. Stevens, erred only as their fellow-citizens had erred in the flush times preceding 1857. They only planned too generously. The sincerity of their interest in the cause of higher education is attested beyond question by their liberal personal contributions. Theirs was not the only noble enterprise which was overtaken and overwhelmed by the financial reverses of 1857-8.

In 1861 the legislature appointed a special commission, composed of Hon. John S. Pillsbury, Hon. John Nicols, and Hon. O. C. Merriman, with full powers to sell property and pay debts. This board were occupied until 1867 in this duty, when, on December 23d, they reported the indebtedness substantially liquidated by the sale of less than 12,000 acres of land.

The legislature of 1867 having appropriated a sum of money to repair and renovate the building, which had stood idle and empty for nearly ten years, and having authorized the opening of a preparatory department, the board had employed as principal the Rev. W. W. Washburn, B. A., who, on the 7th day of October, 1867, with two assistants, began the work of instruction.

In 1865, the land grant of the general government for colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, had been accepted by the state legislature, and intrusted to the trustees of the state agricultural college, which had been chartered in 1858, and located in McLeod county.

All of the foregoing legislation save the constitutional enactment may be regarded as tentative and provisional. The University as a reality, dates its organization from the law of February 18th, 1868, entitled "an act to re-organize the University of Minnesota, and to establish an agricultural college therein." This act as modified in some details by subsequent legislation may be found in full in the general statutes of Minnesota for 1878, and may be regarded as the charter of the institution.

This organic act authorizes the opening of various departments or colleges; places the government in a board of ten regents, three serving ex-officiis, the governor, the state superintendent of public instruction, and president of the University, and seven appointed by the governor, with consent of the senate, holding office for three years; and prescribes the officers of the board and their respective duties. It contains the usual and necessary provisions relating to the election of the faculty, to meetings, and reports, and declares the regents a body corporate under the name and style of The University of Minnesota. The only provision of the charter needing special mention, is that contained in section seven, which inviolably appropriates and places at the disposal of the board of regents, all the interest and income of the fund derived from the sales of all lands granted to the state under the act of congress, approved July 2d, 1862, commonly called the "Agricultural College Act." Thus all the endowments of the general government for higher literary professional and industrial education were wisely merged and consolidated under a single management.

In pursuance of the organic act a board of regents was duly appointed, who met and organized, as required by law, on the first Wednesday in March, 1868. The members were William R. Marshall, then Governor; Mark H. Dunnell, then state superintendent of public instruction, ex-officiis; R. S. Donaldson, of Farmington; A. A. Harwood, of Owatonna; H. H. Sibley, of St. Paul; E. J. Thompson, of Chatfield; O. C. Merriman, of St. Anthony; John Nicols, of St. Paul, and J. S. Pillsbury, of St. Anthony. J. S. Pillsbury was chosen president, O. C. Merriman secretary, and John Nicols treasurer.

The preparatory department, opened in 1867, was conducted in an efficient and satisfactory manner by Mr. Washburn, and his assistants, Messrs. G. Campbell, Ira Moore and E. H. Twinning, throughout the years 1868 and 1869. In the summer of 1869 arrangements were made for beginning college work proper. A faculty consisting of nine gentlemen, were elected, and on the 13th of September, entered upon their duties. The only college class being the freshmen, and that not exceeding fifteen in number, the faculty were for the first year, and, indeed, for the two succeeding years chiefly engaged in the instruction of the preparatory students, who numbered nearly two hundred. Young women were admitted from the first, and no proposal has yet been made to refuse them instruction. In the course of the year 1869-70 the matter of a permanent organization of the several departments of instruction, and courses of study, came under consideration. Upon the recommendation of the president of the University, the board of regents, on the 28th day of June, 1870, adopted that general plan of organization which has since been in operation, and which by its apparent novelty has attracted considerable attention. The board were encouraged to adopt it by reason of warm and emphatic recommendations from educators of the highest rank and reputation in the country. The essential features of this plan only can be here noticed.

Under the organic law the board of regents are authorized to establish any desired number of departments or colleges, the following, however, being specified: "A department of elementary instruction; a department of science, literature and the arts; a college of agriculture; a college of mechanic arts; a college or department of medicine; a college or department of law."

The department of elementary instruction, otherwise designated, by virtue of a by-law of the board of regents, "The Collegiate Department," is introductory to the permanent colleges of the University. It includes, together with the work of the freshman and sophomore classes of the ordinary colleges, the remainder of the old preparatory department, so long as any may be retained.

This arrangement of departments emphasizes and formulates the growing tendency and custom of American colleges and universities to make the close of the second or sophomore year, a branching point for the introduction of optional studies, and for certain professional or technical courses. It pre-supposes a separation of the secondary and superior epochs of education, and a corresponding assortment of studies. The high schools and other "fitting schools" of the state are thus invited to extend their work substantially up to the junior year. When this shall have been generally done, the University will, as provided by law, dispense with the whole of the Department of Elementary Instruction, and will extend her work on post-graduate ground.

The general plan of the University contemplates a group or federation of distinct colleges; having each its own organization, faculty, buildings and equipment. Among the advantages claimed for this general plan may be named the following:

A faithful adherence to the letter and spirit of the laws, state and national, which have established and endowed the University, and which contemplates it as a federation of literary, professional and industrial colleges.

That, while offering the old college curriculum and discipline in their best forms to the literary and professional classes, the University will provide for the industrial classes that "liberal and practical education" required by law and public sentiment.

The separation of the natural epochs of secondary and superior education, and the ultimate liberation of the University from the elementary work of the former: and coinciding with this division, an advantageous assortment of studies, methods and discipline suitable to the two periods respectively.

A close and vital articulation of the University with the public school system of the state.

The elevation of the high schools by enlarging the recognized sphere of their instruction.

The elevation of the professional schools by requiring of candidates for degrees a good general education as a pre-requisite for admission, while not insisting upon the impossible condition that all shall have gone over the whole of the old college course.

The elevation, in particular, of the colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts to equal rank and standing with other university courses, and the separation of the studies and exercises properly belonging to them, from the elementary branches taught in the primary and secondary schools; which branches it is not the business of the colleges to teach.

Great freedom in the arrangement of details to varying conditions, the main plan remaining unchanged.

To put the above plan of organization into effect, the board of regents adopted a code of by-laws which have been revised as has been found needful.

From the date of its organization for university work, (1869) the progress of the institution has been steady and sufficiently rapid. The lack of preparatory schools to fit students for the proper college work, confined the work of the earlier years largely to elementary instruction, believing that the indefinite operations of a full preparatory department would discourage the high schools of the state from assuming the duty of preparatory instruction, the board of regents dropped off the first year of the preparatory course in 1876, and second in 1878. There remains accordingly but one sub-freshman class, which serves the useful purpose of supplementing the preparatory work of the high schools, still in many cases insufficient. It is confidently expected that the effect of a late act of the legislature for the "encouragement of higher education," appropriating a sum of money to such high schools as will give free instruction in regular and orderly course of study, preparatory to the University will within a few years render wholly unnecessary any preparatory instruction in the University, itself. The state of Minnesota by virtue of their beneficent law may possess, what no state of the Union is yet provided with, a completed system of free public instruction, primary, secondary and superior, common schools, high schools, and the University federations of colleges, all working in harmony.

The regents have constantly aimed to employ as teachers, men and women of the highest qualifications available in such number as the finances would allow. Next to the instruction they estimate the importance of the means of instruction. They have accordingly expended liberally upon the library, the chemical and other laboratories, and upon the museum, all of these establishments are in a condition credible to an institution and a state so young. The library is the largest and best in the state, and is constantly increasing by careful purchases and by gifts. To furnish the additional rooms already much needed for the library, the laboratories and the museum, as well as to enlarge the facilities for the scientific and industrial work of the University, the legislature of 1881, made an annual appropriation of thirty thousand dollars for six years, to be expended in buildings, furniture, books and apparatus. This legislation assures the development of the institution on a scale commensurate with the progress of the state, and that of similar institutions in neighboring states, and it further proclaims as a matter beyond question, that the people of Minnesota mean to provide themselves with the amplest outfit for the higher education of their youth. The people, at length, are sovereign in culture as in government.

In 1872, by virtue of an act of the legislature, the geological and natural history survey of the state was authorized and placed under the charge of the board of regents. Professor Newton H. Winchell was employed as state geologist, and as professor of geology and mineralogy in the University. For some years he continued the work of teaching in connection with the duties of the survey, but the survey having at length required so much of the time, the regents have been obliged to relieve him from instruction. The work of this most important enterprise is well advanced, and the first volume of the final report is ready for publication. The annual reports of progress of the state geologist may be found in the annual reports of the board of regents, beginning with that of 1872, which report, however, is now unfortunately out of print.

The income of the University has not yet been large enough to warrant the board in opening the colleges of law and medicine named in the charter. They have wisely considered it their duty to provide for the education of the industrial classes, the intended beneficiaries of the land grant of 1862, from which a considerable share of the revenue is derived. The branches of learning related to agriculture and the mechanic arts will be constantly and specially fostered, while other classical and scientific studies, which the law forbids to be neglected, will have an honored place in the curriculum. While the majority of the students have always been sons and daughters of farmers and artisans, the undoubted fact that but few of them have been willing to pursue the regular industrial courses of study has prevented the institution from receiving a fair credit for her industrial work. With the increased facilities for instruction in agriculture and engineering in their several specialties, it is probable that there will be a larger number who will desire to pursue technical courses.

The history of the University of Minnesota, like that of the maiden state history is a brief one, but enough has been done by a few individuals to place the future people of what will soon be a state of imperial magnitude and influence, under obligations. It would not be seemly to omit the mention of a few names even in a brief sketch, such as this. The Hon. John Nicols, of St. Paul, after seven years' continuous service as regent and treasurer, died in 187 . Gen. H. H. Sibley, the first governor of the state, already mentioned as a member of the territorial board has been a member of the board under the re-organization from the beginning and for the past sixteen years, has been president. His great financial experience, and the high place he deservedly holds in the estimation of Minnesotians of all creeds and parties, have made him a tower of strength to the institution.

Ex-Gov. Wm. R. Marshall, who has been on the board either ex-officio or by appointment, since 1868, has been a most faithful guardian of the interests of the institution.

Conspicuous for his unremitted activity and wholesouled devotion to the University, through a period of years reaching from 1863 to the present time, must be mentioned Gov. John S. Pillsbury. To say that to his labors and sacrifices, more than to any other agencies the prosperity of the institution is due, is merely to record what is everywhere known and acknowledged.

Among members of the faculty it is proper to mention the names of a few of those senior professors whose instructions have given just reputation to the University and secured the gratitude of large bodies of students who have enjoyed the same.

Professor G. Campbell, who in the earlier years of his service, gave most acceptable instruction in the German language, from the text book of which he was the author, was occupied later with history, and mental and moral sciences. Professor Campbell was a master of the art of teaching, and had the faculty of interesting all his pupils in the most abstruse subjects. He resigned his office in 1880.

Professor J. Brooks, D. D., ex-president of Hamline University, and held in esteem amounting to reverence, by the alumni of that institution, has occupied the chair of Greek continuously since the beginning of college work in 1869. As a veteran teacher in Minnesota he needs no eulogy.

Professor Versal J. Walker, entering the service of the University at the same time with the other officers mentioned, died in May, 1876. In this event the University was deprived of a teacher of extraordinary gifts, whose noble character, and inspiring christian influence had endeared to him all his colleagues and students.

Colonel William W. Folwell, a professor in Kenyon college, Ohio, was elected president of the University in August, 1869, and began his duties with the first University faculty in the following month. His services have been satisfactory to the board of regents to the degree that that he has been retained continuously in their service to the present time.

Professor Pike's industrial school was organized at the University of Minnesota, November 13th, 1880. It meets twice a week, on Monday and Thursday evenings. It is under the charge of Professor W. A. Pike, professor of engineering at the University. Professor Pike is specially qualified to conduct a school of this character, being a graduate of the Institute of Technology of Boston, and also has been, for the past nine years, professor of engineering in the Maine State College. It was suggested by him soon after he came to this city, after becoming somewhat acquainted with the needs of Minneapolis, and his instruction is given, in addition to the duties which he discharges to the University itself, gratuitously. The rooms, lighting, heating, and desks are furnished by the University, and the students furnish their own books, tools, etc. It is intended specially for mechanics, to afford them an opportunity to gain a knowledge of mechanical drawing, that will be useful to any mechanic. The utmost limit of the class is already reached, there being sixty now enrolled. The first night it was opened there were forty-seven applications, and new applications are made every evening, which cannot be acted upon until vacancies occur. The present membership includes carpenters, mill-wrights, cabinet-makers, stone-cutters, and surveyors, and some of our best mechanics are among them. The class begins with a series of geometrical problems taken from three plates, which are enlarged to hang upon the walls in full view of every student. Then projection drawings follow, and thereafter the work is adapted to the various occupations, one set of plates being prepared for wood, and another for metal workers. The ages of the students range from sixteen to fifty. The success of this school has already demonstrated that there is an active demand for this kind of instruction in Minnesota, and particularly in Minneapolis.

In this connection it may be stated that a plan for doing some kind of shop work at the University has been presented to the board of regents by Professor Pike, suggested by the Russian system, which was exhibited at the Centennial in specimens from the industrial schools of that country. This system has been authorized by the Boston Institute of Technology, and the Maine State College, and, briefly speaking, it is to teach certain useful trades upon scientific principles, in the shortest time possible.

Macalester College is the outgrowth of the Baldwin school, incorporated by the legislature of Minnesota, and opened in June, 1853, in the city of St. Paul. Its design was not the co-education, but the instruction of the youth of both sexes: the boys under a male principal and the girls under an educated and accomplished woman.

The building intended for the female department was of brick, and is situated next to the City Hall in St. Paul. It was dedicated with appropriate exercises, in December, 1853, and at the time of its completion was the largest building for educational purposes in Minnesota. The first catalogue of a literary institution in Minnesota was issued in January, 1854, by this school. At that time the number of pupils in attendance in the female department had been forty-three, and in the male department twenty-eight, a total of seventy-one. To prevent confusion and to lay the foundation of a college for male youths, the trustees determined to reorganize the boys department as the college of St. Paul, and the three-story stone edifice, opposite the residence of W. L. Banning, in St. Paul, now the house of the Good Shepherd, was erected for the purpose.

During the late civil war, for financial reasons, these schools were suspended, the buildings sold, and the moneys invested, and by an act of the legislature of 1864, both schools were again brought under one charter.

Upon the return of the founder, the Rev. Mr. Neill, from Europe, in 1872, he began the work of reorganization, and leased for that purpose, at a rental of twelve hundred dollars per annum, the large stone edifice built for a hotel, in the East Division of Minneapolis. The owner of the building, the late Charles Macalester of Philadelphia, was an old family acquaintance and neighbor of the founder, and by his will, at the suggestion of Mr. Neill, the building was left to be used or sold for educational purposes, and the institution named Macalester College. By an act of the legislature of 1874, it was provided that the Baldwin institution should be called Macalester College, with the proviso that the preparatory department should be known as the Baldwin school.

This school has about thirty boys in attendance, and the Rev. R. Macquesten, is the principal.

President Neill has sent in his resignation to the trustees, to take effect whenever $30,000 is raised for the endowment of the presidency, and a Presbyterian selected for the office. The aim of the institution is set forth in the following extract from an address by its founder, delivered at the dedication of the Baldwin school building, in December, 1853:

"We desire that the voice of prayer and the anthem of praise shall be heard in this edifice each day at the assembling or dismissal of the pupils, and that the Holy Bible shall be known as a text-book. The teachers who have been employed during the last term, have belonged to three different branches of the Holy Catholic Church, and have given pleasing evidence of being actuated by the same catholic spirit.

"On the corporate seal of the institution are engraved two female figures, one in classic drapery, telescope in hand and compass at the feet, representing Science investigating the laws of nature; the other in sitting posture and modern dress, holding the open word of God, representing Revelation. They are in friendly converse, the twin sisters of heaven, as the motto suggests, 'Natura et Revelatio, cœli gemini.'

"In the various departments of the Baldwin school, nature and revelation will never be presented in antagonism. The laws that are developed in the study of each, the teachers will endeavor to prove to be emanations from the same Divine mind. The style of education, it is hoped, will lift the pupil out of the larva or groveling state, and prepare for the best society of all worlds—an immortal existence in the kingdom of heaven, as the soaring butterfly is intended to symbolize."

President of Macalester college, Rev. Edward Duffield Neill; principal of Baldwin school, Rev. Rockwood Macquesten.

Trustees: William C. Baker, Frederick W. Brooks, Samuel Chute, Minneapolis; Thomas Cochran, Jr., Henry J. Horn, Henry M. Knox, St. Paul; W. W. McNair, Minneapolis; Henry L. Moss, St. Paul; C. C. Webster, Red Wing; Alexander Ramsey, St. Paul; Franklin Steele, (deceased) Minneapolis; H. Knox Taylor, St. Paul; C. E. Vanderburgh, J. C. Whitney, Eugene M. Wilson, Minneapolis, president of college, ex officio.

The college building is of stone, five stories and a half high, has a gymnasium 40x100 feet, and accommodations for professors and one hundred students. The collegiate department will not be opened until two professorships are fully endowed; and meanwhile, the preparatory department, known as the Baldwin school, will prepare boys for business, or any college, and will aim to be what Phillips Academy and Williston Seminary are in Massachusetts. It is the intention to dispose of the present edifice, and build in the suburb between Minneapolis and St. Paul, as soon as possible.

The Bennett Seminary for young ladies was organized in 1870, by Mrs. B. C. Bennett, who was connected with the school until 1877. Her place was then supplied by Mrs. M. B. Milligan, with Miss E. E. Kenyon as assistant principal. In 1880 Mrs. Milligan withdrew, leaving the school in charge of Miss Kenyon.

The seminary is located at 315 Tenth street south. The faculty are: Miss E. E. Kenyon, principal; Rev. Dr. Rice, Latin; Miss Abbott, Latin; Miss Carrie Ferguson, first assistant; Miss Mary A. Jacot, drawing; Madame Hatschek, French; Miss Todd, German; Miss Loi Rice, music; Miss Baldwin, second assistant; Professor L. Brown, vocal music. Courses of lectures are delivered by gentlemen of high standing, whose names do not appear among the instructors. The trustees and directors are among the leading citizens of Minneapolis.

Miss Judson's school for young ladies is located at 411 Nicollet Avenue, and was opened in September, 1879, with four pupils. Its success is, however, assured, and at present forty-one pupils are in attendance. The course of study involves a sub-preparatory department, preparatory, and advanced course, the two latter contemplating together, six years' study. An interesting feature is the system of lectures inaugurated by Miss Judson, who is peculiarly qualified both by taste and cultivation for this work.

The corps of instructors is made up as follows: Miss Abby A. Judson, literature, history and rhetoric; Miss Adeline Wetherbee, science and mathematics; Miss Edith Wilson, sub-preparatory department; Madame Hatschek, French; Miss Todd, German; Professor Lyman Brown, vocal music.

Curtiss Business College was established in 1869 by Prof. Henry Barnard. In the spring of 1875, Prof. C. C. Curtis, who had previously been employed as assistant, purchased the entire interest, and removed it, first to Bridge Square, and subsequently, in the fall of 1878, to the present commodious quarters in the new college block, No.'s 251, 253 and 255 Nicollet Avenue. In September, 1879, Prof. Curtis opened in St. Paul a branch college, the exact counterpart of the Minneapolis institution. The faculty at Minneapolis consists of C. C. Curtis, A. M., president; W. K. Milliken A. M., Charles T. Rickard, D. W. Sprague, Miss A. A. Noble, Miss Kate Saunders, William G. Smith, teachers. The total attendance during the year 1880, was 232 pupils, average attendance about 65. The course of study consists of a preparatory course, an elementary commercial course and the advanced commercial course.

The Archibald Business Academy, located at No. 12 Third street north, was established in 1877 by Prof. A. R. Archibald. The course of study is intended to prepare young men and women for college, and for giving instruction in penmanship, book-keeping, mathematics, grammar and the business branches generally. About sixty pupils are enrolled as regular attendants. Miss S. A. Archibald, superintends and teaches the intermediate department. The principal is a graduate of Dartmouth college, and a competent instructor.

The Minneapolis Academy, at 1313 Fourth street south-east, opened September 16th, 1879 with twenty pupils, and two teachers. The design of the institution is to occupy a middle ground between the district schools and the university. The academy has established the following courses: a business course, a teacher's course, a university preparatory course, and an academic course, the latter divided into Latin, French, German, and English divisions. It has four regular instructors, all college graduates, and one monitor, who is strictly an officer of discipline. Faculty: Charles Davidson, A. M. principal and master in English, German and Greek; Hannah Amelia Davidson, A. B., principal and master in Latin, French and English literature; John T. Marvin, A. M., B. D., master in normal work, and business department; William A. Noyes, A. B., B. S., master in mathematics, and natural sciences.

Several convents and parochial schools are so intimately associated with the churches by which they are directed that mention of them is reserved, and will be found under the churches to which they owe their existence and patronage.

Augsburg Seminary of the Norwegian Danish Evangelical Lutheran Church. In 1869, Augsburg Seminary was organized as a theological school at Marshall, Dane county, Wisconsin, under the auspices of the Augustana synod, with Prof. Weenaas as president. Hardly had the professors begun to feel at home, when a division in the synod occurred which materially changed the order of things. A meeting of the dissenting ones was held at St. Ansgar, Mitchell county, Iowa, in August, 1870, which resulted in the organization of the "Norsk Dansk Conference," which independent action lost to them all right of property in the buildings at Marshall. A new organization under the old name was then effected under the auspices of the new conference and at a meeting held at Madison, Wisconsin, in January, 1871, it was resolved to procure new buildings, and the cities of Madison, and Minneapolis, Minnesota, were discussed as desirable locations for the seminary.

In June, 1871, the conference held its first regular meeting at Minneapolis. It was then resolved that their buildings should be erected here and steps were at once taken for the speedy prosecution of the work. Private subscriptions in land, money, etc., were obtained to the amount of $4,700, and in the fall of the same year building was commenced. At first one structure 10x52 feet, three stories high, was erected, which was ready for occupancy in the fall of 1872, when president Weenaas removed his institution to the new building. He had in the meantime occupied rented buildings at Marshall. In 1874 the main building was commenced and finished the following year; it is four stories, 113x52 feet, veneered with brick, and is a tasty and imposing structure. A building 60x38, the residence of the professors, erected on the grounds, was also completed the same year. President Weenaas had visited Norway the previous year and brought back with him on his return, Prof. S. Ottedal, to whose energy and progressive mind is largely due the speedy completion of Augsburg. In 1874 two important additions were made to the faculty in the persons of S. R. Gunnerson and George Sverdrup, who arrived from Norway in the fall of that year. About this time the institution was changed from being a theological seminary only, by the addition of a preparatory course and a Greek course of four years.

In 1876, President Weenaas severed his connection with the Seminary and returned to Norway. At the meeting of the annual conference, Prof. Sverdrup was elected president, which position he still honorably fills. On his assuming the presidency, he found an indebtedness which in 1877, amounted to $16,000, when it was determined to raise money for its liquidation. Prof. Ottedal being president of the board of trustees, was appointed to raise the money. Committees were appointed in all churches of the Norsk Dansk Conference in this and adjoining states, and by January, 1878, $20,000 in cash had been paid in. The debt was paid, and the surplus was used in the purchase of grounds for present use.

In 1872, when the Seminary was first opened, the roster showed the names of twenty-four students, in 1875, it showed one hundred, which is its greatest capacity. Efforts are now making to create an endowment fund and increase the facilities of the institution.

It is under the direction of President Sverdrup and Professors Ottedal and Gunnerson, assisted by two teachers, one each as instructor in the English and Norwegian languages. The building and grounds valued at $10,000 are located in South Minneapolis, corner of Seventh street and Twentieth Avenue south.

Kindergarten Schools. Mrs. E. R. Holbrook opened the first Kindergarten school in the city, in 1875, with about twelve pupils, whose ages varied from four to eight years. The school was located on Seventh street, between Nicollet and First Avenues. The school increased under Mrs. Holbrook's management, rendering another teacher necessary. The number of schools has now increased to four, three of which require tuition fees for instruction and one is a charitable institution conducted by Mrs. Holbrook. The whole number of pupils is now about sixty-two, divided among different schools. Miss Annie L. Conchman, conducts one of the branches at 227 Sixth street south; she has about eighteen pupils, and has been teaching three years.

Miss Lizzie Stevenson at number 80 Eighth street has about eighteen pupils. Mrs. Holbrook on Franklin Avenue, has a school of sixteen besides the charity pupils.

The Froebel branches are taught viz: sewing, weaving, drawing, stick and slat laying, modeling in clay, peas work, paper folding and perforating. Half an hour each day is spent in games with singing and dancing. In addition to all this, the little ones are instructed orally in French and German.

CHAPTER LXXI.

FREEMASONS—TYPOGRAPHICAL UNIONS—MISCELLANEOUS ORDERS.

Dr. A. E. Ames, upon his advent into the territory in October, 1851, collected the scattering Masons who resided in the neighborhood, and obtained a dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Illinois to open Cataract Lodge, F. D., in ancient form, and on February 11th, this ceremony was observed in the little parlor of Ard Godfrey, when A. E. Ames occupied the East, Colonel W. Smith the West, Isaac Brown the South; Ard Godfrey, treasurer; John H. Stevens, secretary; D. M. Coolbaugh, S. D.; H. S. Atwood, J. D.; Wm. Bramer, Tyler; with Captain J. W. T. Gardiner and Col. E. Case, then stationed at Fort Snelling, as members.

This is the parent lodge of all the lodges in the vicinity. The above list comprises all the names of Masons then residents of the Territory of Minnesota, from St. Paul to Pembina—exclusive of St. Paul and Stillwater. Of the members, Dr. A. E. Ames had been a member of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, had also been master of the lodge at Roscoe and Belvidere in Illinois, and was first M. W. G. M. of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota. Colonel William Smith, the S. W., was made a Mason in Maine, and had been master of his lodge. Isaac Brown, the J. W., was also from Maine; he was a postmaster, and was the first sheriff of Hennepin county. Ard Godfrey, treasurer, also hailed from Maine, and had held the same office in the lodge of which he was a member. J. H. Stevens, the secretary, was initiated, passed and raised in a military lodge, U. D., from the Grand Lodge of Tennessee in February, 1818, at the National Bridge in Mexico. The S. D., D. M. Coolbaugh, was made a Mason in Pennsylvania, and was subsequently the first W. M. of Hennepin Lodge. The J. D., H. S. Atwood, was made a Mason in New Brunswick. He was a brother-in-law of Calvin A. Tuttle, one of the pioneers of this county, and died on his farm near Minneapolis a few years ago. The Tyler, Wm. Bramer, a man universally respected, subsequently retired to his farm, and died there soon after. Of the members, Col. Case had previously occupied high positions in the order in the state of Michigan, and was the first Grand Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota. Capt. J. W. T. Gardiner was a native of Hallowell, Maine, a graduate of West Point, and was at this time stationed at Fort Snelling as captain of Company B, Second regiment U. S. Dragoons, was subsequently promoted to major general, and died a few years since. The dispensation gave them the right to meet on high hills or low vales. From Cataract Lodge have sprung all other lodges in Minneapolis. The then Grand Master of the State of Illinois who granted the dispensation to Cataract Lodge, was our fellow-citizen, Judge E. B. Ames. The meetings were first held in an old building on Main street north-east, now owned by a Mrs. White. From there they moved to a building on Main street, known as the King block, which was subsequently destroyed by fire. The lodge then occupied Rollins' stone building, on Second Avenue, corner of Prince street. The next move was to the hall now occupied, located at numbers 18 and 20 University Avenue. The building was erected by Cataract Lodge, at a cost of $16,000.

The first election of officers, occurred February 11th, 1852, with the following result: A. E. Ames, W. M.; William Smith, S. W.; Isaac Brown, J. W.; and J. H. Stevens, secretary. On the evening of August 17th, 1859, eight of the eleven journeymen printers of St. Anthony and Minneapolis met in the office of the "St. Anthony Express" and organized a Printers' Union under the name of the "St. Anthony and Minneapolis Typographical Union," and elected the following board of officers: Daniel L. Squires, H. C. Shaw, H. W. Haven, J. B. Chaney, Benj. Drake, W. C. Allan, William Harpt, James Mowatt and H. M. Metcalf. The Union was prosperous, having at one time on its list every journeyman printer within its jurisdiction. The war of the rebellion practically dissolved the organization, five of its members entering the Union army, viz: H. M. Metcalf, in the Fifth New Hampshire; O. S. King, in the First Minnesota; A. J. Underwood, C. W. T. Widstrand and J. B. Chaney, in the Second Company Minnesota Sharp Shooters, afterwards Company L, First Minnesota. Of these five, two are dead—Metcalf killed in battle, and King died of consumption in Minneapolis a year or two since. The other members are still working at the printing business in different capacities. The charter and seal are still in the hands of the last President, J. B. Chaney.

Minneapolis Typographical Union, No. 42. The Minneapolis Typographical Union is a branch of the International Typographical Union of North America, whose numbers now reach nearly two hundred. No. 42 formerly belonged St. Anthony Union, organized in 1859, which was disbanded in 1862, by most of its members enlisting in the union army. The Minneapolis Union was organized in December, 1872, the preliminary meetings being held in the Tribune and Evening News rooms. The first officers elected were: Jacob Dreher, president; William H. Hughes, treasurer; William W. Lyon, vice-president; George McDonald, recording and corresponding secretary; Goddard Park, financial secretary; J. H. Perry, sergeant at arms; and a board of five directors. Its object is to cherish, protect and promulgate the interests and rights of the Union, to abolish injurious privileges, and bring under the constraint of wholesome duty all its members. The organization was supported by nominal dues only, and the sick or distressed members received benefits, and all deceased members should have a humane and Christian burial. The society has buried three of its members since its organization, two lying in "Lakewood," and one sent East to friends. A burial lot has been purchased in the above cemetery, and steps taken for the erection of a suitable monument thereon. The officers elected in January last for the year 1881 are: John McDonald, president; E. O'Brien, vice-president; J. T. Mannix, recording and corresponding secretary; Charles S. Moore financial secretary; C. B. C. Doherty, treasurer; George S. Cyphers sergeant at arms; executive board, John McDonald, W. A. Allen, T. A. Clark, J. B. Meacham. Minneapolis Turn Verein. This society was organized in April, 1862, with twenty-five members, who elected Adam Kegel president, Mathias Rothaker vice-president, N. Roszbach recording secretary, John Wall corresponding secretary, Albert Lieber financial secretary, John Foster treasurer, Rudolph Lieber term teacher, Lamb. Hays assistant term teacher, Gerhardt Boemchen warden. The first money invested was one hundred and fifty dollars. The first building for turning exercises was erected on First street, between Third and Fourth Avenues north, on a leased lot, at a cost of about $1,500. In a short time the society increased, and at present has a membership of 107. In October, 1878, the hall was destroyed by fire. After the fire the society rented a hall in Dr. Evans' block, for temporary occupancy, to avoid any interruption in the gymnastic exercises. In 1877, the society secured the services of Mr. Adler, a regularly educated term teacher, who remained with them nine months, when he resigned his position in favor of Charles O. Lampe, a gentleman who graduated from the seminary at Milwaukee. In July, 1879, the society bought a lot on Washington Avenue, corner of Fifth Avenue north, and erected a hall at a cost of $21,000. This hall is fitted up in first-class style, with all necessary improvements in machinery and requirements of a first-class gymnasium. At present the teacher and his assistants instruct about one hundred and fifty children in gymnastics, besides the exercises the members of the society have under his direction and guidance.

The objects of the society are as follows: "We, the Turners of the United States of America, through this union, under the name of the N. A. T. U., have in view the mutual encouragement of each other in the education of thoroughly cultured men, intellectually and bodily.

"We recognize in the diffusion of knowledge and the fostering of morals, the only means for a thorough reform in the social, political and religious life. We advocate and strive after the development of a popular government on a genuine humane and popular basis. CHAPTER LXXII.

CHURCHES.

Aside from their distinctive influence as God's instruments for the salvation of men, churches have a conservative influence on society that is felt even by those who never pass their thresholds.

The foreign element which constitutes so large a proportion of the population of the north-west, impregnates society with the usages of the old world. Foreigners, who come here to enjoy the advantages of our institutions, seem to forget that in so far as their old country practices are substituted for those of the country of their adoption, just so far, it becomes like what was left behind and their investments here as well as their prospects are diminished in value.

Doubtless the puritan estimate of the Sabbath, which has already become unpopular even in New England, will become more and more obsolete, and can never find harborage in the society of the north-west, still the time must come when a respectful observance of the Sabbath will be considered the only respectable usage.

The influence, which must bring about this result and operate as the conservator of society against the counter-influence of increasing foreign population, must come from the great conservator, the church. The church must restrain Sabbath-breaking, drunkenness, licentiousness and all the array of vices, not alone by converting men, as the term is commonly understood, but by controlling public opinion and making all irregularities of life disreputable. The Bible is always in the vanguard of civilization and homes cannot exist without churches. The external church is a religious organization, and its indicator the church edifice, are each respected by all, and, though the latter is often a means of display, or the result of a superstition that did not die with the temporal power of the pope, viz: that magnificent gifts buy indulgence for sin, still they are usually the outgrowth of deep religious sentiment. Such we may charitably believe influenced the establishment of all forms of Christian religion here represented; witness the missionary struggles by which the territory was first re-empted for the cross and the self-sacrificing labors of the pioneers, to build and sustain them in their infancy. The names Pond, Riggs, Williamson, Fathers Galtier and Raveaux, and many others are immortal. The feeble beginnings have long since given place to strong organizations and the field, first occupied by one church, is shared by many. Minneapolis has to-day sixty churches, representing nearly all the denominations which accept the Bible as their basis of faith. The Methodists are represented by eleven, the Baptists and Episcopalians each by eight, the Scandinavian Lutheran by seven, the Catholics by six, the Presbyterians by five, the Congregationalists by four, the Evangelical Association and the German Lutheran each by two, the Adventists, Friends, Hebrews and Universalists each by one. Many of these churches have houses of worship that are models of architecture and internal finish. The Church of the Redeemer stands foremost, and is a witness of the generosity of its founders; the Plymouth, St. Marks and Immaculate Conception are important features of the city. Several in process of construction by societies, that have outgrown in numbers and wealth, their more modest quarters, will rival those now in existence. The Westminster on Nicollet Avenue, and the Hennepin Avenue Tabernacle exhibit already, evidence of their future stateliness.

CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

In 1838, St. Anthony was included in the Diocese of Archbishop Henmi, of Milwaukee, and under his direction, Father Galtier visited this place as a missionary. Two years later Father Raveaux, then stationed at Mendota and St. Paul, purchased the land where now stands the church and other buildings of the St. Anthony of Padua, and in 1849, commenced the frame building, first used as a church. In 1851, Father Ledow was stationed here, and at once set about the completion of the church, building a residence at the same time. He was succeeded in 1855, by Father Fayolle, who remained until 1860, during which time he commenced the erection of the present church edifice, a stone building 65x140 feet, on the corner of Ninth Avenue north and

Main street, East Division. In the summer of 1860, his overtaxed mental powers yielded to the weight of financial embarrassment, and necessitated his removal. He is still living, an inmate of an Asylum in St. Louis, Missouri. Following the removal of the unfortunate Father Fayolle, in June, 1860, Father John McDermott arrived here and remained in charge until 1866, completing the church, and building a school-house, and establishing the first parochial school in the city. In November, 1866, Father Tissot took charge, and the spring following, began the erection of the present substantial stone residence, the wooden building having been assigned to other purposes. Another school-house for a boys' school was built in 1870, and in 1871, still another between the two buildings already finished with adjoining wall, thus uniting all under one roof.

The conventional and parochial church of Holy Rosary, is situated on the corner of Fifth street and Nineteenth Avenue south. It was built by Father Power, and dedicated on Rosary Sunday, 1878. It is a neat wooden building, 50x120 feet in size, and pleasantly located.

Order of St. Benedict. The first members of this order who came to Minnesota arrived at St. Paul in May, 1856, and on March 6th, 1857, were granted a charter from the territorial legislature. Since then their numerical strength has steadily increased, until now they are among the most vigorous sectarian bodies in the state, having two churches in Minneapolis, under whose supervision are two schools in the city, and two missions in Hennepin county. The first church built in Minneapolis by this order was under the direction of Father Gahr, who organized a society here about the year 1859, and the same year built a church on the corner of Fourth street and Sixteenth Avenue north-east, which in 1866 was removed to No. 1001 Main street north, and subsequently torn down and used in building the Sisters' house on the grounds of the St. Boniface church. The priests who have successively been in charge of the organization here are: Fathers Sherer, Koring, Meyer, Maly, Hillmer, Holtzer, Wirth, Mockren, and Rajgelj, the present incumbent. The order has built and now owns the two following churches.

St. Boniface Church, O. S. B. This elegant structure is located on the corner of Seventh Avenue north and Second street, East Division. It was built in 1873, under the direction of Father Wirth, and is of modern design 45x90 feet. In connection with the church is a school under the direction of the Sisters of Christian Charity. They occupy a building 28x60 feet, with three class rooms, and have an average daily attendance of one hundred and twenty-five pupils.

The St. Joseph's Church is a wooden structure 35x80 feet, and is located on the corner of Second street and Tenth Avenue north. It was built in 1870, and used as a mission school until 1875, being visited at regular intervals by Fathers Hillmer, Holtzer and Wirth, in the order of their succession. In 1875 it was converted into a parish, with Father Stuckenkamper in charge. He at once commenced the erection of a fine residence, which has since been occupied by himself and his successors. Following him in the order given were Fathers Capser, Kuisele, and in January, 1879, Father Salzeder, the present incumbent, who is ably assisted by Father Bader. The church now includes about one hundred families all Germans.

The Church of the Immaculate Conception is an elegant and imposing stone structure, located on the corner of Third street and Third Avenue north. The building is cruciform, 135x65 and 68 feet. Its erection was commenced in 1868 and finished in 1871. Standing by the side of it is Catholic Association Hall, a commodious brick building erected in 1879 '80. The basement is devoted to the total abstinence and benevolent associations. The upper or second floor is divided through the center by folding doors, by which arrangement it may be used as a single hall or as two rooms. The ground on which this church stands was purchased by Father McDermott in January, 1866, during his connection with St. Anthony of Padua. He also erected a two-story school-house on the grounds the same year, which remained until 1878, when it was destroyed by fire.

Our Lady of Lourdes. In 1877 Father Brunel arrived here from Canada, and organized a society from the Canadian French then belonging to Father Tissot's church. The stone building on Prince street, formerly used by the Universalists, was purchased, and is now known as the church of Our Lady of Lourdes. Rev. Z. L. Chandon net succeeded Father Brunel in December, 1879, and is still in charge

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

Between the years of 1860 and 1866, Father McDermott arrived in the city of Minneapolis, and built the first school-house in which a parochial school was opened in the city. The school is located near the corner of Ninth Avenue north and Main street, East Division. Another school-house was erected for boys in 1870, and in 1874 still another, between the two buildings already finished, with adjoining walls, thereby uniting all under one roof.

St. Boniface church, O. S. B. have a school located on the corner of Seventh Avenue north and Second street, East Division, built in 1873, which is under the supervision of the Sisters of Christian Charity. They occupy a building 28x60, with three class-rooms, and have an average daily attendance of one hundred and twenty-five pupils.

The Convent of the Holy Angels, under the supervision of the Sisters of St. Joseph, was established in the fall of 1877, and is located at the corner of Third street and Second Avenue north. In the convent is a private school for girls, conducted by Sister St. John. All the higher branches are taught, and the thoroughness of the teacher is manifested in the high standing of the graduates. The average number of pupils is about eighty. In connection with the convent is the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, a society established several years since, presided over by one of the sisters, and is open to all young ladies of the parish. Its object is mutual intercourse, devotional exercises, and the general improvement of the young girls. Another society, accessible only to the students of the convent, is called the Sodality of the Holy Angels. It was organized in 1874, its object being mutual improvement and devotional exercises.

The Convent of St. Joseph's, O. S. B., in connection with the Church of St. Joseph's, was established in the autumn of 1875, under the direction of the Sisters of St. Benedict. It is in a separate building of two rooms, one twenty-four feet square, the other 20x32 feet. The average daily attendance is one hundred.

The Convent of Holy Rosary. Standing on the same grounds with the church of this name, is the convent, which is under the direction of Father Power. It is a neat brick building, 45x92 feet, and two stories high, with basement of stone. It contains a large number of airy and very comfortable rooms. The educational departments are in charge of the Dominican sisters.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in St. Anthony, in 1849, Enos Stephens pastor. Very little reliable information can be obtained as to the early struggles, difficulties and successes of the old St. Anthony church. Rev. Mr. Newcomb was, we believe, the next preacher, Rev. E. C. Jones his successor. During his administration the old St. Anthony church was begun, in 1852. This was one of the first, if not the first Methodist church edifice in the state. It was in its day a fine building, and could it speak to-day, would tell of many a glorious victory won for God. It was enlarged from time to time by different pastors, until the pastorate of the Rev. W. W. Satterlee, in 1871-2, when it was sold for secular purposes, to make room for the new building. The parsonage was built by Rev. S. Bolles, and was then as it is yet, one of the best in the conference. Rev. J. R. Creighton succeeded Rev. S. G. Gale, and was succeeded in the following order: Rev. Harvey Webb, Rev. J. W. Martin, Rev. T. McClary in October, 1878, who is still occupying the field.

The Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1855, with Rev. William C. McDonald as the first pastor. In 1857 Mr. McDonald was succeeded by Rev. J. D. Rich, under whose direction the first church was built, on the high ground opposite Washington school building on Third Avenue south. The building and ground at that time was valued at $4,000. In 1858, Rev. T. M. Gossard was appointed pastor, followed in 1859 by Rev. J. O. Rich, whose successor, Rev. J. F. Chaffee, presided over the church during the years 1860 and 1861. In September, 1862, Rev. D. Cobb was appointed pastor, and was returned in 1863. At this time the church numbered 167 members, seventeen on probation, and two local preachers. The Sunday-school at this time had enrolled 210 scholars and possessed a library of 700 volumes.

In 1863-4 the lots where the church and parsonage now stand, corner of First Avenue south and Seventh street, were purchased and paid for by the Ladies' Aid Society, of which Mrs. William M. Harrison was president. In 1861 Rev. Dr. John Quigley took charge for two years and was relieved by Rev. J. F. Chaffee, under whose administration of three years the present church was built and dedicated. At this time Centenary was the only Methodist church in Minneapolis. The next pastor was Rev. J. W. McGregor, of Ohio. He remained one year and was followed by G. C. Wells.

During the pastorate of Mr. Wells the parsonage was built. Mr. Wells dying shortly after its completion, Rev. Mr. Fasig was appointed to complete his unexpired term.

Next came Rev. A. Hollington, who remained one year, and Rev. S. McChesney, the latter staying two years. During the second year of Mr. McChesney's administration, about seventy-four of the members became dissatisfied with the government of the church, and organized what is now known as the Hennepin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

At the close of his second year here, Mr. McChesney was transferred back to Chicago, and Rev. D. Cobb appointed in his place. Mr. Cobb remained two years, and at the close of the second year the church numbered 318 members, with twenty-five on probation. The Sunday school had 445 scholars, thirty-seven officers and teachers, with Col. F. Hooker, superintendent. After an administration of two years Mr. Cobb was succeeded by Rev. S. W. Lloyd, who staid one year, and was followed by the present pastor, Rev. Dr. Van Anda, of Rochester, New York. The present membership is 354. The Sunday-school is conducted by forty-one officers and teachers, has 507 scholars enrolled, and an average attendance of 409. The church is valued at $40,000, and the parsonage at $6,000.

The Hennepin Avenue Methodist Episcopal church was organized in 1875 by a secession of about ninety members from Centenary church. The Sunday-school was organized in the Quaker church. The present church building was commenced in the middle of the winter, and in six weeks was pushed to completion, at an expense of about three thousand dollars, and dedicated by Rev. J. F. Chaffee, the present pastor. Rev.

Alonzo Hollington, the first pastor, continued until the fall of 1876; then Rev. C. M. Hurd from 1876 to 1879. The present pastor, Rev. J. F. Chaffee, came in 1879. The membership of the church is at present 190; the Sunday-school connected with the church has a membership of 250, under the charge of H. D. Wood, superintendent. The new church now building on the corner of Tenth street and Hennepin Avenue, is of red brick, a beautiful and stately edifice, which, when completed, will cost about sixty thousand dollars. The plan includes arrangements for one of the finest and largest Sunday-school rooms in the city.

The Seventh Street Methodist Episcopal Church was started by a proposition from H. G. Harrison to give the entire bill of lumber; T. A. Harrison, $1,500; Mrs. A. H. Goheen, $800; L. Day & Sons, $500. October, 1870, Rev. J. F. Chaffee, city missionary, prosecuted the work to completion. The organization took place at a meeting held in the Vine street church, with thirty-nine members. The church, costing $7,000 was dedicated July 9th, 1871, and is located between Eleventh and Twelfth Avenues south. On the 16th, a Sabbath school was organized with ninety members. Rev. T. McLary was appointed pastor from the Winona conference in 1872. Rev. W. W. Satterlee is now filling the desk. Has 250 members. Sunday-school, 175 members.

The North Minneapolis Mission, now Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, was organized February 25th, 1872. A Sunday-school was organized on the Sunday following, with fifteen members, N. R. Robinson, superintendent. A chapel costing $2,200 was dedicated by Bishop Merrill in 1872. In September, 1872, at the conference held in Winona, Rev. John Stafford was appointed its first pastor at which time its membership was thirty-five, and its Sunday-school, sixty-six scholars; present pastor, Rev. J. A. Berry.

The Franklin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, was formed by the action of the Winona conference, held at Anoka, October, 1873, and a society organized during the same month with the Rev. S. T. Sterrett as first pastor. Rev. N. M. Learned is the present pastor. The church has a membership of about eighty-five; when he came it had about sixty-eight members. Present number of Sunday-school scholars, one hundred and twenty-five, with J. T. Wyman, superintendent, and K. W. Wing first assistant; Mrs. N. M. Learned, second assistant. In May, 1871, the first Sunday-school was organized.

Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. At the Minnesota conference held in Mankato September 27th, 1871, Bishop Simpson presiding, Rev. T. McClary was appointed to what was then known as the Seventh Street and North Mission church, Minneapolis. February 27th, 1872, a meeting was held in the German chapel, resulting in the organization of the present Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. March 10th following, a Sunday-school was organized in the German chapel, N. R. Robinson superintendent, with eighty scholars. A library costing $100 and an organ costing $140 was purchased for the school. July following the Sunday-school was held in the new building. A lot on the corner of Seventh street was donated to the society by William Gaslin. June 1st, 1872, work was commenced on the church building, which was completed July 31st, 1872, at a cost of $2,200, and dedicated by Bishop Ames. The first communion service August 4th, following. Rev. John Stafford followed Rev. Mr. McClary, under whose administration the church had great prosperity. In October, 1880, the official board invited the Rev. J. R. Berry, a member of the upper Iowa conference. He was transferred by Bishop Andrews to the Minnesota conference, and assigned to the pastorate by Bishop Harris.

The Second German M. E. Church is located corner of Second street and Tenth Avenue northeast. The first meeting was held in an old school house in 1855, and the first pastor was Rev. Mr. Roth, assisted by Rev. Mr. Spearman. Services were held in different places until 1861, when the present church was located, and is now under the care of Rev. J. M. Nippold. A parsonage costing about fifteen hundred dollars, is connected with the church.

The First German Methodist Episcopal Church, corner of Fifth street and Fourth Avenue south, was organized in October, 1866, with the Rev. J. Schmell for first pastor, who continued for three years, succeeded by Rev. J. Schaefer who labored three years, succeeded by Rev. Henry Boettcher for four years, succeeded respectively by Reverends F. Kopp, C. Nachtriets and J. Schneider, the present pastor in charge. It has a growing Sunday-school of about sixty members. The church, too, has grown from ten to eighty-two members.

The Norwegian Methodist Episcopal Church is located on Nineteenth Avenue south between Fifth and Sixth streets. The first organization was effected in July, 1873, by Rev. J. H. Johnson with ten members. The first preacher in charge was Rev. N. Christopherson, who took charge November 28th, 1873; he was succeeded by Rev. J. Jacobson for one year, who was followed by Rev. L. A. Larson for three years; then Rev. B. Olin followed for two years, who was succeeded by Rev. Mart. Nelson now in charge. The present membership is thirty-five, and is in a growing and prosperous condition.

First Swedish Methodist Episcopal Church, 343 Cedar Avenue, was organized in February, 1873. After encountering many difficulties, the building of a house of worship was undertaken, under the leadership of Rev. C. G. Nelson; in September, 1873, a subscription was circulated; the money raised and in October following, the foundation was laid, and in December, 1873, this young society had a new church costing $4,000, and while enjoying the feast of dedication the debt was paid in full. In 1879 a parsonage was commenced under the administration of Rev. A. G. Johnson the present pastor, and in 1880 was completed, and the church is now in a flourishing condition.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

Andrew Presbyterian Church. During the winter of 1849-50, Mr. Neill preached every other Sunday afternoon at the falls of St. Anthony. In July, 1850, Rev. William T. Wheeler, formerly a Congregational missionary to Africa, commenced preaching at the request of Mr. Neill. The members being mostly Presbyterians it was decided to call it "The First Presbyterian Church of St. Anthony." Rev. Charles Secombe, who succeeded Mr. Wheeler, persuaded the congregation to drop the name of Presbyterian, and it is now known as the Congregational society of Minneapolis, East Division. On the 23d day of August, 1857, a committee of the St. Paul Presbytery, consisting of Rev. John G. Reiheldaffer and Rev. H. Maltby, re-organized the "First Presbyterian Church of St. Anthony." The following persons were the first members, viz: Mrs. Margaret Edwards, Samuel H. Lea, Joseph Van Eman, Mrs. Sarah Van Eman, Richard Chute and Mrs. Mary E. Chute. Richard Chute was elected ruling elder, installed by Rev. Mr. Maltby, and was appointed clerk of sessions. Mr. Chute held this office until July 10, 1867, when he resigned and Gen. H. P. Van Cleve filled the office until 1878. In June, 1858, the church called Rev. David Stevenson, but he declined and recommended Rev. Levi Hughes, of Logansport, Indiana. By an arrangement with Westminster Church, which was organized the same day, Mr. Hughes was called to preach in both churches at a salary of $1,000 per year. David Edwards donated the use of his hall and on the evening of October 7, 1858, the first prayer meeting was held in "Edwards Hall," with five present. October 10, 1858, the Sunday-school was organized with six teachers and twelve scholars; Orrin Curtiss was chosen superintendent.

On January 16th, 1860, notice was received from Rev. H. I. Coe, corresponding secretary of the Church Extension Company, at St. Louis, that the board had appropriated $1,000, the gift of the Misses Andrew, of New York city, for the purpose of aiding in the erection of a house of worship. In May, 1860, Rev. Mr. Hughes and family removed to Bloomington, Indiana. For six months preceeding his removal, he had seldom preached, though public worship had been conducted by lay members reading appropriate sermons. In September following, Mr. McKee was called to the pastorate of the two churches, remaining until 1865. By an act of the legislature of Minnesota, passed January 30th, 1861, the name of this church was changed from the "First Presbyterian Church of St. Anthony" to "Andrew Presbyterian Church" in honor of Mrs. Catherine Andrew and her daughter, who donated $1,000 and a bell. The church was erected on Second street, and was formally dedicated April 11, 1862. Rev. R. F. Sample supplied the pulpit from June 17th, 1866, to March, 1868, when he accepted a call to Westminster Church of Minneapolis. During his ministry, thirty-four were added to the church. Rev. David Pelton, of Pennsylvania, presided from March 1st, 1869, to March 1st, 1870. During the pastorate of Rev. Isaac W. Monfert, from May 1st, 1870, to July, 1872, the church was removed in November and December, 1870, to its present site on Fourth street. Rev. David Stewart was the next pastor, from August 1st, 1872, to May, 1875. From May 16th, 1875, to May 26th, 1877, Rev. E. J. Thompson, professor of mathematics at the university, supplied the pulpit, and was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Carlos T. Chester, to whom the church extended a call in February, 1877. At the time he received the call, Mr. Chester was a senior in Auburn Theological Seminary, of Auburn, New York, from which he graduated May 10th, 1877, and arriving in Minnesota the latter part of that month, preached his first sermon, Sunday, June 2d, 1877; was ordained and installed by the St. Paul Presbytery on the 7th day of August, 1877. From June, 1877, to January 1st, 1881, seventy-eight were added to the church. The church has a full board of ruling elders.

The Park Avenue Presbyterian Church. The First Presbyterian church of Minneapolis was organized May 22d, 1853, by Rev. G. H. Pond, with thirteen members. It continued to exist with some degree of prosperity until July 22d, 1860, when, from various adverse influences, its members were scattered. For about five years regular public worship had been suspended. The church was re-organized August 19th, 1860, by the Rev. A. G. Ruliffson, with what remained of the original membership of the church, together with nine members of the First Presbyterian Church of Minnesota, at Minne-ha-ha, and eight other persons who presented letters from other churches. In this re-organization, the First Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis, in fact became the successor to the First Presbyterian Church of Minnesota, which church was but the continuation of the Presbyterian church of St. Peters, or Fort Snelling, the oldest church of any denomination in all this region. The church at St. Peters was organized June 11th, 1835, by the Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, in the quarters which he occupied at the Fort. In connection with this church there were two mission stations, at which public worship was kept up from time to time, one at Lake Harriet, the other at Oak Grove, near Minne-ha-ha. The church at St. Peters, or Fort Snelling, was largely made up of the officers and their families stationed there. It came to pass after a few years, that, by death and removal, the membership was greatly reduced, and the church was again without officers. At the request of the remaining membership, the church was reorganized as the Oak Grove Church of Minne-ha-ha, and Rev. G. H. Pond was chosen pastor. Up to this time the church was under the care of the Presbytery of Dakota, but at the request of the members it was transferred to the roll of the Minnesota Presbytery. At a meeting of the Presbytery of Minnesota, in July, 1862, the name of this church was changed so as to stand on the Presbyterian roll as "The First Presbyterian Church in Minnesota." It retained the name until July 22d, 1860, when its remaining elder and eight communicants, united with what remained of the original First Church of Minneapolis, in the new organization which is properly the legitimate successor of both the others. Some of the members of this organization are among the membership of the First Presbyterian Church at the present writing. The records from which these facts are gathered are in a good state of preservation. The book contains a full account of the organization of the church at St. Peters, the complete records of the Oak Grove Church, also of the First Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis, from the re-organization in 1860 to the end of Rev. Mr. Payne's ministry. Rev. Daniel Stewart, D. D., came and took charge of the church as stated supply, in which capacity he has remained since June 1st, 1875, to the present time. During his ministrations the church debt has been paid, the congregation more than doubled, and now is in a flourishing and prosperous condition. It has a seating capacity of about six hundred; also in connection with it, a Sunday-school of about one hundred and fifty members, under the management of James H. McClintten, superintendent.

Westminster Presbyterian Church. In 1853 the first representative of the western branch of the Presbyterian Church, the Rev. J. G. Reiheldaffer, commenced his labors in St. Paul. Soon after he was joined by men of like spirit, such as H. Maltby, Charles Thayer, J. C. Caldwell and A. H. Kerr, who came to plant the standards of the cross along the borders of the wilderness. The growth of the church whose foundations they laid, is doubtless to them an occasion of gratitude and thanksgiving. Better to have been the first pioneer, planting the holy emblem of the cross on the virgin soil of Minnesota, and claiming this territory for Jesus, than to have been president of the United States, or commander-in-chief of the national army. In the fall of 1855, the Synod of Iowa created the Presbytery of St. Paul, consisting of Rev. J. G. Reiheldaffer, Rev. Charles Thayer and Rev. Joseph A. Sterrett, pastors respectively of the churches in St. Paul, Hudson, and Prescott. The total number of communicants in these three pastoral charges, only one of which was in the state of Minnesota, was fifty-nine; in St. Paul thirty-two, in Hudson eleven, in Prescott fifteen. The General Assembly convened at Rochester, N. Y., in 1860, created the Synod of St. Paul, embracing the Presbyteries of St. Paul, of Chippewa and Lake Superior. The Synod of St. Paul thus created, consisted of nineteen ministers and twenty-four churches. Nine of these churches were in Minnesota, with a total membership of 187. The Westminster Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis was organized August 23d, 1857, by a committee of the Presbytery of St. Paul, consisting of Rev. J. G. Reiheldaffer and Rev. H. Maltby. The services were held in the Free Will Baptist church. The following persons were enrolled as members, viz: Andrus W. Oliver, Louis H. Williams, Tabitha P. Williams, Ellen Mary Williams, Deborah M. Pettit, J. C. Williams and Sarah J. Williams. On the 6th of April, 1858, the church was incorporated under the revised statutes of Minnesota. H. D. Beman, W. K. McFarlane, Eugene M. Wilson, A. Bradford, C. H. Pettit and J. C. Williams were elected as a board of trustees, under the name and style of the "Trustees of the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis." During the three months immediately following, the church was without preaching, with the exception of a single Sabbath when the services were conducted by the Rev. J. G. Reiheldaffer. On the 6th of December, 1857, Mr. B. C. Dorrance, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Luzerne, commenced preaching in the First Presbyterian church, under a commission from the board of domestic missions. Mr. Dorrance closed his labors with the Westminster Church, in Fletcher Hall, April 18th. Mr. Dorrance was a pleasant and forcible preacher. By his public ministrations, as well as by his affectionate, cheerful, and exemplary Christian deportment, he endeared himself to all. It was a sad day to the little church when their beloved minister, with the shadows of death on his face, bade them farewell, never to return. In 1858, the Rev. Mr. Hughes was invited to become stated supply for the church in St. Anthony and "Westminster." During this time church services were held in Woodman's Hall, now the First National Hotel. In 1860 and 1861 a new church was built, and dedicated March 17th, 1861, Rev. J. G. Reiheldaffer preaching the dedication sermon. In October, 1862, Mr. Strong was ordained and installed pastor of the church by the Presbytery of St. Paul. As a preacher Mr. Strong was intellectual rather than emotional. His sermons were written with much care, and delivered with animation. In 1865, the Rev. R. A. Condit accepted an invitation to become the pastor of this church, and was installed in 1866. In the autumn of 1866, the church building was enlarged and improved: the towers were erected and the building extended. December, 1867, against the remonstrance of a large portion of the congregation, Mr. Condit's pastoral relation to the church was dissolved. At a meeting held January, 1868, moderated by Rev. D. C. Lyon, a call was made for the Rev. R. F. Sample, D. D. Having, at this time, other invitations under consideration and being in much doubt as to his duty, his answer was delayed for several weeks. At length his way seemed clear, and he commenced his labors in March, 1868. He is a calm, impressive speaker, and a profound thinker, making a lasting impression on all within the sound of his voice. In May, 1868, the Pastor's Aid Society was organized. John A. McHenry was elected president; Hon. W. W. McNair, vice-president; and T. B. Janney, secretary. The Sunday-school, under the efficient superintendence of Hon. C. E. Vanderburgh, steadily increased in numbers and usefulness. The church is large-hearted and generous, giving thousands of dollars annually to the various boards of the church. It is one of the most liberal among the many churches in the city. The increased membership and attendance during the acceptable administration of the present pastor, compelled the society to provide more extensive accommodations. Accordingly, during the summer of 1880, measures long in contemplation, were taken to erect a structure worthy of the wealth and importance the church had attained. This massive edifice, built of brown sandstone from Duluth, is building corner of Nicollet Avenue and Seventh street. The style of building is a mixture of the Gothic and Corinthian architectures, and will, it is supposed, cost about $95,000, and surpass in magnificence all its predecessors.

Franklin Avenue Presbyterian Church. On the 16th day of June, 1873, Rev. George W. Jackson, late of the city of Minneapolis, in fulfillment of a design long entertained, conveyed to the trustees of Westminster Presbyterian Church of said city, village lot 6, in block 1, in Jackson's addition to Minneapolis, in trust, and for the use of a Presbyterian church in that part of the city. Stimulated by the efforts of Mr. Jackson and Rev. R. F. Sample, D. D., several members of the Westminster Presbyterian church, were induced to undertake a Sunday-school in that part of the city; the first session of which was held in the Norwegian Lutheran Seminary, the first Sabbath in January, 1873. The Sunday-school was for the time styled the Westminster Mission Sunday-school, and its officers were L. V. N. Blakeman, superintendent; R. Shaw, assistant; S. A. Harris, secretary; who were assisted by a band of ten teachers. During the summer of 1873, the church building formerly occupied by the First Presbyterian church of Minnesota, having been purchased by the Rev. R. F. Sample, was removed to said lot, and put in proper repair by the offerings and efforts of the workers in the mission school. The cost of building and removal was about $1,800. The Sunday-school was then removed to the church, and on Sabbath evening, November 2d, 1873, appropriate opening services were held in the church. Sermon by Rev. Dr. Stewart, the Rev. E. D. Neill, R. F. Sample, D. D., and H. N. Payne, also taking part in the services. In addition to the Sunday-school, regular services were held in the church every Sabbath thereafter. On about the 12th of December, 1873, a request was made in writing to Rev. Charles Thayer, R. F. Sample, D. D., and the Hon. C. E. Vanderburgh, the regular committee on Home Missions of the Presbytery of St. Paul, by L. V. N. Blakeman and others for the organization of a church; accordingly the committee, in connection with Rev. D. C. Lyon, district missionary for the Synod of Minnesota, met at the church on the evening of December 21st, 1873, and in conformity with the laws of the presbytery, organized a church with the following members: N. W. Lander, L. V. N. Blakeman, Mrs. Emma T. Blakeman, Bolza Lee, Martha Lee, Robert Shaw, John Nichol, Mrs. C. Robb, Mrs. H. M. Lowell, Mrs. Elizabeth Pierson, and Mr. John Hosdy. The name chosen was "Franklin Avenue Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis," and the following persons elected; ruling elders, John Nichol, L. V. N. Blakeman, and two others; Revs. E. D. Neill and E. J. Thompson supplied the pulpit until July 1st, 1874, when the Rev. A. A. Kiehle, a graduate of Union Theological Seminary, of New York city, supplied the pulpit until he was ordained, and installed its first pastor, who continued his labors till February 8th, 1878. Rev. T. Farris was invited March 10th, 1878, to supply the pulpit and still continues. The church is partially dependent for support on the Home Missionary Board, and the liberality of several private citizens, among whom are Hon. C. E. Vanderburgh and H. G. Sidle. The former by his liberal financial aid as well as wise counsels as chairman of the Home Missionary committee of St. Paul, from the date of its organization, has contributed largely to its welfare. L. V. N. Blakeman was superintendent of the Sunday-school till July, 1879, when declining health forced a resignation. Hon. C. E. Vanderburgh is now superintendent, and John Hardy, secretary. The school now numbers one hundred and twenty-five scholars.

The Fifth Presbyterian Church is located on the corner of Nineteenth street and Fourth Avenue north. It was built by the Westminster church in 1873, and named the Western Avenue Mission Chapel, where a Sunday-school was conducted under the superintendence of S. M. and J. Williams, who started with a few scholars with constantly increasing numbers, until it reached about fifty, when there seemed a necessity for a church organization to meet the growing wants of the community in which it was located. Steps were taken to organize a church which was effected on the last Sunday of the year 1879, with eleven members. Rev. A. W. Benson officiating for five months. He was succeeded by Rev. Daniel Rice, D. D., who was followed by Rev.

Rockwood Macquesten, who is now in charge. The church membership has increased to twenty members, and the Sunday-school now enrolls one hundred and fifty, with an average attendance of eighty-five. J. H. Monroe is superintendent and P. Q. Diven assistant superintendent. During the past winter a fine organ has been purchased and paid for out of the receipts of the literary society connected with the church. Miss Hattie E. Allen is the organist. The church has a fine-toned bell of about 800 pounds weight, from the celebrated Meneely establishment of Troy, New York. It was a contribution of friends outside of the church.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.

The First Baptist Church, St. Anthony, was organized July 23d, 1850, Rev. J. P. Pearsons, pastor. W. C. Brown and nine others constituted the first membership. After many struggles they succeeded in laying the foundation for the present edifice in 1868. In 1869, the corner post was raised, with appropriate services, and in 1870, the completed structure was dedicated. In 1879 the name of the church was changed by legislative act, to "Olivet Baptist Church of Minneapolis." At the present time there is no regular pastor, but the pulpit is occasionally supplied.

Free Will Baptist Church. In June, 1851, Rev. C. G. Ames was appointed the first missionary to Minnesota, and commenced his labors at once, in St. Anthony. On the 25th of October following, A. Harmon, Charlotte Harmon, E. McIntosh, Abigail McIntosh, Rev. C. G. Ames and Sarah J. Ames, formed themselves into a body corporate, and in October 26th, 1851, organized a "Free Will Baptist Church." From 1853 to '54 the church was much embarrassed for the want of a place of worship. Most of the members living on the west side of the river, it was resolved to move to Minneapolis, May 27th, 1851. September 1st, 1855, Rev. C. G. Ames resigned the pastoral charge, but continued to supply the desk for a long time after. April 23d, 1860, Rev. A. D. Williams severed his relation to the church. November, 2d, 1861, Rev. B. W. Bryant united with the church and became its pastor. June 1st, 1866, Rev. H. N. Herrick having supplied the desk acceptably for some time was invited to become its pastor, which invitation he accepted January 20th, 1870; he offered his resignation as pastor December, 1872, which was accepted with the vote to continue his salary for three months. Rev. Charles Payne accepted the pastorate, and resigned August, 1875. November following, Rev. A. J. Davis was called to the pastorate, and accepted in 1875. May 21st, 1878, extended a call to Rev. A. A. Smith, who accepted and is now in charge of the church.

The First Baptist Church was organized in 1853, with ten members, in the house of Mr. Asa Fletcher. Meetings were held in the first Fletcher hall, located on the south side of Helen street, near the corner of Second Avenue south. March 21st, 1857, Rev. A. A. Russell resigned. July 21st, Rev. Amory Gale was called and accepted, and at once entered upon his labors. In the summer of 1857, a lot on the corner of Third Street and Nicollet Avenue was donated by H. T. Welles, Esq., and the church at once commenced to build a house of worship. February 6th, 1858, the basement room was completed and occupied, which at that time was the best and largest room for worship in the young town of Minneapolis. From July 1st, 1858, to October, 1860, the church was without a pastor. During the interim, the pulpit was supplied by Revs. G. B. Lewis, J. A. Davis and R. M. Pease. During the winter of 1859 '60 Rev. Mr. Pease preached most of the time. Rev. J. R. Manton commenced his labors, as pastor in October, 1860, and labored through four stirring and eventful years. In July, 1865, an invitation was extended to Rev. L. B. Allen, D. D., and was accepted. In 1866 the church vacated the basement and took down the structure, it being considered unsafe. In 1867 the old lot was exchanged for the one on the corner of Fifth street and Hennepin Avenue. In April, 1868, the church invited Rev. W. L. Lowry to the pastorate. The new edifice was completed, dedicated November 29th, 1868, and the new pastor ordained. September 18th, 1871, Rev. F. W. Powell was called and accepted the pastorate. After a prosperous and successful ministry of about three years, failing health compelled a resignation which was reluctantly accepted. In October, 1874, they extended a call to the Rev. H. C. Woods to become their pastor, who after holding the invitation under advisement, concluded the following November to accept the call. He entered immediately upon the duties of pastor, and is now in charge. Under his careful and prudent ministrations the church has been greatly prospered, receiving large additions to its membership—a net gain of 211 members in the past five years. The ladies' sewing society have bought and paid for a fine organ, besides contributing largely towards the expense of upholstering the seats, which are of a capacity to accommodate between six and seven hundred. The grand total of contributions for the different benevolent objects in the past five years is $31,433.88. Present membership, 410. It also has a flourishing Sunday-school of 235 scholars, whose contributions have supported a foreign missionary for the past twelve years.

Franklin Avenue Mission was organized May 31st, 1874; the chapel is located on a lot belonging to the Baptist Mission, corner of Franklin and Bloomington Avenues, and was dedicated the same day. A Sunday-school was organized with J. C. Hoblet superintendent and Frank Ball, secretary. It has a steady growth, and now numbers 136, with an average attendance since its organization of 90, and is provided with an organ and other necessary material for a successful prosecution of the work. Mr. Hoblet expecting soon to leave, Mr. Fallis has been recently elected, and takes it in a flourishing and prosperous condition.

Jewett Chapel. The mission spirit stimulated by the success of the Franklin Avenue mission, impelled another attempt, which was seconded by the growing want for more room, and a special meeting was called for that purpose on the 29th day of June, 1874. On the 6th of July following, the ladies sewing society of the First church pledged $333.33 toward the erection of a new chapel. Deacon S. A. Jewett donated the land, which at once insured the success of the enterprise, and work was immediately commenced under the supervision of C. F. Haglin, Esq., architect, who kindly donated the plans. It was pushed to completion, and on the 15th of November was dedicated with appropriate services, under the name of "Jewett Chapel." A Sunday-school was organized on the same day, with W. W. Huntington, superintendent, and Deacon J. O. Weld, assistant, and Charles Ham, secretary. It has a membership of eighty; average attendance seventy, which is remarkable.

The Fifth Avenue Baptist Church was organized December 29th, 1869, in its present house of worship, on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Ninth street south. At the time of its organization it was called the Marshall street Baptist Church; but with the change of the name of Marshall street to Fifth Avenue, a corresponding change was made in the name of the church. In its formation, members of the First Baptist Church, and a church then known as the Union Baptist Church, but now extinct, with persons not members of either of the above churches, but holding letters from others, united together. Rev. A. Gale presided at the meeting of the church, and Philip Herzog was chosen clerk. Immediately after the organization had been effected, and the adoption of a church covenant and the election of the proper officers, a council of the churches was called, who formally recognized the church as a regularly constituted Baptist church. Rev. A. S. Cole was the first pastor, succeeded by four others, until the succession came to the present incumbent, Rev. F. T. Gates, who was called in 1880. The church has enjoyed since its organization an almost uninterrupted growth. Present membership is about 160. The society possesses a comfortable house of worship, 40x70 feet, seating 250 persons. There is also a commodious parsonage.

The First Swedish Baptist Church was organized in 1872, with a membership of twenty-five, in a hall opposite the present post-office; continued there for two years. The church now located on the corner of Sixth street and Twelfth Avenue south, was built by offerings from servant girls of from five to fifteen dollars each, aided by a subscription of $225, raised in one night by the First Baptist Church.

First Norwegian Baptist Church, located on Eleventh Avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets, was organized May 28, 1879, with about fifteen members, and Rev. J. A. H. Johnson, pastor. During his administration a new church was begun in September, 1880. From May to September the church was without regular preaching, when Rev. I. Larsen was called and accepted the office of pastor, who so far finished the work as to make it convenient for public worship. At the present time it has about thirty-eight members.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

The First Congregational church was organized November 16, 1851. Rev. Charles Seecombe of St. Anthony, and Rev. Richard Hall of Point Douglass, conducted the services. There were twelve members and Mr. Seecombe, a missionary of the American Home Missionary Society, took charge of this young organization. This was the first Congregational church organized in the territory; seven years before the state of Minnesota was added to the Union. In 1852 the church formed a union with the First Presbyterian Church of St. Anthony, but this arrangement was abandoned July 28, 1853. The church received aid from the American Home Missionary Society during the first fifteen years of its existence, since which time it has been self supporting. Rev. Charles Seecombe was installed as the first pastor July 30, 1854; he was succeeded August, 1866, by Rev. Orlando Clark, who was succeeded September 28, 1867, by Rev. Jay Clizbe. In June, 1868, Rev. Gabriel Campbell took charge and served as acting pastor until June, 1869. Then for a few months there was no regular supply. In December, 1869, Rev. Egbert B. Bingham took charge as acting pastor, and remained until August, 1870, when he resigned on account of ill health; he was succeeded by Rev. James Tompkins as supply, who acted in that capacity until May 15, 1872. From this date till February, 1873, the church was without an acting pastor. On February 11, 1873, Rev. George M. Landon was invited to become pastor. He accepted the call and although not installed, served as pastor elect until May, 1875. On the 6th of July, 1875, Rev. E. M. Williams received a call which he accepted, and is the present incumbent. The services of the church were first held in a school building erected by the town of St. Anthony as a pledge of the University yet to be. This building stood between University Avenue and what is now known as Macalester College, but it has long since disappeared. The house of worship first built by the society was located near the corner of Central Avenue and Fourth street, where it still stands. The basement was first occupied as a place of worship from January 16, 1853, but the upper part was not completed until the following year, when it was dedicated February 15, 1854.

The present house of worship on the corner of Fifth street and Third Avenue south-east was dedicated June 28, 1871.

The Plymouth Congregational Church in Minneapolis, Minnesota, was organized April 28th, 1857, with eighteen members; one of these came by profession, two by letter from the First Presbyterian church of this city, and the others from Congregational and Presbyterian churches in the eastern and middle states. Of this number, eight still remain members of the church. The first pastor was Rev. Norman McLeod, who continued with the church from its organization until May, 1859. From that time the pulpit was supplied chiefly by Rev. H. C. Atwater, until the settlement of Rev. H. M. Nichols, as pastor in December, 1859. The sudden and melancholy death of Rev. Mr. Nichols by drowning on July 5th, 1860, shrouded the church with gloom, and again left it without a pastor. Rev. W. B. Dada and Rev. David Eastman, then successively supplied the pulpit until October, 1862, when Rev. Charles C. Salter began his ministry here, and was installed pastor in September, 1864. April 5th, 1869, Rev. Mr. Salter resigned his pastorate, and was dismissed by a mutual council convened on the 11th of the same month. The next pastor was Rev. Henry A. Stimson, who began his labors December 1st, 1869, and was ordained and installed as pastor May, 25th, 1870. He continued his labors until September 1st, 1880, when he asked for a dismission which was granted by a council called for that purpose. The first house of worship which stood on the corner of Nicollet Avenue and Fourth street, was dedicated December 22d, 1858, and was destroyed by an incendiary fire on the night of April 3d, 1860, in retaliation as is believed, for the faithfulness and activity of the pastor, Rev. H. M. Nichols, in the cause of temperance. A new building was erected on the site and dedicated September 13th, 1863. In 1866, it was enlarged by increasing its length, and by the addition of galleries, thus providing about two hundred and fifty additional sittings. In 1870, the steady increase of the congregation made it apparent that a still larger building would soon be needed. Accordingly a new site was purchased on the corner of Nicollet Avenue and Eighth street, a building committee appointed, and actual preparations commenced for the erection of a new building. After various delays, the corner stone of the present church edifice was laid, and the completed building was dedicated October 10th, 1875. Its seating capacity is twelve hundred, and it fills an important place in the social and religious life of our city.

Second Congregational Church. In the spring of 1866, Rev. C. C. Salter, with the aid of members of the Plymouth Church, and persons in the lower part of the city, and very generous contributions from parties in the East, succeeded in raising funds sufficient to warrant the founding of a mission Sunday-school. A fractional lot on the corner of Fourth and Vine street (now Fifteenth Avenue south) was purchased, and a building 26x40 erected, at a cost of $1,795.33. The school was opened May 14th, 1866, with O. B. King, superintendent. Rev. A. H. Carrier came and labored until May, 1867, when he was succeeded by Rev. William Leavitt, who supplied the pulpit until November 14th, 1869. In the meantime the Sunday-school had increased to such an extent that it was deemed expedient to organize a church, and a council was called by letters dated September 24th, 1867. The council met October 9th, 1867, Rev. A. K. Packard, moderator; and Rev. E. S. Williams, scribe. After a careful view of the history of the work and the need of it in that part of the city, it was moved by Rev. E. S. Williams that the church be organized in accordance with the petition. The motion was unanimously carried. Rev. Messrs. Hall, Dudley and Brown were appointed a committee to call a meeting for the public recognition of the church. The council met, October 14th, and the church, consisting of twenty members, was duly organized with appropriate exercises. The organization had thus far been known as "Plymouth Chapel," but at a meeting held October 20th, 1867, it was voted that it be called the "Vine Street Congregational Church." During the pastorate of Mr. Leavitt, the number of members increased from twenty to thirty-five. Mr. Leavitt was succeeded by Rev. Prescott Fay, who occupied the pulpit for two years, resigning November 18th, 1871. Rev. Horace Burnsted commenced his labors in this church February 4th, 1872, and continued until March 1st, 1875. Previous to this, the increase of the congregation and Sunday-school had made it necessary to provide more ample accommodations. Two lots, at the corner of Eighth street and Thirteenth Avenue south, were secured, and the work of erecting a new church was begun. The basement, consisting of lecture-room, class-rooms and kitchen, was completed in July, 1874, since which it has been occupied by the church. The building is veneered with cream shade brick; it stands about eighty feet in extreme length by seventy feet in breadth, and will seat 560 persons in the auditorium. The name of the church has also been changed to "The Second Congregational Church of Minneapolis." At a meeting of the church held May 24th, 1875, it was unanimously voted to extend to Rev. E. S. Williams a call to become its pastor. The call was accepted, and he has continued as pastor until the present time. During this period of two years, seventy-one have been added to its membership—thirty-nine on profession of faith and thirty-two by letter. The Sunday-school, which at first numbered twenty-six scholars, has steadily increased, and in 1877 numbered two hundred.

Pilgrim Church is located at the corner of Washington Avenue and Fourteenth Avenue north. On the 29th day of September, 1873, this church was organized, with twenty-two members. Rev. C. A. Hampton was the first pastor, who resigned January 11th, 1879, succeeded by Rev. G. A. Hood, in March, 1879. During that time the church steadily increased, so that it has passed from a mission chapel into a neat and commodious church, which is now self-sustaining with a membership of about ninety. The Sunday-school, which was the nucleus around which the present church was formed, was a mission from Plymouth Church, and now numbers about one hundred and forty. Mr. Horace Layton superintendent. This is but another repetition of past history in the life's work of earnest men.

UNIVERSALIST.

The first Universalist Society of St. Anthony was organized at the school-house in St. Anthony on Sunday, the 28th day of August, 1853. G. B. Dutton was called to the chair, and Daniel L. Paine, elected clerk. The object of the meeting was stated by one of the members. Reuben Ball was elected treasurer and collector for the current year, and the following executive committee was then elected; Stephen Cobb, M. W. Getchell and J. B. Bassett; Rev. Mr. Barnes, pastor. At a meeting called in Central hall, St. Anthony, February 3d, 1856, the society was re-organized with John L. Lovejoy for president, and J. H. Lennon, secretary. At the annual meeting held February 2d, 1859, Rev. Mr. Barnes tendered his resignation as pastor of the society. May 17th, 1868, Rev. H. Bisbee was elected pastor of the church. February 6th, 1876, the society met with president Lovejoy in the chair, and resolved that the Rev. Mr. Harrington be invited to come and hold meetings in the spring, in order to determine the question whether or not a pastor could be maintained. This was the last meeting the society held. Circumstances over which the members of the society had no control, caused them to discontinue their meetings, and in 1877, they sold their church building and grounds to the French Catholics, and it is now known as the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes.

The first meeting for organization of the Church of the Redeemer was held at the Cataract House, October 24th, 1859, W. D. Washburn in the chair; it was organized under the name of First Universalist Society of Minneapolis. Among the first members in 1854-5, were Judge Cornell and wife, I. I. Lewis, George W. Chowen, Isaac Brown and John Jackins. Rev. D. Skinner preached for a few months, when the Rev. J. W. King was called and accepted the pastorate. During his pastorate a church was built on the corner of Fifth street and Fourth Avenue south, and was dedicated in October, 1866, Rev. D. M. Reed of Illinois, preaching the dedication sermon. On the first Sunday in July, Rev. J. H. Tuttle of Chicago, preached his first sermon. After eight years of his ministry the increasing growth of the church necessitated a change for larger accommodations. A committee was accordingly appointed and a new site for a church was selected on the corner of Eighth street and Second Avenue south, and work was commenced on the present new and beautiful edifice in May, 1873. The work was pushed forward as rapidly as so elaborate a work could well be done, all taking an interest in the new house. Hon. W. D. Washburn presented the society with an elegant organ of the finest finish and tone, costing between three and four thousand dollars. After the completion of the church a meeting was called in July, 1856, and on a motion made, the new church was named the "Church of the Redeemer," and was dedicated July 9th, 1856. Rev. A. A. Minor, D. D., of Boston, Massachusetts, preaching the dedication sermon. Invocation by the Rev. Robert Collyer of Chicago. It is built of blue lime-stone in the gothic style of architecture, with elegantly designed and stained windows, and is a marvel of beauty in design and architecture. Rev. J. H. Tuttle is pastor in charge.

EPISCOPAL.

Church of Gethsemane, Protestant Episcopal, is located on Seventh Avenue south, corner of Fifth street. The first Episcopal service performed in what is now Minneapolis, was a funeral service by the Rev. Dr. Gear, in the old government mill near the falls. April 14th, 1856, the church of Gethsemane was organized by Rev. J. S. Chamberlain, missionary at St. Anthony, who, during the spring and summer of that year, held services in a public hall on Helen street, organized with five communicants: Wardens, H. T. Welles, M. L. Olds; vestrymen, W. J. Parsons, I. Atwater, A. E. Ames. July, 1856, Rev. D. B. Knickerbacker, present rector, was appointed missionary of the domestic board, and was ordained priest, in Gethsemane Church July, 1857, by Bishop Kemper. August 5th, 1856, the corner stone of Gethsemane Church was laid, by the Rev. Dr. Gear, then chaplain at Fort Snelling, and the first service was held in the church December 7th of that year. At the time of the consecration of the church there were sixteen communicants. In 1858, the rectory and sexton's house were built, and in 1865, the church was enlarged and the parish school opened. The history of the church is one of steady growth and prosperity. There are now (1880) two hundred and fifty communicants. The present officers are: Rector, Rev. D. B. Knickerbacker, D. D.; rector's assistant, Rev. J. A. Bevington, B. D.; senior warden, I. Atwater; junior warden, O. T. Tuttle; vestrymen, C. W. Putnam, M. D.; W. B. Jackson, Jr.; E. H. Holbrook, Jr.; W. H. Chamberlain, John L. Black, W. D. Lawrence, M. D.; treasurer, G. C. Earnham; clerk, S. C. March; parish visitors, Sisters Annette Relf and Mrs. D. E. Spooner. Connected with the church is a

Sunday-school, of which the rector is superintendent, having an average attendance of about 225 scholars. The following is a description of the missions in the city under charge of Gethsemane Church:

St. Andrew's Church, North Minneapolis, is located at the corner of Washington and Eighteenth Avenues north. Services were commenced in 1857 and continued until the present time under the care of the clergy of Gethsemane. Service is held every Sunday morning, and Sunday-school after morning service. There are fifty families and fifty-five communicants. The Sunday-school has seventy-five scholars enrolled.

Grace Chapel Mission is located on Franklin Avenue, corner of Twenty-first Avenue south. It was erected in 1877, at a cost of $2,500; owned and under the care of the Brotherhood of Gethsemane Church. Divine service and Sunday-school is held weekly at three o'clock p. m.; one hundred children are enrolled. It is under the care of Rev. D. B. Knickerbacker, D. D., and assistants.

County Jail. Mission services are held here every Sunday afternoon by the Brotherhood of Gethsemane Church.

Holy Trinity Church, Fourth Avenue south, corner Sixth street was founded under the auspices of the associated mission which landed at Ft. Snelling in 1850, consisting of the Rev. James Lloyd Breck, John Austin Merriek and Rev. Timothy Wilcoxson. The first service in East Minneapolis, then St. Anthony was held in July, 1850, by Rev. Timothy Wilcoxson. The corner stone of the original church was laid by the Rev. Dr. Breck, October 30th, 1850. Rev. Father Gear, chaplain at Fort Snelling, making the address. First episcopal visitation was made by Right Rev. Dr. Kemper on Sunday, August 4th, 1850. The parish was formally organized on Easter Monday, 1852, first clergyman in charge, Rev. Timothy Wilcoxson. October 1st, 1852, Rev. J. S. Chamberlain was assigned to duty at St. Anthony, and several stations north and south; Rev. D. B. Knickerbacker afterwards pastor of Gethsemane parish, and Bishop elect of Arizona, was sent out to aid Rev. Mr. Chamberlain and remained in charge until 1857. He was succeeded by Rev. Charles Woodward as rector from 1857 to '59. The rectorship was vacant from '59 to '60, when Rev. H. A. Neely assumed temporary charge until May 5th, 1861. Rev. Mr. Knickerbacker resumed the care of the parish until 1862. In 1863, Rev. A. Spor became rector, remained until 1865; Rev. Dr. Smallwood succeeded, who died universally regretted, July 2d, 1869. The parish again became dependent upon the care of Rev. Mr. Knickerbacker until October, 1867; Rev. A. Reyes succeeded only to remain a short time. Rev. John Anketel succeeded him for a brief period; Rev. G. L. Chase then became rector, remaining until September, 1871, at which time, after being twice called, he assumed the wardenship of the Divinity school at Faribault. Mr. Chase was assisted for several years by the Rev. Charles H. Plummer, who was succeeded in October, 1874, by Rev. Frank C. Coolbaugh, who remained until October 4th, 1875. On December 4th, 1875, Rev. Theodore M. Riley, of Philadelphia, was elected rector, and entered upon his duties July 15th, 1876. Under the rectorship of Rev. Mr. Chase, a new stone church had been erected, which remained unfurnished until 1876; carpets and pews were provided in 1877; windows for the chancel were presented by Mrs. Elizabeth Grow, of New York; furnished and without debt it awaited consecration, which occurred on ascension day, May 30th, 1878, by Right Rev. Bishop Whipple. The sermon was preached by Rev. C. W. Ward, of Winona, son of the late Commodore Ward. The Font now in use in the church, was made from stone that fell from the top of St. Anthony Falls in 1856. The altar somewhat enlarged, is the original one in use in the days of Breck, Merrick and Wilcoxson; the bell was purchased in 1854. The rectory just completed was erected during the past year, largely through the kind benevolence of Mrs. Caroline H. Delano, of Niagara Falls, who donated one thousand dollars toward the cozy structure; the remaining $500 was contributed by the parish.

St. Mark's Church was organized April 22d, 1868. The first service of the new parish was in St. Mark's Chapel, in July, sermon by Rev. E. S. Thomas, of Faribault. Rev. Mr. Thomas was unanimously chosen the first rector. August 3d, which he declined. Rev. E. A. Bradley was elected, and entered upon the duties of his office in 1869, holding the rectorship for about eighteen months. He resigned August 10th, 1870. The new church was completed in December following, and the first service in the new edifice was held on Christmas day, at which time the total amount of the church debt of seven thousand dollars, was paid by the generous offerings of the people. This new and beautiful structure was consecrated September 21st, 1871, Bishop Whipple officiating. Rev. Mr. Thomas resigned January 1st, 1875, succeeded by Rev. Mr. Corbett, D. D., who resigned January 2d, 1880. In October, 1880, Rev. T. B. Wells, D. D., the present rector, was elected.

St. Paul's Episcopal Church, located on Hennepin Avenue, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, was organized in June, 1880. For about seven months meetings were held in Elliott hall on Nicollet Avenue between Washington Avenue and Third street. The congregation purchased its present site on Hennepin Avenue, and erected their edifice which they occupied early in November, 1880. In July, the present rector, Rev. F. W. Tomkins was called and took charge September 1st, 1880. The communicants number about seventy-five, and are rapidly increasing.

Christ Church, Reformed Episcopal, is one of the later organizations of the city. Its edifice is on Hennepin Avenue above Tenth street, and it possesses one of the best organs in the city. Its membership as yet is small. The officers are: rector, Rev. Edward D. Neill; senior warden, W. C. Baker; junior warden, George Markell; vestrymen, Edwin Phillips, M. D., J. H. Bissell, M. D., W. W. McNair.

The German Lutheran. St. John's Church, is located on First street between Sixth and Seventh Avenues north-east. The first meeting was held in a school-house, in June, 1867. Rev. Mr. Fachtmann was the first pastor. The church had sixteen members. From various causes the membership has been reduced, and the church is at present without a pastor.

Trinity Norwegian Danish Evangelical Lutheran Church is located on the corner of Fourth street and Tenth Avenue south. Was organized in 1868, by Rev. Paulson, who is now a resident of Wilmar. The second pastor was Prof. Weenaas; the third, Prof. Sven Oftedal; and the fourth, G. Oftedal, the present incumbent. The church was erected in 1871. The first member ship was about thirty. The present number is 450. There is a religious school held in this church about two and a half months in the year; also a Sunday-school weekly.

Our Savior's Church. Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran, located on the corner of Washington and Tenth Avenue south, was organized in 1869, by Rev. Zvisaker, with about six members. He remained about three years, and was succeeded by Rev. A. H. Stub. In 1878, the present incumbent, O. P. Vangsnes, was called to this charge. The voting membership is about one hundred.

Emanuel Church. Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran, located on First street between Central and First Avenues north-east. It is an outgrowth from the church of "Our Savior," and was organized by Rev. A. H. Stub, to accommodate the Norwegian population on the east side. Rev. Mr. Stub was succeeded by the Rev. O. P. Vangsnes, who is now in charge.

Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Mission Church is located on the corner of Fourth street and Eighth Avenue south; was organized in 1874, by Rev. Charles Youngqvist, who remained six months; was then supplied occasionally until 1877, when Rev. A. Lidman took charge, remaining until the arrival of the Rev. C. E. Tornqvist, August, 1880. First worshipped on the corner of Sixth street and Seventeenth Avenue south, in a church sold to Father Power of the Holy Rosary Church. In 1879, a church was erected on the corner of Fourth street and Eighth Avenue south, and dedicated the same year. Was organized with eight families. The communicants now number 175.

St. John's Church, German Evangelical, is located on the corner of Sixteenth Avenue north and Third street, and was organized in 1872, by Rev. Louis Rague of St. Paul. Having no edifice, met in private houses, and was occasionally visited by Rev. Rague. In 1874 Rev. L. H. Buchrig was appointed pastor. In 1875 the land on which the neat little church and parsonage is located was purchased and the church erected the same year. Rev. Buchrig remained till May 1st, 1878. For a few months there was no regular preaching. August 8th, 1878, Rev. H. Fleer took charge of the work and now remains pastor.

During the vacation of the public schools Mr.

Fleer has a select school in the church for about three months in the year. Reading, writing, mental arithmetic, spelling, etc., are taught.

Trinity Church, German Evangelical Lutheran, is located on the corner of Ninth Avenue south and Fourth street. In 1856, Ferdinand Sievers was sent here by the Missouri Synod to investigate, and finding a number of his countrymen here without a pastor or church organization, he consented to preach a few times, thereby forming the nucleus of the present Trinity church. After his return home, the society was visited by Rev. E. G. Miessler, then a missionary from Michigan. The first regular pastor was Rev. John Horst, who took charge in 1859, coming here from Fort Wayne, Indiana, remaining till the summer of 1863; moved to Goodhue county, leaving the church without a regular supply. Rev. Paul Rupprecht preached occasionally, after which Rev. Ernest Rolf, of St. Paul, took the charge until March, 1868, when Rev. William Friedrich supplied the pulpit until the health of Rev. John Herzer permitted him to resume, and he continued his labors until July 6th, 1879, when the present incumbent, Mr. Doell, arrived. The church was built in 1868, and dedicated in September of the same year. At that time there were only sixteen members; at present the voting membership is sixty.

St. Paul's Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran church, located on the corner of Fourth street and Fifteenth Avenue south, was organized July 6th, 1872, by Mr. Berg, pastor, with twenty-six members. From the first organization to the present time they have had three pastors. Rev. Mr. Karlson is the present pastor. Have a Sunday-school that was organized in 1874; present membership forty-five, with L. Johnson superintendent.

The German Evangelical Association is located on the corner of Fourth street and Sixth Avenue north. The first meeting was held at a private residence corner of Third street and Hennepin Avenue in July, 1870, with three members, G. H. Kuebel first pastor. Bishop Whipple kindly offered them the use of the church, corner of Fourth street and Hennepin Avenue. The church in which they worshipped was to be moved, obliging them to seek quarters elsewhere. By the action of the conference held in St. Paul, steps were taken to secure property of their own, and in August following, a lot was purchased corner of Fourth street and Fourth Avenue north, and in September following, work was begun, and in November the church was completed and dedicated, Rev. A. Hudster, D. D., of the Northwestern College at Napierville, Illinois, officiating. June 12th, 1872, a permanent organization was made. In 1873, Rev. J. Manthey came as pastor; during his three years of labor the church grew and prospered. In 1876, Rev. W. Stegner was stationed here for three years. In that time the lot on which the church stood was sold to the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway. Immediately thereafter, the present site was purchased, the church building moved and repaired; in the same year a parsonage was built at a cost of $1,200. In 1879, Mr. Stegner was elected presiding elder, and succeeded by Rev. J. G. Haller, under whom the church has grown largely; also the Sunday-school. The parishioners have worked with commendable zeal.

A parochial school, in connection with Trinity Church, corner of Fourth street and Tenth Avenue south, has been conducted since the founding of the church. At first it was taught by the minister in charge, but in 1868, Frederick Droessler taught three months and then the minister again took charge until August 13th, 1871, when John Miller, a graduate of the Teachers' Seminary at Addison, Cook county, Illinois, was engaged. He was succeeded, April 1st, 1873, by Fred Lothman, of Cleveland, Ohio, and on September 1st, 1874, John W. Doell, the present incumbent took charge. The building is located near the church on the grounds of the society. The branches taught are religion, German and English reading, arithmetic, grammar, vocal music, United States history, translation and drawing.

Lutheran School Association. In September, 1880, an educational association was formed under the supervision of Rev. O. P. Vangsnes. The object of this organization is teaching of children of both sexes in religion and branches usually taught in a graded school. School is taught ten months of the year, in the basement of the Methodist Episcopal church, corner of Fourth Avenue south and Fifth street.

In connection with Augustana church, a religious day school is held in the church about four months in the year. The branches taught are reading, Bible history and catechism.

The Friends held their first meeting in the summer of 1856, with about twelve members, who assembled in an upper hall on First street, in a building belonging to Joel Bassett. Daniel Bassett "head of the meeting" holding meetings in that place for two or three years. In 1857, they built the present church on Hennepin Avenue and Eighth street, and have a membership of about one hundred and twenty.

The Church of Christ, of Minneapolis, owes its organization to the following circumstances. Early in the month of February, 1877, the Christian Missionary Society of Minnesota, an institution incorporated under the laws of the state by the religious people commonly known as Disciples, sent to the city of Minneapolis, its then presiding elder, J. LaGrange, to ascertain who, if any of its residents were of their faith, and to organize if possible, a church. After some efforts several were found, and an interview was appointed for the evening of February 14th, at the house, A. T. Ankeny. At this interview the following members were present; Elder LaGrange, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Mattison, Mrs. O. C. Wyman, Mrs. W. S. Atkinson. It was then determined to continue the work of inquiry. In the month of May following, under the invitation of the brethren, they were visited by Elder N. A. McConnell, of Iowa, by whom a series of meetings was conducted at the chapel of the New Jerusalem Church on the corner of Ninth street and Fifth Avenue south. As a result of those labors, the Church of Christ was formed, to be governed in all things by the Holy Scriptures. From that time forward, the public services were regular, and the following persons have acted as pastors: Elders, E. T. C. Bennett, W. H. Rogers and W. H. Jeffries. The trustees are S. B. Mattison, O. C. Wyman and A. T. Ankeny, deacons, D. W. Egan, J. W. Birdwell, Dr. L. W. Denton and O. A. Slaffter. The present membership is seventy-six. As adjuncts to the church are a flourishing Bible school and Womans Aid Society; services are held every first day of the week at the chapel, corner Ninth street and Fifth Avenue south. It is the expectation of this church to erect an edifice for worship at as early a day as circumstances will allow.

The Advent Christian Church, Fourth street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues north, was organized with Rev. H. F. Berriek, first pastor. Present church edifice was erected in 1870. The officiating clergyman, Rev. W. J. Brusell, commenced his labors in 1879. They have a membership of about forty; also a Sunday-school with an average attendance of forty; Mr. J. Colter, superintendent.

The Hebrew Reformed Congregation is located near the corner of First Avenue south and Fifth street. This society rented a hall on Hennepin Avenue in 1878, where they worshiped for two years, with the Rev. Dr. Friedman for their pastor for the first year, who was then succeeded by Rev. Dr. Shreier for one year. Their constantly increasing numbers obliged them to build a synagogue, at a cost of $6,500, which was dedicated in the winter of 1880. It is built in the Oriental style of architecture. After its dedication, the Rev. Dr. Thowizi, a highly cultured man, was called and accepted the charge.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

NEWSPAPERS, COURTS AND BAR.

St. Anthony Express, weekly. To the St. Anthony Express, belongs the honor of the title of Father of the Press at the falls of St. Anthony. The first number was issued on Saturday of the last week in May, 1851. It was published in weekly form, indeed there was no daily publication in the territory until six years later. Our well known fellow citizen, Judge Isaac Atwater edited, and E. Tyler published the paper. In the spring of 1852, Judge Atwater bought out his partner and continued the publication of the sheet until 1858, when it was removed to Shakopee, having been sold to Judge McDonald.

Minnesota Republican, weekly. On April 12th, 1856, C. G. Ames, editor, and D. L. Paine, publisher, started the Minnesota Republican, which ran with varying success until it was sold to Croffut and Clark and finally, on January 6th, 1858, merged into the State News.

Falls Evening News, daily. Messrs. Croffut and Clark were the first to launch their bark upon the sea of daily journalism; on whose rocks and shoals so many promising crafts have been shipwrecked. September 28th, 1856, they began the publication of the daily, Falls Evening News. In April, 1861, the daily, after a hard struggle, sank from view. The weekly edition, known as the State News, continued however, two years longer.

North-Western Democrat, weekly. W. A. Hotchkiss, started the North-Western Democrat, the first paper issued west of the river, during the month of August, 1855. This sheet continued until 1857, when Joel B. Bassett purchased it, afterwards selling to W. F. Russell of Shakopee.

The Gazette, weekly. Mr. Russell removed to Minneapolis and christened his venture The Gazette. Only a year later, Mr. Bassett again obtained possession of the sheet, selling it shortly afterwards, when it was merged into the Journal.

Minneapolis Journal, weekly. In 1858, C. H. Pettit and John G. Williams having bought the Gazette, rejuvenated it under the name of the Minneapolis Journal, but it was short lived, being swallowed up by the State Atlas in 1859.

The Plain Dealer, weekly. On the 5th of April 1858, Horace E. Purdy issued the Plain Dealer, democratic in principle. Seventeen months later it was removed to La Crosse.

State Atlas, weekly. May 28th, 1859, the indomitable William S. King started the State Atlas. Col. King had a severe struggle, but by hard work and with the aid of his personal endeavor as sole proprietor and editor, he carried his enterprise safely until 1867, when the Daily Tribune engulfed it.

The Chronicle, daily. On June 22d, 1866, a publishing company composed of John H. Stevens and others, began the weekly Chronicle. Three months later the first number of the Daily Chronicle was issued. In May of the following year the paper passed into the Tribune vortex, which sucked down so many cotemporaries.

The Cataract and Agriculturist, weekly. Col. J. H. Stevens and F. Belfoy, the latter now of Litchfield, issued the first number of the Cataract and Agriculturist, on August 23d, 1857. R. H. Conwell bought the paper in February, 1868.

North Star, weekly. Mr. Conwell continued his purchase, the Cataract and Agriculturist, under the title of North Star.

The Independent, weekly. In the fall of 1868, C. M. Landon purchased Mr. Conwell's North Star and continued the publication under the name of the Independent. This sheet lived two years.

Daily Star. R. H. Conwell tried his hand at daily journalism by starting a campaign republican paper on June 5th, 1868. The paper lasted just five months.

The Tribune, daily. In the year 1867, Minneapolis journalism had dwindled down to two publications, the State Atlas and the Daily Chronicle. In May of the year mentioned, a stock company, called the Tribune Printing Company, was formed, consisting of some of the leading Republicans of the city, prominent among whom were D. Morrison, W. D. Washburn, Dr. L. Butler, J. S. Pillsbury, W. S. King, L. P. Plummer, and a number of others. This company, with a capital stock of $25,000, purchased the Minneapolis field, together with the good will and chattels of the Atlas and Chronicle, and on Saturday, May 25th, 1867, issued the first number of The Daily Tribune, with full telegraphic dispatches, and an able corps of editors, with John T. Gilman as chief. Mr. Gilman's connection with the Tribune lasted three months, when he was succeeded by George K. Shaw. About the year 1870, Hugh W. Greene was placed in charge of the paper. Mr. Greene was followed by Mr. Powell, Major Howell, W. A. Croffut, Clifford Thompson, and J. P. Rea as editors, in the order given. May 2d, 1876, through the pressure of financial circumstances, the Pioneer Press obtained control of the Tribune's associated press franchise, and its entire good will and effects. The Evening Mail was about the same time swallowed up by the insatiate monster. The great consolidated sailed for a time under the head of "The Pioneer Press and Tribune. The name was soon, however, reduced to its present title. The Pioneer Press, printed and edited in St. Paul, and circulated in both cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis. This successful coup d'état, by which St. Paul citizens controlled the entire field and franchises of Minneapolis daily journalism, resulted in the greatest indignation on the part of the people. Twelve of the best citizens formed a syndicate to, if possible, remedy the evil, and did actually, for a time, obtain under an iron-clad mortgage held by Judge Woods, of Ohio, the custody of the property. An indignation meeting was held at the Academy of Music, and sentiments anything but complimentary to the Pioneer Press action were freely vented. The efforts of "the twelve apostles," as they were dubbed, failed of any practical result, save that the Evening Tribune was placed in the field in lieu of the Evening Mail, under the editorial management of David Blakely, whose conduct of the paper, it must be said, has but reflected credit upon that gentleman. In May, 1880, after many delayed attempts, the Tribune was issued as a morning daily eight-page paper, with full telegraphic franchise, and every promise of supplying the much needed and long talked of morning daily, strictly in the interests of Minneapolis. The editorial force consists of D. Blakely and A. B. Nettleton, editors and proprietors, Amos Jordan, news editor, J. N. Nind, city editor, and a corps of three trained reporters. The weekly edition of the Tribune has reached a circulation throughout the north-west.

The Farmer's Union, weekly. August 1st, 1867, W. A. Nimocks, publisher, and Col. J. H. Stevens, editor, started the Farmer's Union. In December, two years later, Mr. Nimocks sold out to Col. Stevens. Up to January 1st, 1872, the Union had been issued as a monthly, but on that date it began its existence as a weekly, as it has since continued. August 1st, 1873, W. J. Abernethy purchased the paper, running it with marked success until July 1st, 1876, when it became involved in the general downfall of Minneapolis journals, being absorbed by the Pioneer Press, and joined with the Tribune's weekly as the Weekly Tribune and Farmer's Union.

St. Anthony Falls Democrat, weekly. The first number of the St. Anthony Falls Democrat was issued in October, 1869, by Ovid Pinney and others, with Rev. H. Bisbee as editor. In the month of June following, Mr. Pinney assumed entire charge, afterwards leasing to J. J. Green.

Minneapolis Democrat, weekly. Mr. Green changed the name of the paper to the Minneapolis Democrat, and continued its publication until 1873, when its good-will was sold to the Evening Times

Minneapolis Free Will Baptist. This publication, appearing once in three months, was edited by Rev. A. D. Williams, the first number being issued about April, of 1859, and lived but about a year.

Minnesota Pupil, weekly. In 1868, W. T. Hatch started the Minnesota Pupil in the interests of education, but like so many others it was destined to die, and dropped out of sight about 1875.

Temperance Advocate, weekly. Rev. Mr. Manley dedicated the Temperance Advocate to the tee-totaler's cause, issuing the first number in 1869. The Advocate lasted about two years, then went the way of the rest.

The Citizen, weekly. The Citizen, claiming to be unsectarian, was in fact devoted to the cause of Christianity. The first number appeared January 1st, 1871. It was published in pamphlet form of twenty pages, and edited by Prof. Campbell, of the State University faculty. Douglass & Donaldson purchased the paper in 1875, and after a series of legal complications and business mistakes, it suspended in March, 1878.

Liberty Blade, weekly. August 1st, 1877, J. C. Irvin moved the Liberty Blade from St. Paul. The paper was devoted to temperance, and was for some time run in the interests of the Good Templars' lodges. Early in 1879, Rev. W. W. Satterlee, noted for his energetic adherence to the temperance cause, purchased the paper, and conducted it in his usual vigorous style until late in the fall, when it was united with the Waseca Radical.

Minnesota Beacon, semi-monthly. On January 6th, 1858, L. Mel. Hyde and Rev. Mr. Williams issued the first number of a semi-monthly, entitled the Minnesota Beacon. After one volume the name and issue was changed.

Rural Minnesotian, weekly. At the conclusion of the first volume of the Minnesota Beacon, the name was changed to the Rural Minnesotian, and the issue was made weekly. Expired at the beginning of the war, 1861.

Minneapolis Freie Press, weekly. The Freie Press is the only German paper published in Minneapolis. The paper was started November 13th, 1860, by Lambert Naegel publisher, and D. A. Hinsch as editor.

Evening News, daily. June 3d, 1871, George

K. Shaw issued the first number of the Minneapolis Daily Evening News. Two years later Pliny Bartlett purchased the News and consolidated the paper with the Times under the name of the Times and News, a title which was shortly afterwards dropped, the issue being continued under the name of the Evening Times.

Evening Times, daily. In 1872, Pliny Bartlett started the Evening Times, with Frank J. Mead as editor. In June, 1873, the Evening News was purchased and for a time the issue was published under the title of Times and News. This name was subsequently dropped and a stock company was formed, to run the Evening Times as a democratic daily, with the late Edward Murphy as president. December 20th, 1873, W. S. King closed up the concern under a chattel mortgage.

Evening Mail, daily. In 1874, the Evening Mail was started under the auspices of the Tribune with Clifford Thompson as editor. About two weeks later the Mail was purchased by W. A. Croffut, and one week afterwards, Johnson & Smith bought a half interest in the paper. About a year later Mr. Croffut disposed of his interest to the firm mentioned, and in May, 1876, the Mail was sold to T. S. King, who acted in the purchase as the agent of the Pioneer Press.

Minnesota, weekly. Solberg and Eger started the Minnesota, a weekly Norwegian paper, November 1st, 1871, merged in the Budstikken two years later.

Lutheraneren, bi-monthly. The Lutheraneren was moved from Wisconsin to Minneapolis in July, 1872, by Rev. G. Sverdrup, in the interests of the Norwegian Lutheran church.

Budstikken, weekly. September 2d, 1873, P. H. Hanson and Company started the Budstikken, a Norwegian paper. The publication was subsequently controlled by Gudman F. Johnson and J. E. Gjedde; Lute Jaeger is the editor.

Master-Mechanic, monthly. Vernon Bell issued the Master-Mechanic in 1871, Bell, Comstock and Parsons subsequently formed a company to run the paper as a weekly. It soon expired.

Monday Morning News, weekly. H. E. Lawrence attempted the publication of the Monday Morning News, in 1875. The paper was short lived, only a few numbers being issued.

Tourist and Sportsman, weekly. A. S. Dimond started the Tourist and Sportsman, an illustrated paper devoted to Minnesota pleasure resorts for the summer months, in May of 1875. April 6th, 1880, while published by Wilcox, Dimond and Company, the paper was burned out. The paper is issued during the summer months.

Mississippi Valley Lumberman, weekly. P. B. Walker started the Mississippi Valley Lumberman, August 17th, 1876. The paper is conducted entirely in the interest of the lumbermen. It has been repeatedly enlarged and seems to be in a flourishing condition.

The Pioneer Press. This paper belongs to Minneapolis by birth and native growth, as well as by adoption. On the one hand, it represents, it is true, the life and history of journalism in St. Paul, from the first issue of the "St. Paul Pioneer," April 28th, 1849, down to the date of union of the Pioneer and the "St. Paul Daily Press," April 11th, 1875. On the other hand, it represents also the growth of journalism in Minneapolis, from the early days of the old "North-Western Gazette," down to the original "Minneapolis Tribune," with which the Pioneer Press was consolidated May 2d, 1876. The St. Paul Pioneer had for several years previous to its union with the Press, maintained a business and editorial "Minneapolis department," but with the union of 1876, an entirely new system was established, which made it a more thorough representative of the life and growth of Minneapolis. In proprietary interests, and in editorial and business management, both cities were properly represented, and the new, or joint, policy established, gave to both cities a widely circulated organ. The average circulation of the Pioneer Press is now between eleven and twelve thousand, through Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Manitoba, northern Iowa and northern Wisconsin. The Weekly Pioneer Press has, in addition to the increasing circulation of the daily edition, reached fourteen thousand copies, which go into the homes of the most intelligent and thrifty of the farming population. This paper has lately secured the entire control of a telegraphic wire between St. Paul and New York and Washington, which gives them increased facilities for the transmission of news. The Pioneer Press is conceded by all to be the leading and most progressive journal in the north-west.

Minnesota Stats Tidning (The State Journal)

is a Swedish weekly which already ranks high among the leading newspapers of the north-west. Its founder and chief editor, is Col. H. Mattson, one of the pioneers of Minnesota. The first number of the paper was dated January 4th, 1877, was of twenty-eight pages, and came out in an edition of 1,000 copies. From that time it has steadily increased in prosperity and influence, and now contains thirty-six large columns, and numbers 1,000 regular subscribers. It is republican in politics, American in spirit, and a champion of the interests and honor of the Scandinavian people of the state, which comprises one-sixth of the entire population. This paper has its editorial rooms, office and composing rooms on the third floor of the City Hall building, and is under the management of H. Mattson, chief editor and publisher, Axel Dahlstrand, assistant editor, Alfr. Soderstrom, business manager.

Nordisk Folkeblad, weekly, was the first Scandinavian paper published in the city. It was established at Rochester, in 1868, by F. S. Christensen, now commissioner of statistics, and was removed to Minneapolis in 1873. It was conducted by several different managers until 1875, when it was consolidated with the "Skandinaven" in Chicago. In addition to this paper, there has been the Farmer Tidends, Minnesota Nord-vestern, Svenska Monitorin and Svenska Nybyzaren. The three first were published in the Norwegian language, and the three latter in the Swedish. All of them were of short duration.

Folkebladet, weekly. The first number of the Folkebladet was issued July, 1877, by Prof. S. Oftedal, president of Augsburg Seminary. The paper is devoted to the educational interests of the Norwegian people.

The Housekeeper, monthly. In the interests of the Buckeye cook book, the Housekeeper was first published in August of 1878. The little paper has reached an immense sale. April 6th, 1880, while published by Wilcox, Dimond and Co., the paper was burned out and is now published by Hoppin, Palmer and Dimond. The circulation now aggregates 20,000.

Minnesota Farmer, monthly. September 18th, 1877, H. E. Newton issued the first number of the Minnesota Farmer, a sheet which is still alive, albeit struggling hard for an existence.

Minnesota Scandinavia, weekly. The Scandinavia was first issued November 15th, 1878, by Gen. Hanson as a Norwegian weekly. The publication lasted only about a year when it suspended on account of the failing health of the editor.

Bell's Daily Times. Justus B. Bell issued the Daily Times as a small advertising sheet for gratuitous circulation from December 10th, 1878, to April 6th, 1880, when it fell a victim to the flames in the Brackett's block fire.

Northwestern Miller, weekly. March 19th, 1879, Albert Hoppin, editor and proprietor, moved the Northwestern Miller from La Crosse to Minneapolis. The paper is a neat twenty page pamphlet devoted to the milling interests of the north-west and has proven a decided success. During March of 1881, the issue reached 18,000 copies.

Evening Journal, daily. The first issue of the Evening Journal was made November 2d, 1878, by Charles H. Stevens and Frank E. Curtis. The paper was started as a three cent evening daily. April 6th, 1880, the paper was burned out in the Brackett's block disaster. A few days later the Minnesota Printing Company, composed of J. M. and Geo. K. Shaw and W. A. and C. A. Nimocks, bought the good will and circulation of the paper, and shortly after, purchased the associated press telegraphic franchise for the evening field. The paper was enlarged and improved in every department. The Evening Journal at once assumed the position of the leading evening newspaper of the north-west. April 1st, 1881, they moved into their new building, No. 10 Washington Avenue north, fully equipped with a double cylinder, rapid running R. Hoe press, engine, and all the facilities necessary to a first-class modern journal. The editorial staff is made up George K. Shaw, editor, Frank E. Hesler, city editor, A. J. Gage, Jr., telegraph editor, and Geo. N. Loomis state editor, besides a full corps of reporters and correspondents.

The Spectator, weekly. C. H. Dubois issued the first number of the Spectator, a weekly family paper of eight pages, on July 29th, 1879. The Farm and Home was issued for a time as an agricultural edition of the Spectator, but its course was short lived. The Spectator is issued every Saturday, and is one of the neatest papers, typographically, in the country.

State Index, weekly. Dr. D'Unger started the Trade Index about the year 1875, but shortly after changed the name to the State Index. The publication proved disastrous to its owner, who gave it up in sore extremity about three years later, subsequently removing to Chicago, where he has recuperated his failing fortunes through his treatment of inebriates with the "cinchona cure."

The Ariel, monthly. The Ariel is the college paper edited by the students at the State University. The editors are elected each year. The publication reached its fourth volume in June, 1881.

True Flag, weekly. J. S. Rankin, a gentleman of much learning, but little means, published for a time several partizan papers, among them the True Flag. They were all short lived.

The Penny Herald, daily. The Penny Herald was first issued by J. H. Rowell about May 15th, 1880, as a morning one cent daily. After running for about six months, it was changed to the evening field under the name of the Daily Herald. In January, 1880, Willard and Casseday purchased a three-fourths interest in the paper. The Herald depends upon correspondents and exchanges for its telegraphic news.

Comic Pictorial, monthly. Geo. B. Hall issued the first number of his Comic Pictorial, an eight page illustrated paper, March, 1881. It is yet too young for extended comment, but its future may be easily anticipated.

Boys and Girls of Minnesota, weekly. Will. Beach edited and published the Boys and Girls of Minnesota for about six months. The publication was a neatly illustrated pamphlet, quite popular among children. In January, 1881, the paper was burned out and suspended.

The Mirror, weekly. In 1873, Ed. A. Stevens started the illustrated Sunday Mirror, devoted to the broadest personalities with the motto "We will tell the truth, no matter who is hit." The publication was subsequently changed to the Gopher Mirror, then to the Daily Mirror, issued every evening, and finally to the Hennepin County Mirror. Late in 1880, Ed. A. Stevens sold the entire interest in his paper to his brother, Chas. H. Stevens.

Minneapolis Weekly. The Minneapolis Weekly is published every Thursday by the Eagle Publishing Company apparently, but de facto by E. H. Steele, as an advertising medium. The first number was issued in November, 1880.

Sunday News, weekly. In the month of March, 1880, three young men, Messrs. Shultz, Struby and Leader, who had formerly been connected with the press in Bradford, Pa., came to Minneapolis equipped with new type, a large cylinder press and a complete newspaper outfit, but unfortunately without that other component necessity—ready cash. They published just two editions of the Sunday Morning News, when they suspended, sold out and left for parts unknown.

Homestead Monthly. January 1st, 1880, the Homestead Company issued the first number of the Minnesota Homestead, a monthly, twenty-page magazine. In November, 1880, Geo. W. Jenks became sole proprietor. In December of the same year the magazine was enlarged to thirty-six pages, and the name changed to the Homestead Monthly.

Temperance Review, weekly. In February, 1881, L. Bixby moved the Owatonna Review from Owatonna to Minneapolis, and associating with Rev. W. W. Satterlee as editor, on the 25th of the same month, the Temperance Review was issued. The paper retains its Owatonna patronage, is radically temperance in its proclivities, and has already obtained a firm footing.

COURTS AND BAR.

The early history of the courts and bar of Hennepin county furnishes perhaps, less salient points of interest than that of most frontier counties in western territories. The first settlers were mostly from the New England and Middle States, were generally intelligent, moral, and accustomed to the observance of law and order, and among whom crimes of a serious nature were of rare occurrence. They brought their laws and customs with them, so that the removal to what was then (1849) the extreme western frontier, scarcely produced any change in their social and political condition. That part of what is now Hennepin county, lying east of the Mississippi river, was, when the territory of Minnesota was organized in 1849, a part of St. Croix county, Wisconsin, as was also the country lying between it and the state of Wisconsin. It was amenable to the laws of that state, but, at that time there were but a handful of people, and courts were scarcely a necessity. But no sooner was the territory organized, and territorial officers appointed, than population began to pour in. By the organic act, the courts of the territory consisted of supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and courts of justice of the peace. The first justices of the peace, in what is now Hennepin county, were Dr. Ira Kingsley, and others, whose names we cannot ascertain. They held office for two years. At the October election in 1851, I. I. Lewis, and William B. Welch, were elected to serve for two years. The last named, was appointed chief justice of the supreme court of the territory in 1853, and took his seat on the bench in January, 1854. Mr. Lewis resigned in August, 1852, from a cause which may be considered worth mention. One Alex. Cloutier, one of the first settlers in St. Anthony, and proprietor of a liquor saloon, had been prosecuted before Mr. Lewis, for a violation of the prohibitory law, which had recently been enacted. The excitement on the question ran high—grave doubts were entertained by many, as to the constitutionality of the law, and the people were about equally divided on the question. Mr. Lewis, having no desire to involve himself in quarrels with his neighbors, resigned his office before the case was decided. On the 6th of August, 1852, a special election was called to fill the vacancy, and at the solicitation of a large number of the prominent citizens of St. Anthony, irrespective of party, Lardner Bostwick Esq., consented to be a candidate for the office, and was elected. The case of Cloutier, was again brought, before him, and he held the law constitutional, and fined the defendant twenty-five dollars. The case was appealed to the district court, and Judge Hayner, who was then on the bench, reversed the decision, and held the law unconstitutional, on the ground that the legislative power was vested by the organic act, in the governor and legislature, and that they had no power to delegate their authority to the people, and that the act, having attempted to transfer this power, was null and void. At the October election in 1856, Mr. Bostwick was re-elected with A. D. Foster, to serve two years from January 1st, 1854. In 1857, Charles E. Leonard and Mr. Bostwick were elected, the latter of whom held the office till January, 1860, when he entered upon the discharge of the duties of judge of probate, to which he was elected in 1859. This office he held two years, and was subsequently elected court commissioner.

March 6th, 1852, an act was passed by the legislature organizing Hennepin county and attaching the same temporarily to Ramsey county for judicial purposes. At the first election subsequent to the organization, Edwin Hedderly and Dr. H. Fletcher were elected justices on the west side of the river. The former was re-elected for four, or perhaps five years successively, and the latter was succeeded in 1853 by Mr. Barber, who held office till 1857. The foregoing list it is believed comprises all the justices of the peace in St. Anthony and Minneapolis to the time when the state was admitted, and is as late a date as it is deemed necessary to continue the history of these courts.

In this connection it may be remarked that in those early days, very important questions and points were decided in those justices' courts. Many suits of forcible entry and detainer were brought, involving very valuable property, and although nominally, only the right of possession was in issue, yet practically, possession in those days was emphatically "nine points of the law," and not infrequently carried the legal title with it. Among the tracts thus adjudicated upon, were Hennepin Island, the property on which the flouring mills on the west side of the river are now situated, and in fact, several claims, which now constitute the most valuable part of the city of Minneapolis. None of these justices were educated lawyers, with the exception of Judge Bostwick, but were men of unquestionable probity, strong common sense, and both law and equity were meted out in these early courts as uniformly and successfully as in any courts that have succeeded them.

Sometimes, indeed, peculiar phases of frontier life would develop. In a certain claim suit between Joel B. Bassett and Daniel Bickford, after a tedious trial of two or three days, the case was submitted to the jury, who retired to consider their verdict. After wrangling over it an entire day and more, one of the jurors, George W. Tew, became disgusted, jumped out of a second story window and ran away, and thus ended the trial.

Some days after he reappeared, but nothing further was done in the matter.

Another characteristic incident occurred in a trial before Squire Bostwick. One Pet Strother, one of the "boys" of that early time, was arrested and brought before the court on a charge of assault and battery. The complaint was read to him, and he was told to plead guilty or not guilty. "Well, your honor, I don't know whether I am guilty or not. I did knock the man down, but he called me first a son of a b——h, and that is not true."

"But you must plead, one way or the other."

"But," responded the prisoner, "I don't know. I'm sorter guilty, and sorter not guilty."

The writer (who was his counsel) finally induced him, for form's sake, to plead not guilty. A jury was called, and several witnesses swore point blank to seeing the defendant knock down the complainant, but admitted the complainant had first used the opprobrious epithet above mentioned. No witnesses were called for defendant: but the counsel for defendant, in his argument to the jury, insisted that none of the witnesses, in speaking of the defendant, had mentioned his first name, but had called him "Strother," and that for all that appeared, the real criminal might be some other person than the defendant. The jury saw it "in those lamps," and in five minutes returned a verdict of not guilty, and immediately made up a purse among themselves to pay defendant's expenses.

Another incident of the fun the boys used to have in those early days in court, may be mentioned. A certain Dr. Jodon, somewhat notorious in those days, had married a lady which marriage, on account of the great disparity of age and position of the parties, was offensive to a large majority of the citizens. The usual result in frontier communities followed—that quite a large crowd of the "fast boys," on the wedding night, indulged in a "charivari" of the couple, which was carried beyond the limits of a legitimate charivari (if there can be any such limits) and disturbed some of the peaceable citizens in the neighborhood, among others J. W. North, Esq., who was indignant at the outrage.

Al. Stone, one of the most inveterate jokers on the east side of the river (and who is still living, and long may he wave!) thought he saw the opportunity to perpetrate a good practical joke. He accordingly went quietly to Mr. North, and told him that he had ascertained the names of from twelve to fifteen persons who were engaged in that charivari, and would name the parties, including a large number of the oldest and most sober and respectable citizens of the town, among whom were Capt. John Rollins, Dr. Murphy, Rufus Farnham, A. D. Foster, and others of like standing, and that if he would make a complaint and have them arrested he would furnish the evidence to have them convicted. Accordingly the complaint was made, and the parties arrested and brought before the court, and everybody was astounded to learn that these staid citizens were engaged in such a "lark." One or two witnesses were called preliminarily, who testified they knew nothing about the matter, and then "Al," the main witness, was called, and asked to state what he knew about it.

"I know nothing, sir."

"But where were you that night?"

"I was in my virtuous bed, asleep."

"But do you say you don't know who was engaged in that affair?"

"Well, I have heard these defendants were."

"Do you mean to say that all you know about their being engaged in it is what you have heard?"

"Yes, sir, I supposed that would be enough."

It was enough. The prosecutor had no further evidence, and it then dawned on his mind that he had been made the victim of one of "Al's" practical jokes. The case, of course, was dismissed, amid uproarious mirth, although the perpetrator came to the conclusion that it was a kind of joke that would not bear repetition. A part of the joke lay also in the fact that the justice himself, on the night in question, was concealed near the scene of operations, and knew the parties engaged in it, and that they were not the parties named in the complaint, and tried to induce the prosecutor to leave them out, but did not succeed, and of course could not reveal the source of his knowledge of the matter.

In this connection we insert an item published in the Pioneer Press in the fall of 1880, referring to the destruction of the building in which Judge Bostwick's court was held for many years.

"An old landmark destroyed. The little old building, corner of Main street and Second Avenue north, East Division, owned, and for so many years occupied as an office by Judge Bostwick, was yesterday demolished, its days of usefulness having passed. This was one of the old landmarks of the city, and has a history worth relating. It was built in 1849 by R. P. Russell, and first used as a warehouse for his dry-goods store adjoining. In 1850 George F. Brott converted it into a wagon-shop, and in 1851 Cal. Church reconverted it into a meat market. During the same year, the building came into the possession of, and has since been retained by Judge Bostwick, who occupied it in his official capacity as justice of the peace until 1860, from 1860 to 1862, as a probate and court commissioner's office, and from 1862 to 1866, as assessor of internal revenue. During his reign as justice of the peace, Judge Bostwick rendered decisions therein to the amount of over $100,000 in civil cases and disposed of a corresponding amount of criminal business. Among the distinguished legal lights who, in those old days, read their briefs, (and some of them were not very brief, either,) under that little roof, were J. W. North, Isaac Atwater, D. A. Secombe, F. R. E. Cornell, C. E. Vanderburgh, James W. Lawrence, Sr., William Lochren, W. W. McNair, W. D. Washburn, Judge Parsons, W. A. Gorman, Edmund Rice, Aaron Goodrich, Wm. Hollingshead, Michael E. Ames and others too numerous to mention.

"Engineer Griffith made many of the drawings for the old suspension bridge in this building, and the old time Upper Mississippi Navigation Company were accustomed to hold their meetings there. It was occupied as the St. Anthony city council room for two years, was the regular polling place on election days, and republican headquarters when Fremont was the party standard-bearer. Many were the lively and interesting scenes which transpired within its walls and about its doorway, where political knock-downs were not of uncommon occurrence; and there has been more perjury committed in that old building than any other in the city, except, perhaps, the old land office during the early settlement of Minneapolis. One by one the roses and old landmarks fall."

The first district court held in what is now a part of Hennepin county, was presided over by the Hon. B. B. Meeker, appointed one of the associate justices of the supreme court, under the administration of President Taylor. The court was held in July, 1849, in the old government mill building, erected for the use of Fort Snelling, and which stood near the present site of the Northwestern mill. Since the time of the erection of that government mill, about 1822, the falls have receded between three and four hundred feet. Franklin Steele, Esq., was foreman of the grand jury. The records of that court have unfortunately been lost, but it can be stated that no bills of indictment were found nor any cases tried, and but two or three attorneys were present. Refreshments suitable to the occasion, were provided by the sheriff, which were partaken of by the bench, bar and jury, and it was voted a pleasant inauguration of judicial proceedings in the county. The military reservation where this first court was held was then in Dakota county.

It has already been stated that the county was organized in 1852, but county officers were not elected till November of that year. The second district court was held in 1853, in a frame building erected by Anson Northrup, and which stood on or very near the site now occupied by the Crown Roller mill. This court was presided over by Hon. A. G. Chatfield, who was appointed one of the associate justices under the administration of President Pierce. This was the first fully equipped district court held in the county, the first county officers having been elected, and regular business was commenced, with a calendar of some half a dozen cases, appeals from justices courts. From this small beginning has grown up the immense business now transacted by two judges of the district court, and which occupies almost their entire time.

Judge Chatfield continued to hold the district court in Hennepin county in a frame building on Bridge square, until the erection of the present court house. In 1857 he was succeeded by Judge Elandran, appointed under the administration of President Buchanan. He held one term of the court, and in 1857 was elected associate justice of the supreme court of the state of Minnesota.

In 1857, Hon. Edward O. Hamlin, was elected judge of the fourth judicial district, of which Hennepin county was a part. He was succeeded in 1859, by the Hon. Chas. E. Vanderburgh, who has been re-elected, at each succeeding expiration of his term, and who now holds the office. In 1872, an act was passed, establishing a court of common pleas in Hennepin county, and under the provisions of the act, the governor appointed the Hon. A. H. Young, as judge, who entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office in April of that year; the following November he was elected as judge of that court, to serve for five years from the first of January, 1873. Subsequently in 1877, this court was abolished, and two judges were provided for in the district court, and Judge Young was elected the same year as one of said judges. As the incumbents of these offices are still in the active discharge of their duties and well known to our citizens, any extended notice of them or the court over which they preside, will not be expected. It is not, however, improper to state in this connection, that in point of ability, probity, and extensive legal learning, the present bench ranks among the first in the state.

The business in the probate court was, for many years after the county was organized, very small. Now, however, it is assuming large proportions, and is rapidly increasing. There have served as judges of probate, in the order named, in this county: J. B. Bassett, Hezekiah Fletcher, E. S. Jones, L. Bostwick, N. H. Hemmip, F. Beebe, E. A. Gove, P. M. Babcock and John P. Rea, the present incumbent. After the organization of the city of Minneapolis, Chas. H. Woods, H. G. Hicks and J. L. Himes, were elected and served as city justices. After the consolidation of St. Anthony with Minneapolis, Grove B. Cooley was elected judge of the municipal court, was re-elected in 1880, and is present city judge. In 1880, F. Bailey was elected assistant judge.

Clerks and sheriffs are an important part of the machinery of courts, and on their efficiency depends much, the successful and prompt transaction of business. Hennepin county has been exceptionally fortunate in having careful and energetic men to fill these positions. With the exception of the first two or three years after the county was organized, when the court had no settled abiding places, and no suitable place for preserving papers had been provided, the files will be found nearly entire. A few, during those early years, have been lost. Sweet W. Case, was the first clerk of the district court, elected in 1852, and held the office till 1858. He was succeeded by the following persons in the order named, viz: H. A. Partridge, H. O. Hamlin, J. P. Plummer, George W. Chown, D. W. Albaugh, L. Jerome, J. A. Wolverton, and E. J. Davenport, the present incumbent. Isaac Brown was the first sheriff of the county and was succeeded in the order named, by B. E. Messer, E. Lippincott, Richard Strout, John A. Armstrong, H. G. Hicks, George W. Johnson, N. R. Thompson and Mace Eustis, the present incumbent.

John W. North Esq., came to St. Anthony in 1849, and was the first attorney who settled in the county, and one of the most prominent for several years. He was in 1851, a member of the legislature, was also a member of the republican branch of the convention to form a state constitution in 1857, and a leader in the anti-slavery movement. He was an able lawyer, and was always a dangerous opponent before a jury. Had he chosen to devote himself exclusively to the profession of the law, there is no doubt but he would easily have taken rank with the ablest lawyers in the state. But Mr. North was by nature and education a reformer, and a radical one at that. He had a courage equal to his convictions, and never hesitated to follow them to their logical sequence, irrespective of popular sentiment. He always stood by what he believed to be right, without regard to the cost, and consequently retained the esteem of his friends, and the respect of his enemies.

In 1850, three more attorneys, E. Whitall, W. H. Hubbard and L. Atwater settled in St. Anthony. In 1851, we find in addition D. Secombe, E. L. Hall, James H. Truder, Warren Bristoll, now associate justice of Arizona territory. L. Bostwick arrived in the territory in 1850, and was admitted to the bar of Hennepin county in 1856. Then at various dates from 1851, to 1856, we find in the list of attorneys, the names of W. Dodge, J. L. Monell, H. B. Hancock, R. Nicholas, H. A. Partridge, Geo. A. Nourse, W. W. Winthrop, W. H. Robinson, Geo. E. Day, W. W. Rowley, Geo. W. Prescott, W. D. Washburn, H. L. Munn, C. E. Vanderburgh, F. R. E. Cornell, F. Beebe, W. L. Parsons, D. Morgan, A. M. Blair, Jared Demmon, Dan. M. Demmon, H. Hill, Wm. Lochren, H. D. Beman, J. B. Gillilan, H. W. Cowles, R. L. Joyce, James W. Lawrence, R. J. Baldwin, J. S. Johnson, Geo. W. Woods, ——— Cushman, David Heaton, S. R. M. Mathews, W. W. McNair, E. M. Wilson, and L. M. Stewart. Doubtless there were some others whose names, the writer cannot now recall. Hon. J. B. Gillilan, settled here in 1855, but was not admitted as an attorney until 1860. The limits of this article, only permit a reference to such attorneys as were here previous to 1857, when the state constitution was adopted.

In looking over the above list, one is surprised to see how few are still practitioners at the bar. Many have died, some removed, and some have retired from active practice. A very few are still in practice, and recognized as the "nestor's" of the bar of Hennepin county in 1881.

In this brief review, we think it will be found that the courts and bar of Hennepin county, will compare most favorably, not only with the courts and bar of any other county in the territory of Minnesota, but with that of any county in any western state, while it was a territory. From the ranks of the members of the bar of Hennepin county in territorial times, have been drawn judges of the supreme court of the state, one justice of the supreme court of Arizona, two representatives in congress, a large number of state senators and representatives, and members of the constitutional convention, and many who have filled honorable positions as city officials and on the boards of education. If any one objects that none have obtained a national reputation as lawyers, it must be remembered that no man of ability could come to Minnesota at an early day and confine himself exclusively to the practice of law. For in territorial days the pressure was so great to obtain competent men to fill legislative and other political offices, and for which lawyers were considered most eligible and best fitted, that it was almost impossible for a lawyer, without giving grave offense to his friends and clients, to refuse a nomination. In addition to this is to be considered that legal services were then of small pecuniary value, and the same talent employed in politics or in real estate operations, ordinarily received a much larger remuneration. And hence, while we may reasonably conclude that the territorial bar of this county embraced fully as much talent and legal ability as the average of frontier counties in the west, the reason it has not produced as many distinguished lawyers proportioned to its numbers as some counties in eastern states, is easily accounted for. And, considering the history of the territory and state in its political, educational, religious and material aspects, the early bar of Hennepin county has no occasion to be ashamed of its record in regard thereto, and with the increase of population and lawyers, thus enabling, and indeed compelling attorneys to devote themselves more exclusively to their profession, we may expect from present indications, to find lawyers within the next quarter of a century at the bar of Hennepin county, who will have attained a national reputation.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

CITY WATER WORKS—FIRE DEPARTMENT—POLICE FORCE—CITY MARKET—POST OFFICE.

The city of Minneapolis was incorporated in the spring of 1867, and the next fall the Holly system of water works was introduced, and completed in the spring of 1868. Two Holly pumps were put in, and about a mile of cement pipe was laid, at a cost of about $60,000. The cement pipe was a failure, and in 1870 was replaced by cast-iron pipe. During the latter year, the city purchased of J. B. Bassett the stone saw-mill at the head of the canal, and paid for it $18,000. James Waters, then in charge, erected new pumping machinery with daily pumping capacity of two million gallons, and the Holly pumps were moved into the new quarters. Mr. Stewart was superintendent of the water works under the Holly system until 1870, since when the office has been filled as follows: 1870-74, James Waters; 1874-77, S. Albert; 1877, James Chalmers; 1877-79, J. W. Pomeroy. In 1879, the present superintendent, W. H. Johnson, was elected with J. W. Pomeroy as assistant.

In 1880, the old rotary pumps were removed to make room for a new pump of four million gallons capacity daily, making the present total ca-capacity nine and one-half million gallons per day. There are eighteen and two-thirds miles of main pipe laid.

The water works have proved an ever efficient protection against fire, the pressure being such that a powerful stream may be thrown directly from the hydrants, thus rendering fire engines almost unnecessary, excepting in cases where the fire is remote from hydrants. The quality of the water furnished, is the best and is taken from the bottom of the river, at the head of the canal. The total cost of the water works was, exclusive of interest on bonds, $396,598. The receipts from rents for 1880, exceeded the expenses for maintenance, about $6,000. The motive power for driving the immense pumps, is furnished by two turbine wheels, of forty-eight inches diameter, which, under a head of thirty feet, give one hundred and eighty horse-power each. The pumps in use were made in Minneapolis, and show a high degree of mechanical skill. The water works of Minneapolis will, under the present able management, compare favorably with those of any city of her size in the Union. The business office is in the City Hall; the present officers are: W. H. Johnson, superintendent; F. T. Moody, clerk and Andrew Bergstrom, engineer. January 1st, 1881, the office of assistant superintendent was abolished.

MINNEAPOLIS FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Of the many praiseworthy institutions with which Minneapolis is favored, there is nothing for which her citizens entertain a more profound respect—a respect amounting almost to veneration—than her splendidly equipped and admirably managed fire department.

But a few years have passed since not even a "bucket brigade," stood sentinel between the unprotected city and the all devouring element, and it was not until 1857 that an organization of any kind existed, whose object was protection against accidental fire, or the torch of the incendiary. Even then, its meagre facilities and ill-stored equipage rendered it wholly inadequate to cope successfully with the pitiless dragonade of the fire fiend. To-day it stands without a rival in the great north-west. Thoroughly equipped, ably officered, and with an experienced force, it has become so strongly entrenched in the confidence of the citizens, that the once dreaded fire-alarm now awakens little more than an evanescent curiosity, beyond its immediate location. Its perfect order and discipline, its excellent management, and its freedom from internal strife and jealousies, render it at once the pride and boast of the city, and an enduring monument of renown to its originators.

The first organization was in what is now known as the East Division, formerly St. Anthony. In July, 1857, a meeting of the citizens of St. Anthony was held in Wensinger's old block, corner of Main street and Fourth Avenue north, for the purpose of effecting an organization for protection against fires. Timothy Bohan presided over the meeting, which resulted in the organization of a hook and ladder company, of which Henry Carran was elected foreman. The truck was built in St. Anthony, and the company was ready for duty in October. In November, a fire occurred, which is generally supposed to have been started by some mischievous party to test the utility of the new company. The fire was in an old house on the east side of Main street, used at the time as a stable. The experiment resulted in the destruction of the building, and the cremation of an unfortunate cow, the only occupant.

In 1859 a fire company was organized, with John Dunham as foreman, and an engine—the Minnesota—was ordered from Button and Blake, of New York. The company was an independent one, and furnished its own building, as did also the hook and ladder company.

The same year, the city council purchased two engines, made at St. Anthony—the Cataract and Germania. Of the companies associated with these, James S. Lane was foreman of the Cataract, and Godfrey Boehme of the Germania. Six months after the arrival of the Minnesota, the city accepted the services of the company as a volunteer association, assumed the indebtedness incurred in the purchase of the engine, and provided necessary buildings.

The first chief of the fire department was Jas. S. Lane. No changes of special note occurred until the consolidation with the West Side, as hereafter mentioned.

The first organization on the West Side was called the "Millers' Fire Association," in 1865, and owed its origin to W. M. Brackett, then a young man employed as book-keeper of Eastman, Gibson and Company, proprietors of the Cataract and Union flouring mills, and the North Star woolen mills. It was upon his repeated, and earnest solicitation that the organization was effected, its equipment consisting of a rotary pump in the basement of the Cataract mill, five hundred feet of hose, a hose jumper, spanners, nozzles, etc. A hose company was organized among the mill owners, with Geo. A. Brackett, of the firm of Gibson, Eastman and Company, as foreman. Mr. Brackett was the first chief of the Minneapolis Fire Department.

In the fall of 1867, the Holly system of water-works was introduced, but not completed until the spring of 1868. The formal organization of the fire department was in January, 1868, embracing the following companies: Minneapolis Hose Company No. 1; Mutual Hose Company No. 2; and Minneapolis Hook and Ladder Company No. 1. Its numerical strength was about one hundred and fifty volunteers, with the following official roster; Geo. A. Brackett, chief; R. B. Langdon, first assistant; and Paris Gibson, second assistant. The hose, jumper, etc., of the Millers' Fire Association, was purchased and placed with No. 1. Late in the fore-noon of February 6th, 1868, the efficiency of the new fire department, and the water-works was submitted to trial, at a fire in a dwelling house, corner of High and Minnetonka streets. The department acquitted itself creditably, but the water-works proved inadequate to the occasion, and the fire was extinguished by the use of buckets, axes, etc. The first mains were of sheet iron and cement, and a break prevented the necessary pressure, while the water at best, was thick with dirt. Of course the "claw-pluckers" and wisecracks reiterated their previously expressed belief in the failure of the Holly system. The defective pipe was replaced by iron pipes, the following fall, and were thereafter effective. February 8th, the city council authorized the purchase of six hundred feet of rubber hose, a four-wheeled hose carriage, a hook and ladder truck, four play pipes and twelve axes. Other purchases were made from time to time, though it was long before the department was furnished with a full equipment, or provided with suitable buildings.

On the 10th of September, 1868, the Minneapolis Fireman's Relief Association was organized, the object of which needs no explanation. The association has done noble work, and is in a flourishing condition, "a monument to the sympathy and fraternal feeling, so characteristic of true firemen." The first parade occurred on the 21st of September, when the Minneapolis department joined the St. Anthony department in their annual parade. A notable event in the history of the Minneapolis Fire Department was the Fireman's State Parade, held at this place in 1869, at which time the "Minneapolis Boys" won a reputation for hospitality for which they have ever been held since in the most kindly remembrance. With the consolidation of the cities of St. Anthony and Minneapolis, in 1872, the new charter provided that the city be divided into two fire departments, each side retaining the equipage, buildings, etc., then in their possession, practically leaving them as separate and distinct as though separated by an ocean instead of the river. In September, 1874, the Gamewell fire alarm system was introduced in the west division, and in October, the capacity of the water-works was increased to three and one-half million gallons of water per day.

Horses were purchased or hired, and drivers permanently employed in the several companies, in 1875; also an engineer and fireman of the steamers and a tillerman for the Hook and Ladder truck. The following year the Gamewell fire alarm system was extended to the east division, and the two divisions were furnished telegraphic communication. By a revision of the city charter in April, 1878, the two fire departments were consolidated, and an election of officers held with the following result: Winn, M. Brackett, chief engineer; W. C. Stetson, formerly chief of the east division, first assistant; and C. Fredericks, a charter member of Hook and Ladder company No. 1, and once its foreman, second assistant. The rapid growth of the city, and the corresponding increase in the duties of the fire department, soon became too great for a volunteer organization, and in 1879 they asked to be relieved, and that the city assume the support and maintenance of the department, which was done. The city cannot forget the gratitude due the old volunteer department, nor will its many brave and noble deeds be lost to memory in the no less faithful service of the present department.

On the second day of May, 1878, the Minneapolis fire department was subjected to one of the severest tests in the annals of modern conflagrations—a test far greater than that under which many truly great departments have sunk into obscurity and disgrace; but from which this noble volunteer department, under the able direction of its chief and assistants, emerged with a record of which monarchs might well be proud. A more concise account of this noted disaster will be found in the history of the milling interests in this volume.

The department has seven stations, located as follows: Station A, a double brick house, corner of Second street and Third Avenue north, in which is the office of the chief; station B, corner of Sixth Avenue south and Third street; station C, corner of Second and Bank streets, East Division; station D, corner of Main street and Thirteenth Avenue north, East Division; station E, on Third street, between Nicollet and First Avenue south; station F, on Plymouth Avenue, between First and Second streets; and station G, corner of Washington and Fourteenth Avenues south, a double house—a consolidation of stations G and H, and the finest building in the department. The several stations are furnished with all the necessary appliances for comfort, convenience and prompt, efficient service, a full description of which is only omitted on account of space. The report of Chief Engineer W. M. Brackett for the year ending April 1st, 1881, contains some interesting items illustrative of the labors and efficiency of the department. The report shows 171 fire alarms responded to from January 1st, 1880, to January 1st, 1881. The total losses are estimated at $170,000; total insurance paid, $110,000; total insurance involved, $683,000. The apparatus is two steam fire engines, five four-wheeled hose carriages and one two-wheeled hose cart, two hook and ladder trucks and one chemical hook and ladder truck. The force consists of twenty-two regular and forty-seven call men. In addition to the home work, the steamer City of Minneapolis and hose company No. 1, went to Farmington in November, 1879, under charge of the chief engineer, in answer to a call for assistance, and though the delayed train prevented their reaching the place until the fire was under control, it rendered valuable aid in playing upon the ruins. The same steamer and hose company also rendered material service in St. Paul in March, 1880, under command of Foremen Tireworgy and Henry, working ten hours. The officers of the department are, W. M. Brackett, chief engineer; C. Fredericks, first assistant; Frank C. Stetson, second assistant. Foremen: John Hinton, No. 1; H. Williams, No. 2; C. Henry, No. 3; N. Steffes, No. 4; R. York, No. 5; E. Kingsley, Cataract Engine Company; G. Runge, Hook and Ladder Company No. 1; N. Theilen, Hook and Ladder No. 2; P. Kinney, Hook and Ladder No. 3.

THE POLICE FORCE.

Immediately following the organization of the city government of St. Anthony, in 1855, Benj. I. Brown was elected marshal, and his official bond accepted at a meeting of the council, May 19th, 1855. Twelve years later, the city government of Minneapolis was organized, and H. H. Brackett unanimously elected chief of police, at a meeting of the city council, March 9th, 1867. It is hardly necessary to state that the police force in those days was light, nor were their salaries oppressively great. The marshal and such assistants as emergencies required, constituted the first force at St. Anthony, the chief and four policemen that of Minneapolis.

The organization at present consists of A. S. Munger, chief; A. C. Berry, captain; John West, sergeant; Michael Hoy, detective, and twenty-four patrolmen. The uniform is the regular metropolitan, distinguished by hat or cap, belt and club. The police headquarters consist of a small one-story building on an alley between Washington Avenue and Second street, and are unworthy of the city. The present force is far too light for the duties required, but it is composed of men well adapted to the work, and although numerically weak, is in point of fact one of the strongest, most efficient bodies in the west. Led by a vigilant chief, who is ably supported by an efficient staff and watchful body of patrolmen, the Minneapolis police force has come to be regarded as something for the vicious to shun, and the worthy to rely on for aid and protection. The following from the last annual report of the chief will perhaps express the present character of the body, and the nature and embarrassing features of the work:

"It is very true that depredations and misdemeanors are committed, and the perpetrators too often escape arrest; but that is the fault of the limited force, and not of any officer of the department. This city is widely scattered, containing more than two hundred miles of streets, and the entire police force numbers but twenty-four patrolmen, besides detective, chief, captain and sergeant. Of this immense line of streets and alleys, about fifty miles are within the patrol limits, or less than one-fourth of the whole city, and during the past year there has not been a burglary or theft of any importance within such limits, with but a single exception, that the greater part of the goods have not been secured and returned to the owner, and the thieves arrested.

* * * During the past year the police force has succeeded in breaking up and routing out, one of the worst gangs of organized thieves that ever existed in any city, and the ringleaders are at present in Stillwater, with the balance of the gang scattered far and wide." In the same report the chief enters his protest against the toleration of tramps, and recommends the city council to provide work, as the best known remedy against this all-prevailing nuisance.

CITY MARKET.

The idea of a general market for the city of Minneapolis was conceived and executed by Harlow A. Gale in 1876, the city granting him a franchise for fifteen years. The building is of stone and brick, with asbestine stone trimmings and iron roof. It is located corner of First street and Hennepin Avenue, occupies a space of 80x157 feet, is three-stories high above a basement twelve feet in height, and cost with land, $75,000. In the interior are sixty stalls, where may be found meats, fish, fruits, vegetables, butter, eggs, cheese, groceries, all kinds of farm products, and in fact everything in the line of provisions and supplies. On the walks surrounding the market, which are under cover of an awning projecting from the building, fully fifty gardeners display their products during the vegetable and fruit season. In cold weather the same space is occupied by meats and poultry. The basement is occupied as an eating house, which has a seating capacity of two hundred. On the second floor is a hall which seats 1,500 people. The Woman's Christian Association have their parlor on this floor, and the Y. M. C. A. occupy adjoining rooms as gymnasium and reading room. Mr. Gale has his office at the hall entrance where he superintends this "bee hive" of industry, and conducts his real estate agency.

POST-OFFICES.

The first post-office established at the Falls of St. Anthony was located in a small building belonging to Franklin Steele, in 1848, and Ard Godfrey appointed postmaster. Previous to this the nearest post-offices were at Fort Snelling and St. Paul. Mails were irregularly received, as no carrier was employed during the first year. Captain John Rollins occasionally ran a passenger express wagon to St. Paul, and brought mail to St. Anthony. In 1850, Powers and Willoughby opened regular stage communication between St. Anthony and St. Paul, and for a number of years the mail was carried by stage, until the building of the line of railroad connecting the two cities, in 1862, since when it has been carried by rail. The office was located in several different buildings on the east side, being for a time in the Winslow House, while that building was conducted as a hotel. At the beginning of the war, when the Winslow House was closed, the office was again removed, this time to a wooden structure next to the old Stanchfield block, on Central Avenue between Main and second streets. The more prominent postmasters succeeding Ard Godfrey were Luther Patch, Mr. White, W. W. Wales, and General H. P. Van Cleave, who for a number of years previous, and at the time of the discontinuance of the office, held the position. Messrs. Godfrey, Wales, and Van Cleave are at present, prominent citizens of Minneapolis. Mr. Wales is a member of the firm of Kirkbride, Whitall and Wales, and General Van Cleave is adjutant general of Minnesota.

The post-office on the west side was established in 1851, and located on the corner of First street and First Avenue south, in a small wooden building used as the office of Dr. H. Fletcher, who was the first postmaster. The first quarterly report of the first postmaster is preserved in the vault of the present office and shows that the postage paid on letters sent and received, amounted to $5.97. At that time payment of postage either in advance or upon receipt was optional; at present it is required in advance and the receipts for the same length of time in 1881, from the same sources, amounted to $25,656.48. The postmasters succeeding Dr. Fletcher were Dr. A. E. Ames, prominent in the masonic history of the state, C. Wilcox, S. Hidden, D. Morgan, D. Bassett, W. W. McNair, Cyrus Aldrich, and our present postmaster, Dr. George H. Keith, who has held the office for a longer term than any of his predecessors. The business rapidly increasing the office was frequently removed to larger quarters. It was first moved during Dr. Ames's administration, to Washington Avenue between Fifth and Sixth Avenues south. The quarters soon proving inadequate it was next located on Washington and First Avenues south; thence to Hennepin Avenue, between Washington and Second street.

During W. W. McNair's administration it was moved for the first time into a brick building, occupying the eastern room on the first floor of the Athenaeum building. Col. Cyrus Aldrich, prominent in the early history of the state and representative to congress in 1860-61, succeeded Mr. McNair in 1869 and removed it to 210 Nicollet Avenue. When Col. Aldrich took charge of the office three assistants were required to perform the duties. In the spring of 1870 Dr. George H. Keith, an old settler in Minneapolis, was appointed to supersede Col. Aldrich. When he took charge of the office the working force consisted of only five clerks. The business of the office by this time had increased to such a degree that the room in Center block was found to be too small, and in December, 1873, the City Hall, being just completed, the government leased its present quarters for twenty years and moved in to them.

At this time the east side post-office was merged into the one on the west side. This was effected by means of a petition presented to the post-office department signed by the citizens residing within the delivery of the office discontinued. This is the only instance in the annals of United States postal history, where a post-office has been discontinued under such circumstances. January 1st, 1874, the present carrier system was adopted, requiring the services of eight carriers on both sides of the river. The carrier force has been increased to twelve regulars and two substitutes, who delivered in 1880, 3,611,809 packages of mail of various kinds.

In 1880, the total receipts of the office were $81,383.60, from the sale of stamps, envelopes, postal cards, paper and periodical stamps, postage on unpaid letters, etc.; the total expenses were $18,234.96, and the net income of the office, $63,148.64. In 1870, the entire force of the office including postmaster was six; at present it numbers thirty-five, viz: the postmaster, the deputy postmaster, T. E. Hughes; the superintendent of carriers, A. A. Keith; the superintendent of mailing department, R. L. Woodworth; one special agent, one local agent, fourteen clerks, and the carriers. The office under the present administration is the pride of Minneapolis, and a monument to the executive ability of George H. Keith and his efficient corps of assistants.

CHAPTER LXXV.

BUSINESS OF THE CITY—CITY PROPERTY—PUBLIC AND PRIVATE BUILDINGS.

Before turning the leaf on the city of Minneapolis a brief resume of its interests and industries will be given. When railroad communication was deficient, Minneapolis contested the point of the head of navigation with a zealous neighbor, because ready means of communication is a vital point to a city claiming the position of a distributing point or centre of trade, while it is nearly as essential to a manufacturing centre. When the issue of the struggle was reached and Minneapolis was compelled to occupy a secondary place so far as river transportation was concerned, it seemed that her prestige as a centre of interior trade was forever decided. During the years intervening between the settlement of that controversy and the present time, however, such improved facilities of railroad transportation have grown with the country, that the question is again an open one whether Minneapolis shall not become the commercial centre of the north-west, in addition to her acknowledged supremacy as a manufacturing centre. The growth of cities and their control of trade are never accidental, nor always due to natural situation, though that must always be an important factor in the product obtained. At one time in the early history of America, New York city was over-shadowed by Newport, Rhode Island, and letters from England were addressed to "New York near Newport." The superiority of the harbor at Newport and many natural advantages, conspired to make it the chief city of the continent. In that case the cupidity of citizens was the cause of the greater growth of the rival city. Other instances of like character might be given. Capital and the disposition to employ it in business enterprises, must in Minneapolis be the determining factors. The problem of transportation is solved by the construction of a net-work of railroads centering at this point, and a survey of the business of the city will show to what extent the facilities are already utilized; at the same time it must be admitted that importation of articles which should be manufactured here, has increased in a four-fold ratio to the growth of manufacturing capacity. The manufacture of lumber and flour will not be included in this resume of business, except in the general summary.

Next to flour and lumber in importance, are the the manufactories of iron, carriages and wagons. Seventy-six establishments are employed in these branches of industry, with a total capital of $811,450, and a product of manufactures amounting $1,646,319 during the past year, employing 1210 men, paying out $537,216 in wages. Prominent among these are the North Star, Minneapolis, Variety and Union, which companies are employed in constructing machinery adapted to the extensive mills of various kinds in the city and north-west. The manufacture of farm machinery is extensively carried on, and the wholesale trade in this department is large and increasing. The Minneapolis Harvester Works is the most extensive establishment of this kind in the city, furnishing employment to a large number of men. An account of this institution is given under the manufactories of the city. Two paper mills are in operation, employing $310,000 capital and seventy-eight men, paying annually in wages $34,000; value of paper product $208,900. Planing mills, sash, door and moulding factories, twelve in all, employ $247,150 capital, 151 men and pay annually in wages $115,454; product $605,770. Thirty-four boot and shoe factories employ $152,900 capital, 151 men, and pay annually $60,900 in wages; product $235,660. Eleven brick yards employ $128,500 capital, 120 men and pay annually $42,350 in wages; product $93,700. Sixteen printing and publishing establishments employ $151,500 capital, 342 men, paying $110,100 annually in wages; product $370,400. Twenty-five slaughtering establishments employ $65,500 capital, 101 men, paying $43,181 annually in wages; product $553,429. Stone quarries, ten in number, employ $34,500 capital, 113 men, paying $38,000 annually in wages; product $284,000.

The following statistics taken from the annual report of the board of trade for 1880, gives another exhibit of the product of miscellaneous manufacturing: Iron works and farm machinery, carriages and wagons, $3,260,000; furniture and kindred goods, $520,000; builders' goods of all classes, $1,173,000; woolen, cotton and knit goods, $510,000; clothing and furnishing goods, $725,000; boots, shoes, harnesses and trunks, $710,000; crackers, candies and cigars, $121,000; linseed and other oils and chemicals, $311,000; cooperage of all kinds, $851,000; soap and fertilizers, $410,000; brown paper, etc., $287,000; brewers and vinegar rectifiers, $290,000; brick, and manufactured stone, $275,000; printers and book binders, $320,000; total $10,333,000, exclusive of flour and lumber.

Items in regard to the wholesale trade have already been embodied in chapter sixty-six. The growth of this branch of trade has been remarkable, as will be seen from the following comparative statement, for the last five years: In 1876 it amounted to $5,373,651; in 1877, to $8,147,275; in 1878, to $10,400,250; in 1879, to $11,001,700; in 1880, to $21,209,200; showing that the trade has more than quadrupled during that time. Five important wholesale and retail hardware stores do each an extensive business, viz.: H. D. Wood and Co.; Janney, Brooks and Eastman; A. B. Miller; Smith and Day, 529 Washington Avenue south; Smith and Scribner, 523 Washington Avenue south. Four wholesale and retail grocers do business aggregating nearly four millions. Seven wholesale wine and liquor dealers; seventeen queensware, drug and oil dealers; ten dry goods, clothing, hats and caps; seven cracker and confectionery; four agricultural implements; Ten furniture and carpets; twenty-six produce commission; sundry, boots, shoes, leather and hides; also paper and stationery. These comprise the great bulk of the wholesale trade of Minneapolis, aside from flour and lumber.

The retail trade embraces too numerous a list for special mention. A few of the most important branches are given. Twenty-eight dealers represent the retail trade in boots and shoes, beside the forty boot and shoe makers; twenty-six, cigars and tobacco; seventeen, clothing; twenty-eight, confectionery and fruits; twenty-six druggists; thirty-two, dry goods; five fancy goods only; eleven, furniture; fifteen, gents' furnishing goods; one hundred and eighteen, groceries; eleven, hardware; forty-two, meat markets; twenty-one, millinery; twenty-five, watch-makers and jewelers; fourteen, wood and coal; other establishments in proportion. The aggregate business of the city, wholesale and retail, including flour and lumber makes a grand total of over $50,000,000. Places of amusement are the Academy of Music, Pence Opera House, and two others of inferior grade; billiard saloons, twenty; drinking saloons, one hundred and sixty-four; boarding-houses, fifty-one; hotels, forty-six; restaurants, twenty-three; baths, eight; barbers, thirty-six; city hacks, ten; circulating libraries, two.

The professions are represented by one hundred lawyers, eighty-four physicians, twenty-two dentists, six civil engineers, fourteen music teachers, and clergy as shown under churches. Real estate dealers are fifty-four, loan agents seventeen, insurance agents twenty-six, representing one hundred and twenty-seven companies. Photographers are thirteen in number; taxidermists, three; florists, seven; carvers two; carpenters, builders and contractors, forty-two.

Cooperage is quite an important industry, stimulated by the flouring business, and is carried on by several large firms, with modern machinery.

The city property consisting of bridges, city hall, city prison, real estate, fire department property; gas fixtures, sewers, water-works, pumps, horses, funds invested, office furniture, etc., is $1,290,639.68, besides the school buildings and property not included. The bonded debt of the city is $1,101,000; bonded school debt not included, $96,500. The assessed value (about two-thirds) of real and personal property in 1880, was $28,013,315. The rate of tax levy for 1879-80, was 16.1 mills.

Prominent buildings; the city hall located on an angular piece of ground at the junction of Nicollet and Hennepin, is the property of the city. The building is four-stories high with a basement; built of the blue limestone, quarried within the city limits. A large portion of the building not required for city purposes is occupied by the post-office, Tribune, Pioneer Press and others by means of which it proves a valuable investment to the city.

Other buildings, the property of the city, are not worthy of mention, as ornamental structures and some, especially the county buildings, are inadequate to the large and increasing demands of business. The fire stations, however, seven in number, located in different parts of the city are of handsome design. Station "G" corner of Washington Avenue and Thirteenth Avenue south, recently completed, cost with the lot $8,475.92. "This building is, without doubt, one of the most convenient and complete fire stations in the north-west, and will compare favorably with any in the United States."

The city market mentioned elsewhere, is located on Bridge square. It was built in 1876, by the present proprietor Harlow A. Gale, under a special contract with the city by virtue of which he controls and receives the rents during a term of years, for booths, stalls, and locations on the streets and side walks surrounding the building. Here hucksters congregate, affording a great convenience to citizens in the purchase of supplies.

Many business blocks are of such elegant and extensive proportions as to attract the notice of visitors, and are worthy of special mention. It will be possible, however, to mention only a few of the most prominent.

The Academy of Music, located on Hennepin Avenue, corner of Washington, is a brick structure of four stories, with a mansard roof, and is an elegant block.

The Andrews block, built of brick, four stories, is a striking building, well adapted to the wholesale trade by which it is occupied.

The Casey block is a magnificent building with forty-four feet front on Nicollet Avenue, in depth 112 feet. It is four stories in height, built of brick, faced with Lemont limestone.

The Eastman block, four stories high, with a front of Ohio sandstone, the Day block, of pressed brick on Washington Avenue, the Domestic block of Ohio sandstone on Nicollet Avenue, the Johnson block, corner of Washington and Hennepin Avenues, and many other fine business structures are features of the city.

Hotels. Many of the hotels deserve mention among the fine buildings of the city. The following in regard to them is of interest: The first hotel in this city was, as has been previously stated, the St. Charles, built in St. Anthony, in 1850, and kept by Anson Northrup. The Winslow House, in which many thousand dollars were invested, was at one time the leading hotel of the north-west, and a popular resort for southern people previous to the war. After its southern patronage ceased, it continued for a time at a loss, but was subsequently closed, to be opened no more as a hotel. The building was used as a tenement for a time and finally became the property of Macalester College, and is now occupied by that institution. The first hotel on the west side was erected by Anson Northrup, near the falls, in 1853, known as the Minneapolis House. The Nicollet House was built in 1857, by Eustis and Nudd. It was begun in May of that year, and when completed, had a frontage of 110 feet on Hennepin, and 100 feet on Washington Avenue, containing about ninety guest rooms, commodious dining room, office and parlors. The cost of the building was $80,000. The house was under the management of Eustis and Nudd until 1861, when the latter sold his interest to Eustis, who leased the house, the same year, to I. P. Hill. From that time until 1866 it was conducted by various parties. In that year, F. S. Gilson and Company purchased it, for $10,000. This firm managed the house until 1870, when, their increasing trade demanding more room, they built an addition, making the house its present size, and giving one hundred and twenty-five rooms. The new part was opened in July, 1871. Two years later, the house was leased to McKibben and Vosburg, and in 1878 Mr. Gilson again took it, and continued until May, 1880, when it was leased to John T. West. In 1879 Mr. Gilson made some important changes, building a new office and rotunda, with entrances on Washington Avenue. This house has been, since its first opening, the leading hotel of the city.

Among the remaining forty-five hotels in Minneapolis, seven of them rank high as houses of the second class: The Clark, Merchants, Windsor, National, St. James, Bellevue and Pauly. The others are of the various grades. In addition to the hotels, there are a number of public and private boarding houses, that are largely patronized by citizens and those sojourning temporarily.

In this connection, the places of amusement and their history, with the fine buildings occupied by them is introduced.

Previous to the erection of Harrison's Hall, about 1860, the public hall of Minneapolis known as Boardman's Hall, was located on the corner of Washington and Second Avenues south. This building is now the First National Hotel. Harrison's Hall, with seating capacity of about four or five hundred was used for amusements until 1866, when J. W. Pence, seeing the need of an opera house, built and furnished Pence Opera House. It is located on the corner of Hennepin Avenue and Second street, and when erected had a seating capacity of seven hundred. The building is of brick, three stories high and basement. The first floor is used for stores, the second floor is divided into offices, and on the third floor is the hall. During the summer of 1879, the rear of the floor of the auditorium was raised, giving it an incline towards the stage, the seating capacity increased from seven to nine hundred, and folding opera chairs put in. It was opened October 21, 1879, with a stock company under management of John Murray, who was followed in the season of 1880 by the Bryton and Carver stock company and called the "Criterion Theatre." Bryton and Carver closed before the season was over. Miss Phesa McAllister opened January 24th, 1881, with a full stock company of thirty people and is enjoying merited success.

Joseph Hodges, who came from Providence, Rhode Island, about 1870, concluded that amusement-going Minneapolisians would support a larger and finer opera house than the city then possessed, and in 1870-'71, erected the Academy of Music on the corner of Hennepin and Washington Avenues. The building is 80x113 feet, four stories in height, with a truss roof. The first floor is occupied by stores, the second floor is divided into offices, and on the third and fourth is the opera hall. The auditorium seats 1,400 persons, 591 in the gallery and 806 below. Over 2,000 persons have congregated in the hall on several occasions. The structure and ground was purchased in May, 1873, by the Herriek Bros. and Thomas Lowry. The present owners are D. Morrison, Herriek Bros., and the estate of C. G. Goodrich. It is valued at $150,000, and is the finest structure of the kind north-west of Chicago. Since the ownership of Mr. Hodges, the Academy of Music has been under the management of W. W. and E. W. Herriek.

The University, on University Avenue, is a stately building, occupying high ground, and visible from nearly all parts of the city. It is constructed from native limestone and occupies spacious grounds a little removed from the noise and bustle of the business portion of the city, but convenient of access. The high school building with its towers, is another noticeable feature, built of limestone and Kasota sandstone, situated in the heart of the city.

Among the many private residences on which wealth and taste have been lavished to such an extent as to invest them with general interest to citizens, we can here mention but few. The Judd residence, situated on Sixth Avenue south and Fifth street, is the most showy residence in the city. The grounds occupy the entire block, and are adorned with beautiful shade trees and landscape gardening. The house is of cream-colored brick, and is princely in its proportions and architecture.

The residence of Jesse G. Jones, corner of First Avenue south and Tenth street, is a model of fine taste and beautiful architecture. The houses of C. H. Pettit, corner of Second Avenue south and Tenth street, and Thomas Lowry, city limits, are of cream-colored brick, and among the finest of the city.

Hon. A. C. Rand has a stately mansion, corner of Seventh street and Sixth Avenue south, built of asbestine. L. Christian's residence, corner of Fifth Avenue south and Eighth street, that of Hon. George A. Pillsbury, corner of Tenth street and Third Avenue south, and that of Hon. J. S. Pillsbury, corner of Tenth Avenue and Fifth street south-east, are palatial establishments.

It is a matter of regret that limited space prevents the acknowledgement of the debt due from the citizens at large, to the numerous other wealthy gentlemen who have beautified the city by expending large sums in the construction of fine residences and laying out ornamental grounds.

Of banks, churches, newspapers and societies such extended notice has already been given, as to leave little of fresh matter for this summary. Of banks, more are needed; the board of trade report placed the deficiency of banking capital, that would be profitably employed, if immediately invested here, at $1,000,000 or more. Of churches, the number and seating capacity appears large, though new structures are now building. Of newspapers, there are more than twenty. The professions are largely and ably represented; room, however, is always found on the "top shelf" for new-comers qualified to assume the position.

CHAPTER LXXVI.

BIOGRAPHICAL. A AND B.

Judge Isaac Atwater. In few men are more rare combinations of talent required, than in pioneers of new countries: invincible courage, enterprise tempered by prudence; promptness and decision united with calm reflection; sagacity combined with enthusiasm, are indispensable requisites. Trades, professions, creeds, in short all that has a tendency to make a successful commonwealth must be represented as near the beginning as possible. Among those who planted the foundation for the future city of Minneapolis, and assisted in laying the corner stone of the state of Minnesota, none contributed more zealously than Judge Isaac Atwater, who arrived at St. Anthony Falls, in 1850. He is a native of Homer, Cortland county, New York, where he lived and worked on the farm until he was sixteen years of age, which life he then abandoned for the necessary preparation incident to a profession. He received a thorough classical education, and graduated at Yale college, in 1844, and two years subsequently in like manner graduated at Yale law school. Promptly upon being admitted to the bar he commenced a successful practice of law in New York city, which was continued until his removal to St. Anthony, where immediately upon his arrival, he entered into partnership with Hon. John W. North, and continued the practice of his profession in the district and supreme courts of the Territory. A few months subsequently to his arrival, he was appointed one of the regents of the state university of Minnesota, and, on the organization of the board, was made secretary, which responsible position he held for nine years, performing the duties in the most satisfactory manner, and this, too, without compensation. It is proper to remark that had it not been for the judicious course pursued by Judge Atwater and his colleagues in these early days, none of whom ever received any compensation for their services, but on the other hand contributed large sums of money from their own pockets in the interest of the institution, there is no probability that the stately edifice which we all are so proud of would have been built at all, or at least not in this neighborhood. To the first board of regents are the citizens indebted for the inauguration of the the University of Minnesota, at the Falls of St. Anthony. Several liberal citizens, then residents on both banks of the Mississippi, such as Calvin A. Tuttle, Esqr., also subscribed and paid, large subscriptions to enable the regents to commence the erection of suitable preparatory buildings for the use of the university. In 1851, upon the advent of the St. Anthony Express, Judge Atwater, in addition to his numerous other duties, became editor-in-chief of that paper, and conducted the editorial columns with great ability until his elevation to the supreme bench upon the organization of the state government in 1857. His vigorous and able pen soon gave this paper, then published on the extreme frontier, a national reputation, and it was the source of the introduction of thousands and thousands of emigrants into the territory as permanent settlers.

In 1853 he received the suffrages of the citizens of Hennepin county for district attorney. This office, in a new country, where the inhabitants are concentrated from the four quarters of the globe, is attended with difficulties which are unknown in old settled communities. In 1857 he was elected one of the associate justices of the supreme court. His elevation to a seat on the supreme bench necessarily caused him to vacate the editorial chair of the St. Anthony Express, but his habits of industry were continued in frequent contributions of articles of rare merit, which appeared in the leading periodicals of the day. In 1864 he resigned the office of supreme judge, in consequence of a determination to visit the Pacific States for the purpose of resuming the practice of law. He opened an office in Carson City, Nevada, extending his practice to Virginia City, in that state. He remained three years on the Pacific slope, when he returned to Minneapolis, and has since that time continued the practice of his profession, occupying at the same time, for years, a seat in the city council, a portion of which time he was president of the board of aldermen. For eight years he was a member of the board of education, an important trust for which his knowledge, habits, and interest in schools peculiarly fitted him. The three last years of his service with the board, he was president of that body. It will be seen that Judge Atwater has bestowed a good deal of his valuable time to municipal as well as educational purposes, and to his influence and services are the citizens largely indebted for the healthy and prosperous condition of the matters closely connected with the city affairs, as well as the excellent system of schools which abounds in Minneapolis. He is also a valuable member of the board of trade, which in a measure, shapes the future destinies of the city. Judge Atwater belongs to the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which he has occupied numerous positions and trusts in the interest of Christianity, and is always ready to bestow aid and assist in the elevation of mankind.

In 1839, Judge Atwater was married to Miss Pernelia A. Sanborn, a lady who is universally respected by a large circle of acquaintances. Her beautiful home is surrounded with the choicest floral gifts, the fruits of her handiwork. She takes much interest in the propagation of plants, flowers and vines, which make our homes cheerful and happy. Her good works in these things were held in such high estimation by the State Horticultural Society, that she was unanimously elected an honorary member of that society. The Judge and Mrs. Atwater have had three children. Cora, the eldest, a bright little girl, died in 1852, aged fifteen months. L. Isabel, the second daughter, is the wife of Col. A. C. Reid, of San Francisco, California. The youngest, John B., is also a graduate of Yale College, has chosen the same profession as his father, and is the junior member of the firm of Atwater and Atwater, attorneys at law.

Alfred Elisha Ames, deceased. As a representative of the pioneer settlers of Minnesota none are more deserving of a bright record, than Alfred Elisha Ames, whose life was a great success. He was a native of Colechester, Vermont, where he was born December 13th, 1811. He attended the common schools a few months of each year, working on a farm the balance of the time, until he was seventeen years of age. Under the influence of his honest, industrious parents, his mind was fitted to look beyond his immediate surroundings, and win his way to an honored and useful career. In 1832 he went to Painesville, Ohio, where he attended school during the winter, working for his board with a doctor. He became interested in medicine, reading when opportunity was afforded. He engaged in farming and brickmaking for some time, and in 1836 he, with his newly wedded wife, emigrated to Boone county, Illinois, where his father, with family had preceded him. In 1837 his father died, and all depended upon his exertions for the support of his wife, also his widowed mother and her family. In November, 1838, taking a pack on his back, he started by way of an Indian trail to Vandalia, then the seat of government. Through the kind efforts of Hon. Stephen A. Douglass, he obtained employment as deputy of the secretary of state and private secretary to Gov. Carlin. In 1840 Mr. Ames attended medical lectures at Rush Medical College, Chicago, under Professor Daniel Brainerd; he afterward worked on his farm reading medicine nights; later with Dr. R. S. In 1816, one year before the birth of Pierre, hostilities arose between the Hudson Bay Company, the old company established in 1670, under a grant by Charles II, of England, to Prince Rupert and others, and the North-western Company. The North-western Company, whose head-quarters were Canada, traded by the way of the lakes, and had virtually pre-empted this territory before the Selkirk colony arrived and did not recognize their claim as a part of the Hudson Bay Company's territory, as this company had never before extended their lines so far south. The Hudson Bay Company transported goods by way of Hudson Bay. After the establishment of the Red River settlement in 1812, petty strife began, which in 1816, culminated in open hostilities. Lord Selkirk had demanded troops from the Governor General for the protection of his colony without avail, but instead, was enjoined against repetition of hostilities. In spite of this injunction some more blood was shed, but at last, as neither party received the support of the government, an amalgamation took place, and the united company controlled the country. In consequence of these hostilities, the little colony of Red River was greatly weakened by emigration to the territory of the United States and Canada.

Pierre Bottineau's father was commanded by the North-western Company to take part in the struggle but he absented himself on one of his hunting expeditions. On his return he was imprisoned, but owing to his influence with the tribe from which he had taken his wife, he was soon released, as worse troubles were liable to arise.

Amid these bustling scenes, in a wild country, among Indians, and half-breeds more dangerous than the Indians themselves, Pierre Bottineau was born. He was early trained by his father for the hunt. He possessed a strong frame and rugged constitution, and became a skillful horseman, and a sure marksman with a rifle, learning, as well as inheriting these qualities from his father, who was unsurpassed in the chase. His father died when he was fourteen years of age, and LeCompte, a famous guide, but lame in consequence of an injury, pleased with the early accomplishments and promise of the boy, took him to live with him, promising to instruct him in the mysteries of his art. LeCompte was at this time the only man conversant with the country, and familiar with the duties of a guide. He held out brilliant prospects of high wages, ending in a fortune, especially because he needed the sure foot, strong arm and quick eye of this young half-breed. During the years 1832-3 Pierre made a few short trips in company with LeCompte, carrying messages between trading posts, but his first long trip was in 1834, at the age of seventeen. LeCompte was then employed by the Hudson Bay Company to carry messages and the mail from Fort Garry to Fort Snelling, and Pierre accompanied him. They started the first of November and reached their destination December 27th. Communication was difficult and expensive, and sometimes not undertaken oftener than once a year. They went down on the east bank of the Red River, and after eight days reached Red Lake river, which it was necessary for them to cross, though now very high and full of drifting ice. A feeble old man named Alard, went with them, and a pony with a Red River cart carried the mail, baggage and provisions. A raft was quickly built and the cart and its contents were safely transferred to the other side by Pierre and Alard. They next returned for LeCompte and the pony, the current carrying them down some distance at each crossing. On attempting to cross again, with all hands and the pony, their clumsy raft foundered on a stump, and was soon piled with ice so that the upper end was submerged, and the lower end stuck up at a sharp angle. The situation was critical and promised at the best, a cold bath to all.

Here Pierre proved himself equal to the emergency, for cutting loose a few pieces of timber he secured them together by a cord made of buffalo hide, and making his two companions straddle the logs, since neither could swim, he took the chances of keeping on the little raft and poling it to shore. It floated, however, much farther, and struck a bend in the river that was frozen over, in consequence of there being less current. Here he was obliged to jump on the ice, after securing a long cord to the raft, one end of which he held in his hand. The ice would not hold the weight of a man, and Pierre went in, all over, in very deep water, but holding fast to the rope. When he came up, he swam, breaking the ice before him, to the shore, and hauled his companions after him. They were fortunate in having dry suits at the cart, and soon were all right in dry clothing. The pony was rescued, and they started again. After traveling four days they reached the Wild Rice river, and crossed the ice and encamped near its bank. By some means, here, the pony who had escaped narrowly one danger of drowning, got into this stream in the night and was drowned. In this dilemma it was decided, as Alard could not travel, to leave him in charge of the cart and stuff while Le Compte and Pierre went on to Lac Traverse, a trading post of the American Fur Company, in charge of Mr. Moore. The journey, it was thought, would take four days. Pierre was loaded with bedding and provisions supposed to be sufficient for Le Compte and himself for the four days' journey, and they set out. The lameness of Le Compte and the burden of Pierre rendered traveling slow, but it proved that the estimated distance of fifty or sixty miles, increased every day they traveled. Le Compte seemed not to be familiar with the country and arriving at Goose river he called it the Cheyenne and the Elm he supposed the Wild Rice. They traveled thus for several days until their provisions were gone, hoping to reach the Bois des Sioux, where Le Compte declared he should recognize the country. On the eighth day they reached this river, having been already four days without food, and found a fresh Indian trail which they followed to the camp. It proved to be the camp of a party of Sioux numbering ten men with five tepees. The strangers were kindly received and their hunger appeased by a repast of otter and skunk meat. The next day they reached the trading post and obtaining a horse and man returned for Alard and their stuff. The old man's joy cannot be described, as the twentieth day after their departure he saw them returning. He had improvised a sled and loaded it with blankets and provisions, determined to start the next day, dragging his sled, trusting to a good fortune to take him to some habitation. After staying a few days at the post, Le Compte bought a horse of Mr. Moore and they proceeded to the trading post of Mr. Renville at Lac qui Parle and from this point they set out for Traverse des Sioux, another trading post distant four days journey. The post was in charge of Mr. Louis Le Blanc. Alard was left at Lac Traverse on account of the depth of snow and the difficulty of traveling. Trouble arose again in attempting to find Traverse des Sioux and the two companions were near starving, as their supplies had given out; when, fortunately, a coon was killed and their hunger appeased. After traveling in a circuitous route for several days in search of the trading post, Pierre insisted upon taking a direct course for Fort Snelling or as near direct as the Minnesota river would conduct them, disregarding Traverse des Sioux altogether. It is a difficult matter to divert a guide from an old route but at last the point was conceded and they set out. On the following day they came on an Indian camp and were received in a friendly manner and directed on their way. It appeared that the guide was mistaken in reference to their location and they soon reached Traverse des Sioux, and without further accident arrived at Fort Snelling, December 28th, 1834.

Among those whom Pierre met at the Fort at this time he mentions Mr. N. W. Kittson. After spending a short time visiting friends and relations who had formerly lived at Red River, he returned and for two years spent his time trapping in the winter and hunting buffaloes during the summer. Two hunts were usually made each year, one in the early summer and one later, about fall.

The outfit for these hunts was as follows: each hunter was supplied with a good hunting horse, gun and ammunition, and with two or three ponies, drawing each a Red River cart. The latter were used to carry their families and baggage, as well as to transport the results of the chase. Frequently these hunting parties would number several hundred hunters, besides their families.

After reaching the hunting grounds, each found occupation in killing the buffaloes, dressing, drying, cooking and making pemmican. Pemmican was an important article of food and merchandise with the Hudson Bay Company in furnishing supplies to their employees, and still continues to be used. It was made in the following manner. The lean buffalo meat was cut into thin strips, and a skillful woman would cut these strips round and round, making them quite long. These were spread in the sun during the day, and gathered at night in order to protect them from rain or dew until they became as dry as a bone. They were then placed over the fire to cook. After this the meat was beaten in a buffalo hide until completely pulverized, when it was mixed with melted fat and packed in skins for market. The lean and fat of two animals is condensed in one sack of pemmican. No salt or seasoning was used in its preparation, but properly prepared it would never spoil. Besides the process had driven out the water and so reduced the bulk that a very little would satisfy hunger and furnish food in the most condensed form for long journeys. When the carts were loaded with pemmican and hides the party returned from the hunt. Encounters with hostile Indians, and accidents frequently occurred which caused much danger and risk.

During the summer of 1835 Pierre made a trip to Hudson Bay in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company, and again the next summer a second trip. It will give some idea of the hardships to which voyageurs were subject if we state here the tests to which they were subjected before they were employed. A day and place was set for those who desired employment, to exhibit their powers of endurance. The load of a voyageur, two packages weighing about one hundred pounds each, was ready and the man who could carry the load to a certain goal and return without resting, in the quickest time, was counted the best man, and from those most successful the employees were chosen. The Hudson Bay Company were haughty and overbearing to the natives and half-breeds, and treated them as "comme les betes," while the policy of the American Fur Company was much more liberal. This led many to transfer their trade to the American company.

December 1st, 1836, Pierre Bottineau married Genevieve Larance, daughter of John Baptiste Larance, a farmer of the Red River settlement.

A few months after, he undertook the memorable journey across the plains, as guide for Martin McLeod, and two companions, Parys and Hayes, from LaFourch, Red River colony, Territory of Hudson Bay, to Fort Snelling. The time estimated for the journey was twenty-five days; of this, the journey to Lac Traverse was estimated at fifteen days, and the remainder of the journey ten days. The time consumed was, however, fifty days, and two of the party, Messrs. Parys and Hayes, perished by the way. The indomitable hardihood of Pierre Bottineau, alone, brought Mr. McLeod and himself through. They started with a dog team, moccasins and snow-shoes. The deep snow and the inexperience of the party retarded their progress.

They so frequently required their snow-shoes or moccasins loosened or tightened that the patience of Bottineau was taxed to its utmost, and short days' journeys were accomplished. This was, however, only a small matter compared with the trouble that followed. Blizzards, cold, and want of food finally added to their miseries, until Hayes was lost in a storm and never seen again, and Parys, though found, was in such a frozen condition as to compel him to remain in a hut, carefully built and provided for his comfort, until horses could be sent for him from Lac Traverse. When the relief party arrived they found proof that death had ended his sufferings soon after their departure. Mr. Parys was a Polish gentleman who had served under Remarino, and left his country after the fall of Warsaw to avoid the fury of the Czar Nicholas I. Mr. Bottineau and the surviving traveler, Hon. Martin McLeod, arrived in safety at Fort Snelling, April 16th, 1837. May 4th, Bottineau started on his return on horseback, took a traveler at Lac Traverse, and reached the Red River June 5th. Spent the summer and winter following, in the usual way, hunting and trapping. May, 1838, he undertook his next trip across the plains as guide for a large party, consisting of forty families, Swiss, French, and Scotch. This trip was accomplished without any remarkable incident, except that the Indians along their route became somewhat troublesome, and it was necessary to court their good will by distributing tobacco and flour among them in passing their villages. This was especially true because of the hostility of the Sioux toward the Chippewas, and the half-breeds of the north were associated with the Chippewas. Four of these Sioux villages were passed at Lac Traverse, numbering eighty or ninety braves; two at Big Stone lake, numbering three hundred; two at Lac qui Parle, two hundred; one at Blue Earth, seventy; one at Redwood, one hundred; one at Traverse des Sioux, one hundred and fifty; one at Belle Plaine, fifty; one at Little Rapids, one hundred; two at Shakopee, three hundred. These fifteen hundred warriors were often on the war path. At Minnehaha, Lake Calhoun and Pig's Eye there were five or six hundred more. Some of them, whose villages were not in their path, might, notwithstanding, be met on the plains. Owing to some accidents to their carts and one person, it was determined to send a messenger ahead to obtain from General H. H. Sibley his barge to transport the party from Traverse des Sioux. On arrival at this point the boat was found in readiness, and the party were successfully landed at Fort Snelling, though the time occupied from Traverse des Sioux was fourteen days, owing to low water.

At this point in his history Mr. Bottineau stops to pay a tribute to the kindness of Gen. Sibley, to whom he was frequently indebted for courteous and generous acts. He always extended this kindness to poor or rich, white man, Indian, or half breed. The Sioux held him in the highest regard and called him the "Great Medicine Man." He smoked a red pipe with a long stem and often hunted with the Indians. On one occasion after hunting all day unsuccessfully, while smoking around the camp fire, he cried out "Well, we will kill a bear to-morrow!" Sure enough the next day's hunt brought in the bear and forever established the Indians' faith in Gen. Sibley. Bottineau brought down twenty head of cattle from the Red River settlement as well as some other merchandise. He sold on his arrival, cows at $50 to $75, oxen at $150 to $200 per pair, butter at fifty cents per pound.

October, 1838, he engaged to guide a small party of men to Red River and remained there until 1840. June 1st, 1840, he crossed the plains once more with a large party consisting of twenty families, and brought his own family along to settle in this country. On this journey he fell in with the old guide Le Compte and a party conveying a Mr. Simpson to Fort Snelling. Mr. Simpson was a son of Sir George Simpson of England, who had been making an expedition in aid of science and was now on his return, bound for England. Simpson showed signs of insanity at this meeting but the parties diverged, intending to take different routes. On the next day Bottineau was overtaken by two men riding at full speed after him, who requested him to come to the aid of the other party as Mr. Simpson, in a fit of insanity had killed two of the party, one of whom was Le Compte himself. The relief party found that he had added his own death to that of his comrades by blowing out his brains. After disposing as well as could be done of the bodies of the slain, Mr. Bottineau joined the remainder of the party with his own and proceeded, arriving at the Fort in July. Here he found great changes, for the officers of the Fort had driven away Perry and Gervais and others; only a few remained and they were on the point of going, having received notification to that effect from the Fort. Here, for the first time Bottineau met Franklin Steele. Bottineau went on to Saint Paul with his family and made a claim there in 1840, between Gervais and Clewette, camping on the bluff opposite the site of the old National hotel. The claim ran as follows: Commencing at a point, now the foot of Jackson street, running down the river eighty rods, thence at right angles to the river one mile, embracing a strip eighty rods wide running back to Clewette's claim. Not having money to invest in permanent improvements, he pitched a skin tent (lodge) on the bluff and lived there all summer. During the summer he was employed by Mr. Aiken, an old agent of the American Fur Company, with others to transport freight. In the fall he was able to build a house and make some improvements on his claim. In the spring of 1841 he put twenty acres in crops. From this time he was employed at various things but largely for the American Fur Company, until the spring of 1845. During this time he made one more trip to the Red River. In the summer of 1845 he moved to the falls of St. Anthony and became identified with the interests of the place until 1854, when he removed to Bottineau Prairie in Maple Grove. During the years 1845 and '46 he made two more journeys to the Red River settlement.

In 1851, Mr. Bottineau acted as guide to Gov.

Ramsey, and the commissioners appointed by the government to negotiate a treaty with the Pembina Indians. The journey was made with a military escort. After holding a council with the Indians at Pembina, and concluding the treaty, the commissioners and Gov. Ramsey expressed a wish to visit Fort Garry, and it was determined to extend the trip accordingly into the British dominion. In 1853 he piloted Gov. Stevens, of Washington Territory on the Northern Pacific railroad exploration, going west to the Rocky Mountains and returning by the Missouri river to St. Louis.

In the fall of 1853, Mr. Bottineau, made a hunting excursion, acting as guide for a party of English lords and bankers. During the winter of 1854-55, he went with Captain Carney to Mille Lac with a military escort to arrest two Indian murderers. In 1856 he made an expedition with Colonel Smith, to explore the northern country for a suitable point to locate a military post. In 1858, after the report of Colonel Smith's expedition, further exploration was determined on by the general government with reference to the establishment of the post in question. Mr. Bottineau accompanied Colonel White and a captain in the regular army who were charged with the enterprise. This expedition determined the site and location the present Fort Merceronbie at a point then known as Graham's Point. In the winter of '56 and '57, he, with others, located the town site of Breckenridge, and during the following summer he located a town site on his own account at the mouth of Cheyenne river. In 1859, he went with Skinner, the geologist, to locate salt springs for the state. In June, 1860, he accompanied a military expedition to Pembina, and on his return, went with Gov. Ramsey and Judge Bailey to negotiate a treaty with the Pembina and Red Lake bands of Chippewas, but were not successful in concluding treaty. In 1862, he made a trip with Captain Fisk to Montana, and after reaching Benton, left them to another guide and returned, passing through great dangers from Indians. Since then he has resided on a farm at Red Lake Falls, Polk county.

From Sauk Centre he went to Brooklyn Centre one year; from there to Champlin and Maple Grove for three years. At the end of that time he again took the agency of the American Bible Society for two years. The first winter he came to Minnesota, he obtained a charter for the Hamline University, and named it, and in the following season obtained from Bishop Hamline, from whom it takes its name, the munificent sum of twenty-five thousand dollars. Was the first president of the board of trustees of the institution.

In June, 1855, he left St. Paul, camping out in the open air on his way to Fort Ripley, from there with a guide to assist, put his boat into the Mississippi river, paddling on to Sandy Lake, East Savannah river, St. Louis river, thence to Superior Bay, carrying his canoe across portages varying in distance from one mile to ten; when in St. Louis river, had an encounter with a black bear, who wanted to take passage on the boat or give him the bear's hug. This he objected to, and having no weapon but his oar which he used industriously about the bears head and fore paws, spattering water in his face until he was glad to beat a retreat, shaking the water from his shaggy eye brows, so that he could see which way to make his escape. Landed in Superior at the head of the lake, and preached the first protestant sermon ever heard there, also obtained a site and lot for a church. Married Miss Ann Moseley, who died of cholera in 1850; married again in 1852 to Margaret W. Prior. They have had five children, Jabez, Josiah, Emma, Adin, and Amy A.

In 1861 he was elected president of Hamline University, which position he retained until 1869, when he resigned, and the same year was elected professor of Greek at the University. Since 1869 he has continuously held that position, and for several years after the decease of Professor Walker in 1876, had charge of the department of Latin also. During his presidency of Hamline University, Professor Brooks was a member of the State Normal school board, the Agricultural College board, the general conference of the Methodist

Gregor Menzel was born in Bielendorf, in the province of Silesia, Prussia, August 21st, 1826. For his family record, see volume eleven, page 397, of American Cyclopaedia. His father died before Gregor's birth, but his last request was that if his offspring was a boy, and lived, he should learn a trade. When five years of age he nearly lost his life in a flood, which swept away their little home and nearly all the property his mother possessed. When ten years old he went on foot across the mountains to Friedeburg, Austria, to live with an uncle, and fulfill his father's last wish. In July, 1842, having learned the blacksmith's trade, he returned on foot to Prussia, and went to work in a large machine shop, near Glatz, to learn the machinist's trade. After this he considered it necessary to travel and work in different places, in order to perfect himself as a mechanic. He walked to Breslau, Frankfort, Berlin, Hamburg, and Bremen, being employed in different shops. While working near the latter place, he became acquainted with Henrietta D. Roemer, whom he married. Soon after, they started for this country, stopped a short time in London, and arrived at New York April 7th, 1847. He at once commenced work with James Bogardus, the celebrated inventor (see volume two, page 780, American Cyclopaedia) and worked for him until August, 1850, when he removed to Milwaukee. He was given the position of foreman in the machinery department of the Menominee Locomotive Manufacturing Company, and held the situation until December 1st, 1851, when he went into partnership with L. Keuck, and under the name of Menzel and Keuck, carried on steam engine building. In 1855, M. and M. Stone bought Mr. Keuck's interest, and the new firm name was Menzel, Stone and Company. They were also extensively engaged in manufacturing threshing machines, and in 1855, made the first threshing engine used in the west. The following year he took an active part in politics, helped organize the Republican party, and was the presidential elector from the first district of Wisconsin, and cast his vote for John C. Fremont and Dayton, in the electoral college. On the first of February, 1857, Messrs. Cummings and Goodrich bought the Stone interest. The shop was moved and enlarged, and carried on under the name of Menzel, Cummings and Goodrich. The same year the first elevator was built in Milwaukee, by Angus Smith and Company. For this he manufactured the engine, boiler, and all the other machinery and iron work. He also made the first mash machine driven by power in that city, for V. Blatz's brewery. After years of prosperity, came reverses. The financial crisis of 1857, which swept the whole country, relieved him of all his hard earnings. He then devoted his time to inventions. He obtained a patent on a steam boiler, April 5th, 1859 (see Patent Office Report of 1859, and for ent see Scientific American of October 1st, 1859), and also on a fire and burglar-proof safe, April 21th, 1860 (see Patent Office Report of 1860). One of his large safes was bought by J. Dean and Company of this city, in 1866. In the spring of 1860, he took an eight-stamp steam quartz-mill to Colorado, put it in operation, and returned with the intention of building another quartz-mill to work the claims he secured in Colorado; but the rebellion broke out, and his plans were frustrated. In the fall of 1861, he took charge of the elevator and engines for Angus Smith and Company, and remained with them until June 11th, 1864, when he accepted the position of superintendent of the Bay State Iron Manufacturing Company, at that time the largest works of the kind in Milwaukee. His first work there was to build a 250 horse-power, low-pressure beam engine, it being the first in that city, and was built for Mr. Smith's new elevator, A. In 1866 the steam engine, boiler, etc., were built under his supervision for J. Dean and Company's Pacific mill, and August 16th of that year he arrived in Minneapolis, to put the machinery in the mill. It was accomplished on the 8th of October, and the firm were so well pleased with his work that they presented him with one hundred dollars, as a token of appreciation. He liked this city so well that he determined to make it his home, in time. July 1st, 1868, he bought an interest in the Cream City Iron Works, in Milwaukee, and the business was carried on under the name of Menzel, Stowell and Company, until November, 1870, when he withdrew from the firm, to come to Minneapolis and accept the position offered him as superintendent of the North Star Iron Works, of this city. The following is some of the work done under his supervision: the celebrated saw-mill of W. D. Washburn and Company, at Anoka, also Isaac Staples', at Stillwater; the engine at the Nicollet House, engine and machinery in the City Hall, including passenger and freight elevator, the first in the city; the engines at Captain Rollins' saw-mill, Barnard and Company's factory, etc.; he also designed all of the above machinery. CHAPTER LXXXI.

BIOGRAPHICAL, S. O. AND P.

Rev. Edward Dunfield Neill was the first Protestant clergyman who settled in St. Paul. He was born in Philadelphia on August 9th, 1823, and is the son of the late Henry Neill, M. D., one of the vice-presidents of the college of physicians in that city. He was a student at the University of Pennsylvania and Amherst College, Massachusetts, graduating in 1842, at the latter institution. His theological studies were pursued at Andover Theological Seminary, and under the distinguished commentator, the Rev. Albert Barnes of Philadelphia. Declining calls to churches in 1847, he went to the neighborhood of Galena, Illinois, where he performed missionary labor among the miners. At his own request he was transferred to St. Paul, then a small hamlet, by the Presbytery of Galena, and on the 23d of April, 1849, arrived there, and at once commenced his labors, and made arrangements to build the first brick dwelling in Minnesota, which is still in good preservation, situated near the corner of Fourth and Washington, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, St. Paul. During the first year of his residence in St. Paul he also preached at the falls of St. Anthony every other Sunday afternoon, as has been mentioned in the history of Minneapolis. He erected the first Protestant house of worship for the white population of Minnesota, at St. Paul, in the summer of 1849, and in November of the same year organized the First Presbyterian Church in St. Paul. In May, 1850, the wooden church building was destroyed by fire, and a large brick church at the corner of Third and St. Peter streets was built in its place, and is now changed into stores. Resigning the charge of the First Presbyterian church, he began to preach in the new and upper portion of St. Paul, where there were no churches, and in 1855 organized the church known as the "House of Hope," now the largest in that city, of which the Rev. David R. Breed is pastor. He acted as its pastor for five years, when he resigned. Williams, in his "History of St. Paul" writes: "During this period he gave great attention to educational and literary matters. He was appointed territorial superintendent of instruction in 1851, and held that office two years. In 1853 he organized and secured the erection and endowment of the 'Baldwin School.' In 1855 he secured the building of the 'College of St. Paul,' which was for several years a classical academy for young men. He was at the same time secretary of the St. Paul board of education. For several years he was chancellor of the State University. He was also state superintendent of public instruction from 1858 to 1864, and secretary of the Historical Society from 1851 to 1863." Hon. D. Burt, state superintendent of public instruction, in his report in 1881 to the legislature of Minnesota, writes: "The territorial law of 1851, requiring the governor to appoint a superintendent of schools, remained in the statutes until 1860. In that year, it was enacted, that the Chancellor of the University, an officer then required to be appointed by the board of regents should be ex-officio superintendent. This act made E. D. Neill the first state superintendent of public instruction. In the first state report, he recommended the genuine township system, and the appointment of county superintendents, and also that the apportionment of school funds should be made, upon the number of scholars, attending the district school. Two of these early recommendations have been realized, and the third is yet to come. The first annual state report could contain but few statistics, since territorial superintendents had adopted no plan for gathering such data. Mr. Neill was the author of the first teachers' register ever issued in the state, and of the first forms used for reports on the condition of schools. On the 7th of March, 1861, a law was passed requiring a joint convention of the senate and house to elect a superintendent of public instruction for a term of two years. Whatever may have been the motives dictating this legislation, it could not have resulted from any general hostility to Mr. Neill, for on the same day in which the act became a law, he was elected, in joint convention, by an almost unanimous vote, as superintendent of public instruction, for two years. But on the 29th of April, he was appointed chaplain of the First Minnesota, causing a vacancy in the superintendency, which the Governor filled, by requirement of the school law."

In June, 1861, he accompanied the first troops that left Fort Snelling, for the seat of war, as chaplain of the First Minnesota Regiment, and was with that regiment, in the first battle of Bull Run, and at Fair Oaks, and in the seven day's conflict ending at Malvern Hills. He was then appointed by President Lincoln, United States hospital chaplain, and assigned to one of the Philadelphia hospitals. Early in 1864, he received an appointment at the President's house, in Washington, as secretary to open and arrange all correspondence, and to sign land patents for the President. He continued on duty in the Executive mansion until he was appointed by President Grant, in 1869, United States consul at Dublin. He held the consulate for two years, then resigned, and resumed his work in Minnesota, which had been suspended by the civil war, as president of the Baldwin School and College of St. Paul, which were consolidated by the legislature, in 1874, as Macalester College, so called, because the late Charles Macalester, of Philadelphia, bequeathed to the college the large five story stone edifice, built for a hotel, situated in the East Division of Minneapolis, overlooking the Falls of St. Anthony.

In January, 1874, Mr. Neill was one of the first clergymen to unite in the Reformed Episcopal church movement, and, he was instrumental in the erection of Christ Church, on Hennepin

Average of Minneapolis, which he still serves. He has been a frequent contributor to magazines and reviews, and has published several sermons. The following books are also from his pen: History of Minnesota, in 1898, published by J. B. Was elected first lieutenant of his company, and marched to the front in October, 1861. He returned to this city for supplies in 1864, and again started with a wagon train of seven teams. When near Fort Rice, Montana, one of the wagons needing repairing, he, with several men remained in the rear, to perform the task. While here they were attacked by Indians. Mr. Neudeck and several others were murdered. His body was never recovered. The only clue to the sad fate of this unfortunate pioneer was a revolver on which was his name, it being snatched from one of the Indians. Six of the wagons with the supplies reached Fort Rice, and were sold, the proceeds being sent to the widow and children in this city. His widow was formerly Catherine Wolff, whom he married in 1848. ALLEN NORTH, one of the most noteworthy characters in the list of pioneers, was born in Connecticut, New York, January 3d, 1817, where he lived with his father till the spring of 1836, when he moved to Morgan county, Illinois. In October following he left for the northern wilds with a drove of twenty oxen for the Falls of the St. Croix, and twenty for Allen's camp, two miles beyond the present site of Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin. Two men were sent to help him drive to Allen's camp, which was reached the latter part of November. There was but one house between Prairie du Chien and the Falls, a rude cabin occupied by one Reid, at Trempealeau House. Arriving at this point, they found Reid was absent on a trip to Gedonia for supplies, and his wife and squaw entirely out of provisions. Several Mackinaw boats, laden with supplies for Allen's camp, were on the way up, and thinking to fall in with them the next day, they left nearly all their provisions at Reid's; but the boat had pushed through with all possible dispatch, in fear of being frozen in, and their generosity cost them a four days' fast in the then barren woods of the Chippewa Valley. Finally, when almost worn out with hunger and fatigue, they reached Allen's camp about midnight, but their anticipated feast was prevented by the kind refusal of Allen's squaw to give them more than a cup of tea and next morning Mr. North remained at Allen's camp about three weeks before he could get a guide to help him through to the Falls, owing to hostilities then existing between the Sauk and Chippewa Indians, which rendered travel anything but agreeable. Finally, however, he secured the services of a guide, and made the journey in safety, arriving just before Christmas. This was the first drove of oxen ever brought to the northern wilds, and their owners the first lumbermen in that region. Returning in the spring of 1840 to Illinois, he made preparations to go north, and the next year, 1841, took boat at St. Louis and reached the Falls of the St. Croix in May, three weeks from the time of leaving St. Louis. There were no settlements above Prairie du Chien. When more fuel was needed for the boat, she was tied up, while the deck hands went ashore cut and "toted" enough wood for another "run." The boat was the "Indian Queen," built to run on the Missouri, and never made a second trip to this region. In May, 1841, he moved to what is now Stillwater, and built a hotel, the first house in the place. He also bought 160 acres of land which now embraces about one-half the site of that vigorous young city.

In 1849, he sold his interest there and built the American House at St. Paul, the first all frame building in the place. The rough lumber for this building was brought from the mills at St. Croix Falls, and the flooring, siding, sash, doors, etc., from St. Louis. The American was formally opened to the public July 4th, 1850, and soon thereafter sold, after which Mr. Northrup came to St. Anthony and commenced the erection of the St. Charles Hotel, a little above the present site of Clark's mills. This was the second all frame building here, the first being a hastily constructed house built and occupied by Mr. Northrup while the St. Charles was in course of completion. The hotel was opened July 4th, 1851, the same day the steamer "Gov. Ramsey" made her first run up the river, under command of Captain John Rollins. After running the St. Charles two years, he rented it, and engaged in other pursuits. In 1858, he visited the Pacific coast, returning after an absence of four months, and bought the old steamer "Governor Ramsey," which he took up the river as far as Grand Rapids taking it over the falls at Sauk Rapids by means of windlasses and other necessary appliances, then back to Crow Wing, where he took the machinery out, and took the boat apart above the hull. February 16th, 1859, he left St. Paul with forty teams and a crew of men, proceeded to Crow Wing, loaded the boat and machinery, and started for the Red river, cutting roads through the timbered portion of the route, and reaching the river about eight miles below the present site of Fargo, April 8th. They had not the protection of even a tent, yet the men were all in good health and spirits, notwithstanding it was severe weather, and the snow two feet deep when they arrived at their destination. Early in the season he built the boat, run it to Lake Winnipeg, then back to Georgetown, where it was sold, and has since done good service on the Red River of the North.

At the breaking out of the rebellion, Mr. Northrup entered the army, receiving the appointment of wagon master in the First Regiment Minnesota Volunteers. In September, 1861, he was appointed wagon master in General Gorman's brigade; in March, 1862, to a like position in General Sedgewick's division, and in June following was put in charge of the trains of Sumner's corps, Army of the Potomac, where he remained until the memorable Indian massacre in August, 1862, when he obtained leave of absence, and hastened home to aid in protecting the home borders. The day following his arrival in Minneapolis, he obtained a captain's commission from Governor Ramsey, with instructions to raise a company of mounted men, and proceed with all haste to the relief of Fort Ridgely, which was then besieged by the murderous savages. As indicative of the "spirit of the times," and the confidence reposed in Captain Northrup by his townsmen, it is only necessary to state that on the same day he received his commission, he raised a company of ninety-six men, and at nine o'clock that evening had marched them to Shakopee, twenty-five miles from Minneapolis, on the way to Fort Ridgely. The entire march was made in three days, and with a company now augmented to 140 men, he reached the beleaguered fortress just at daylight, having marched all night.

It is but simple justice to state here that Captain Northrup was the first to relieve the distressed inmates of the fortress. Others, with less modesty, and as surely with less honesty, have claimed the laurels due only to this old patriot, who never courted even a passing compliment for his timely services.

Since the close of the war, Capt. Northrup's life has been marked by the same spirit of change and adventure that characterized his previous years. For two years he kept the First National Hotel, five years was spent at Duluth, mainly in contracting and jobbing for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and in 1874, leaving Duluth, he came to St. Paul, then took a short trip to Texas, from whence he returned to St. Paul, and remained until May, 1880, when he removed to Fort Snelling and opened a boarding-house. Mr. Northrup put up the first brick building in Minneapolis, now known as the Bushnell House, on Fourth street, near the court-house. It is impossible to here enumerate all the noteworthy incidents connected with the career of this veteran pioneer, whose life is remarkable for its restless, energetic character, and ever varying hues. Anson Northrup married Miss Betsey Jane Edwards, August 23d, 1838, at Waterbury, N. Y., by whom he has had ten children, six of whom are now living.

W. H. Nudd was born at Wakefield, New Hampshire, July 16th, 1831. He came to Minneapolis in 1857 and was in a bakery seven years, then engaged in farming in St. Anthony. In 1870 he entered the firm of which he is now the head. The firm name is Nudd and Knight, and they manufacture wood eave troughs, etc., on Main street, south-east. He married Miss Laura Shepherd of Bangor, Maine, in 1859. Their children are: Lottie S., Henry A., Benjamin F., and Edwin F.

Franklin Steele. The following memoir, by Rev. E. D. Neill, was read at the meeting of the department of American History of the State Historical Society, in October, 1880. "In memoriam: Franklin Steele. This evening we assemble under the shadow of a sudden and painful loss. Among the twenty-five or thirty present at the September meeting of this department of the State Historical Society, he who attracted the most attention by his fine presence and manly form was its chairman, Franklin Steele. Those who saw him on that evening, in perfect health, presiding so courteously, yet unobtrusively, can with difficulty realize that on the third night after, he was silenced by death, and that in less than a week his lifeless body was carried to its last resting-place in the beautiful cemetery which overlooks the capital of the republic. Not only as a life member of the Minnesota Historical Society, and chairman of the department of American History, but as one of the founders of the commonwealth of Minnesota, is he deserving of some brief memorial.

While the French were still occupying the valley of the Allegheny, the region between the Delaware and Susquehanna rivers, in Pennsylvania, was fast filling up with industrious farmers from Wales, Ireland, Scotland, and Germany. Among the hardy men who found homes in what is now Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, was the paternal ancestor of Franklin Steele, and the wife of this pioneer was of Scotch descent. Frugal and persevering, they raised a large family, and four sons, at least, attained manhood.

Archibald served under the lamented Montgomery in 1775, in the expedition against Quebec, and during the revolution became deputy quartermaster general for the troops of the western division of the army in Pennsylvania.

John, who was born in the town of Lancaster, was about seventeen years of age and going to school when the thrilling news arrived that the farmers near Lexington had peppered the British soldiery from Boston, with the contents of their fowling pieces. It stirred the blood of this boy, and soon he was found enlisted in the war for independence. At the battle of Brandywine, in September, 1777, he received in his shoulder what was supposed for a time to be a fatal wound. On one occasion he swam across the Delaware, while ice was floating, with orders tied in a silk handkerchief around his head. Although benumbed, he reached the Jersey shore, and gave an alarm, which baffled the enemy. In March, 1778, Lieutenant John Steele was recommended to the executive council of Pennsylvania as "an officer well qualified to recruit in Lancaster county."

William was a third son, and a letter is preserved which was written by John to his brother, dated Morristown, New Jersey, June 14th, 1780, and from which is this extract: "I at present enjoy myself incomparably well in the family of Mrs. Washington, whose guard I have had the honor to command, since the absence of the general, and the rest of the family, which is now six or seven days. I am happy in the importance of my charge as well as in the presence of the most amiable woman on earth, and whose character, should I attempt to describe, I could not do justice to, but will only say that I think it is unexceptionable."

James, a fourth son, was the father of the subject of this memoir. During the war of 1812 he was inspector general of Pennsylvania, and had represented his fellow-citizens in the legislature. Subsequently he was an enterprising citizen in the valley of the Octorara, the stream which separates Chester and Lancaster counties. Engaged in farming, owning a store, a flour and cotton mill, he was the center of a neighborhood.

Franklin Steele, in 1813 was born at his father's residence near the western boundary line in Chester county, and as he approached manhood, was actuated by the laudable ambition to depend upon his own exertions, and obtained a position in the Lancaster post-office. In this place he was brought in contact with James Buchanan, afterwards president, and others who had known his father, and also liked him for his own cheerful spirit. From the desire to act well his part in life, he looked toward the distant west as a broader and more rapid field for development. In view of the treaties about to be made with the Chippewa and Sioux Indians for the lands between the St. Croix and Mississippi, Franklin Steele and two or three others, in the summer of 1837, in a birch bark canoe propelled by eight men, left the mouth of the Minnesota river and descending the Mississippi, entered the St. Croix and ascending to its falls, laid claim to the valuable water-power by erecting a claim cabin of logs.

After General Dodge made a treaty with the Chippewas at Fort Snelling, a delegation of Sioux were taken by the Indian agent at Fort Snelling to Washington and there they also, on the 27th of September, 1857, signed a treaty by which the pine forests of Minnesota were effectually opened to the axe of the lumberman.

Mr. Steele passed the winter of 1838 at Washington and elsewhere, but on the evening of the 13th of June, on the steamboat Burlington, arrived at Fort Snelling. Among his fellow-passengers were Capt. Maryatt, of the British navy, the well-known novelist, and a number of others, ladies as well as gentlemen. With them, he rode out for pleasure to the Falls of St. Anthony, then the ultima thule, a point at which he was destined to erect the first permanent structure, and in which, after it became a city of forty-eight thousand inhabitants, he was suddenly to die.

On the 20th of June, the steamboat Ariel arrived at Fort Snelling, and one of the passengers said that the senate had ratified the treaty, but it was not until the 15th of July, that the Palmyra brought the official notice.

Mr. Steele now made another trip to the falls of St. Croix and on the 16th of August he came back to the fort. Disposing of his interests at the falls of St. Croix, he turned his attention to the development of the claim at the falls of St. Anthony, and in 1838 engaged a man to cultivate six or eight acres there, the land having not yet been surveyed. It was not until 1848 that there was a sale of lands by the government, and this year he completed the first saw-mill on the east side of the falls.

In 1851 he secured a site for the preparatory department of the University of Minnesota, and was the largest contributor toward the erection of the first academic building. The academy was opened in October, 1851, and until destroyed by fire stood in the east division park, opposite the stone edifice now owned by Macalester College.

After the treaties of 1851, settlers began to dwell on the prairie on the west side of the falls of St. Anthony, and in a few years were more numerous than those on the east side. With an abiding faith that in time, the roar of a great city would drown the "voice of many waters," Mr. Steele, before patents were issued from the general land office at Washington for the land on the west side, contracted for the swinging of a wire suspension bridge over the Mississippi, just above the cataract, the first bridge of any description which spanned the great river from Lake Itasca to the gulf of Mexico.

After its completion, the Minnesota legislature in the winter of 1855, adjourned for one day to be present at the formal opening of the artistic structure, which for years was not only a great thoroughfare for immigrants, but admired by travelers and tourists as a thing of beauty. About this time his name was appropriately given by the state to one of the counties made out of the lands which had been ceded by the Sioux.

The month of August, 1862, can never be forgotten by the settlers of Minnesota. The Sioux, taking advantage of the civil war that was then raging, rose like demons incarnate, and without warning began to attack the settlements of the Minnesota river, and murder and scalp defenceless women and children. Volunteers from St. Paul and Minneapolis hurried to the scene of slaughter, and Mr. Steele followed as soon as possible with the necessary supplies. The drivers of the supply trains at length faltered and said they dared not go on, when Mr. Steele, with characteristic quietness and efficiency, headed the column, riding in an open buggy, night and day, and restored confidence.

In April, 1843, he was married, in Baltimore, by the Rev. Dr. Wyatt, to Anna, daughter of William C. Barney, and grand-child of Commodore Barney of the United States navy, and also of Samuel Chase, the Maryland statesman, one of the signers of the declaration of independence, afterwards judge of the supreme court of the United States.

With his bride he came to Fort Snelling when it was surrounded by Indians, and in his wilderness home he always exhibited a generous hospitality. As his daughters began to grow up, he felt it desirable to have a family residence where they could obtain a proper education, and during the latter years of his life he passed the winters in Washington, but always spoke of Minnesota as home.

Unobtrusiveness was a marked characteristic of our late associate. His voice was not heard in the streets. Persons would associate with him for months in the midst of this city, and would never think that he had a right to say: "Quorum magna pars fui." But while retiring he was affable. A gentleman by instinct, he avoided topics and allusions which would be painful to those with whom he conversed.

Among those in whom he had confidence he loved to indulge in pleasantries.

By prosperity he was not puffed. Weak human nature is often made very stiff and consequential by an increase of this world's goods, but he showed none of that disagreeable consciousness which money gives to some people. No poor man was ever humiliated in his presence. Of an inquiring mind, with good perceptive powers, interested in public questions, and holding social intercourse every winter with some of the best men of the republic, he was able to impart valuable information and engage in agreeable conversation. Thrown much of his life-time with frontiersmen, he admired their energy, but did not adopt their standards. He did not soil his mouth with coarse, profane or indecent utterances. The slang of the roaring fellows in a loggers' camp, or at a military post had no charms.

While the soul is immortal and more valuable than the mortal body which encases it, yet the Hebrews acknowledged that it was a privilege to have a fine physical presence. The sacred writers turned aside from mightier matters to mention that there was not among the Children of Israel a "goodlier person" than Saul, who from his shoulders upward was higher than any of the people, and that David "was ruddy and withal of a beautiful countenance." The subject of our memoir was excelled by few in the symmetry of his physical development. As a young man his presence was noticeable. An old army officer saw him conversing with a young lady at a party given by a member of congress in Washington. He asked his name, and when told that he was from what was then called distant Iowa Territory, he replied: "No matter where he resides; God never made a finer form."

An old English writer, speaking of a statesman of the days of James I., wrote: "As Ammianus describes a well-shaped man: 'Ab ipso capite, usque ad ungium summities recta erat lineamentorum compage'; 'from the nails of the fingers, nay, from the sole of his foot to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him.' And yet his carriage, and every stoop of his deportment, more than his excellent form, were the beauty of his beauty." Does not this description recall the late chairman of this department of the Minnesota Historical Society? At our meeting in September no one would have looked upon his clear-cut features, his fine expression, his manly, erect and matured form, without feeling that he was endowed with a frame superior to most men. Death found strange beauty on that polished brow and darkened that

After the hour of the 9th of September, he was riding with an acquaintance, when he was seized with colic. Soon after he lost consciousness, and at an early hour next morning, while it was yet dark, in the presence of a brother and a few other friends, his spirit departed to its God. A beloved wife and a portion of his family clustered to his side, but not until the heart ceased to beat did they arrive. Lovingly and tenderly the widow carried his lifeless form in a special car, surrounded by her two sons and three of her daughters, to the family residence at Georgetown, and on Thursday afternoon, the 10th of September, was borne to St. John's Church, Washington, D. C., where the family had attended and services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Carter, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Lammie, of Georgetown.

The same songs that had been sung at the services in Minneapolis were sung there, and the same flowers which loving friends had on his coffin in his native paper in this city, were also used. The church was filled with citizens of Washington, who had learned to respect the noble gentleman. From the church he was borne to Oak Hill cemetery and placed in his last resting place, next to the grave of his daughter's husband, the late commander of the Confederacy in the memorable conflict of Hampton Roads.

It will be long before his friends and his family will forget Franklin Steele.

To live in hearts we leave behind
Is not to die.

After the reading of the memorial, on motion of W. W. M. Naeff resolutions of respect were adopted.

the so called French Huguenots, who emigrated to New England, coming over with other Puritans in the May-flower. Gardner Stevens, his father, was an extensive farmer, and gave his sons a liberal education. At an early day Mr. Stevens determined to become one of the pioneers of the far west. His first move was to the lead mines of Illinois and Wisconsin. During the war with Mexico, he served with the army of invasion and after the war closed, he came to the territory of Minnesota, which had recently been set apart from Iowa. He located on the original town-site of Minneapolis, opposite the beautiful and picturesque Falls of St. Anthony; here he lived alone and desolate with the Indians. The nearest habitation of white men was Fort Snelling. Since that time vast and wonderful changes have been made, such as but few men have witnessed in the short space of thirty-two years. He has lived to see grow from his humble home a city of fifty thousand souls, and should he be spared until he reaches his three score and ten, he will doubtless behold a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants. He has frequently been honored with seats in the senate and house of representatives in the state legislature, and has also held high and responsible offices of trust and honor, both civil and military with the greatest success and credit. The anniversary to be remembered day in the history of that church was when on that day he took out the church one hundred and fifty members one hundred and thirty of them being on profession of faith; a large number of them between the ages of fifty and seventy. When in Camden found the church on the mission board, raised it to a self-sustaining church, besides sending out a missionary, which became self-sustaining, building a new and elegant church, and is the second church in Camden. Horatio Halpike Van Cleve, adjutant general of Minnesota was born at Princeton, New Jersey, November 23d, 1809. His paternal ancestors were from Holland, while the maternal were from Great Britain. He was a student at Princeton College, and left that institution to accept a cadetship at West Point, from which school he graduated in 1831, receiving a commission as second lieutenant in the Fifth United States Infantry, July 1st of that year. In September 1836, he resigned his commission and removed to Michigan, where he engaged in the more peaceable pursuit of civil engineering, farming, etc. In 1836 he located at Long Prairie, Minnesota, and turned his attention to stock raising. At the breaking out of the rebellion he tendered his services to his country. The government of Minnesota gave him the command of the Second Minnesota regiment, in July 1861, which he conducted bravely through all the conflicts in which they engaged, until March 1862, when he was promoted brigadier general. While commanding his division at the battle of Stone River, December 1st, 1862, he was disabled by a wound and compelled to retire from the field. Upon his recovery he resumed the command of his division. He was mustered out in August 1865 after four years of active and efficient service. On March 15th of the latter year he was commissioned major general for "gallant and meritorious service during the war." He returned to Minnesota where he was appointed adjutant general in January, 1866. He was commissioned postmaster at St. Anthony, March 2d, 1871, in which capacity he served until 1872, when St. Anthony being united to the city of Minneapolis that office was discontinued. He was re-appointed adjutant general in 1876, which position he still holds. On the field of battle Mr. Van Cleve was a thorough soldier, and as a civil officer is conscientious and faithful in the discharge of every duty. He was married March 22d, 1838, to Miss Charlotte Clark, daughter of Major Nathan Clark, of the United States army. Their union has been blessed with twelve children, seven of whom are living. Elizabeth A., who married H. V. Hall and resides at Honolulu; Horatio Seymour, who married Miss Harriet Hemmip; Mortimer, who married Miss Sarah Adams of Providence; Samuel Houston, Paul Ledyard, who married Miss Alice Davis of Minneapolis; John Risley and Carl Ernest. Mrs. Van Cleve is a lady of refinement and great force of character. She was one of the original founders of the "Sisterhood of Bethany." Since its formation she has held the position of president, and through her activity and zeal has enlisted the active sympathy of a large community. She is one who is heartily in sympathy with every undertaking which tends to enlighten and elevate society.

Charlotte Onisconsin Van Cleve is the daughter of Nathan Clark, of Houston, Massachusetts, and Charlotte A. Clark, of Hartford, Connecticut. Her father was major of the Fifth Regiment of United States Infantry. Early in the spring of 1819 his regiment was ordered from near Buffalo, New York, to Fort Crawford (Prairie du Chien), at that time far beyond the limits of civilization, and "almost out of the world." Mrs. Clark, though in delicate health, with her little son, accompanied him through the trackless and unknown country, the journey being made in government wagons, and the time consumed in traveling from Buffalo to Fort Crawford, covering two months. And here, on the banks of the Mississippi, in the rude frontier fort, less than one hour after their arrival, little Charlotte, the subject of this sketch, first opened her eyes and began the battle of life. Poor little girl, it looked for a time as though the odds of the battle were all against her; for what with a mother too feeble to afford her proper nourishment, and not a cow within possible reaching distance of them, she was obliged to eke out a precarious existence on a kind of manufactured pap, prepared from the flour furnished by the government for the fort, but which had been water-soaked in transportation, until the green mould stood three inches deep around the sides of the barrel. But too much work was in waiting for those little hands, and so, in spite of privations and hardships, she lived and prospered.

After a few weeks rest at Fort Crawford, the regiment embarked on keel boats, and proceeded up the Mississippi, their destination being the present site of Fort Snelling. This part of the journey occupied six weeks. As they were the pioneers they lived in their boats till they could build better quarters. Charlotte's life continued to be that of a soldier's child in fort and camp until her sixteenth year, when she lost her father, Major Clark dying at fort Winnebago. Knowing that he must die, and feeling distressed at the idea of leaving his young and helpless family alone, without any natural protector, so far from kindred or friends, he begged that the engagement between his young daughter, and one of his officers, might be consummated by marriage immediately after his death. And so Charlotte Clark, not quite sixteen years old, became the wife of Horatio P. Van Cleve, ten years her senior. Thus early she took up the heavy burden of work and care never to lay it down till she lies down with it in her grave.

Since her marriage, her life has been filled with varied experiences of change of home, long journeys, "always with a baby in my arms," she says, hard work as a frontier farmer's wife, sorrow and joy. Since 1856 her steady home has been in Minnesota. Twelve children have been born to this household, three of whom died in infancy. The oldest son was instantly killed, some eighteen years since, in California. The shock of this terrible bereavement, added to anxiety for her husband, then in the army, so wrought upon nervous system as in a few months to bleach her hair to its present snowy whiteness and seriously impair her hearing.

One daughter, the wife of Mortimer Thompson (Doesticks), died leaving an infant only a few days old, which her mother took to her breast with her own child of the same age, nursing and rearing the two like twins. The remaining daughter, the wife of H. V. Hall, has her home in the Sandwich Islands. Six grown sons are settled in business, all living in Hennepin county.

While her own children were yet young, she felt called upon to add to her already large family, which, from the first included a young sister left homeless by her father's death, the six orphan children of her brother, all of whom have grown up in her house, and taken their places in business life. Later, another motherless infant girl was brought home to her arms and care. This little one, now six years old is still with her, so that her busy life has included mother care of twenty-one children.

Yet, filled to overflowing, as her hands, head and heart have always been, of her own household duties, she has found time to listen to and assist, with sympathy, advice and material aid, an endless procession of sorrowing and distressed humanity. There is probably no woman in the state who has done more to lighten the burdens on the shoulders of the poor, the sick, the aged and the distressed than Mrs. Van Cleve. Her benevolence is of the active type which leads her to throw herself heart and soul into each individual case, nor is she easily turned aside by discovering that the poverty or suffering which she is called upon to relieve, is the result of the bad management, intemperance or sin of the sufferer. While glad to aid the Lord's poor, she has great faith in the elevating and reformatory influence of kindness and encouragement on the Devil's poor as well. The past is past; "if you will help yourself I will help you," is the spirit in which she meets all applicants. Referring once to her sympathy for tramps, and her efforts to aid some of them, she explained it by saying, "but you know I came so near being born a tramp myself."

This by no means covers her work. An easy speaker, a ready writer, she has devoted a great deal of her time and strength to the cause of Foreign Missions. She has canvassed the state with marked success for the past several years lecturing and organizing Women's Foreign Mission societies, auxiliary to the Presbyterian society, and holds the office of vice-president for the synod of Minnesota, in connection with that denomination.

But, though after the straightest manner of her sect, a Presbyterian, her views are broad and her nature genial, so that she joins hands readily with christians of whatever name, Catholic or Protestant in the prosecution of any good work. She literally sows beside all waters, and so to-day we find her sending her daughter or her beloved Sunday-school scholar across the ocean on a foreign mission, and to-morrow traveling in hot haste to bring the priest to minister to the dying child of her poor washerwoman. Said the mother superior of a convent to her not long ago: "I do think we serve the same master and shall be received into the same home at last."

But very particularly Mrs. VanCleve has ever been the champion of her sex. Too true a wife, and mother ever to lose sight of woman's best and dearest rights, she has still been a warm advocate of her right to equality before the law, including the ballot. When the right of suffrage was extended to the women of the state on the school question, it was her distinguished privilege to cast her first ballot in company with her husband and four sons. She also did good work for two years as member of the school board for East Minneapolis.

But of all forms of the injustice of society to women, none has so touched her heart and roused her indignation as the remorseless punishment visited upon the fallen woman. So strongly did this impress her that she at last, after much thought, determined to take upon herself as her penitential work, to do what one woman could, to raise up and stand upon their feet, those of her own sex who through temptation or folly had been beaten down to the ground in the unequal battle of life.

Long she labored quietly and alone, reaching out a helping hand here to a tempted and there to a fallen one. But as she became more familiar with the griefs and wants of the class, she saw that much more might be done by organized effort with others. Acting on this conviction, she brought together a band of working Christian women, who had faith in her and the work, and together they rented a house and opened a home for fallen women. They called themselves the Sisterhood of Bethany, and their house, Bethany Home.

There was poverty, a week of fault, for at that time the society had no money, no income, no foundation, no support of any kind. Their organization was not understood by the public, the work itself was from the very nature difficult to make understood. But Mrs. VanCleve never faltered. For over five years she and her little band have labored incessantly to put the Home on a firm footing and gave it a name and a place among the recognized charities of the city. She called upon the public for help through the press, from the platform and by personal appeal; cheerfully taking censure, ridicule or rebuff, having that rare and happy faculty so necessary to success, of always turning a deaf ear towards the faultfinder, and the sharp, quick ear toward the voice that offered aid.

This work has constantly called her to the jail, the prison, the penitentiary, the variety theatre, the low dark haunts of sin, to all of which she has gone fearlessly and come away unharmed, leaving behind her the perfume of the "good word fitly spoken."

The lesson to be learned from Mrs. VanCleve's life is that neither wealth nor high station, nor a life of freedom from the common cares incident to the life of women, are necessary to the accomplishment of great good. But the cheerful smile, the loving heart and the willing, industrious hand, all dedicated to the service of God and humanity, makes a power whose influence for good, like the influence of the subject of this sketch, only an eternity can measure.

In 1872 he built the finest lumber mill in the state, at Anoka, and has since built a large flouring mill at the same place. In 1873, he, with others, built the Palisade mill, here; he is also one of the originators and stockholders of the Minneapolis Harvester Works. Since becoming a resident of Minnesota, he has been an active participant of public enterprises; politically he has always been a republican. November, 1878, he was elected representative of the third congressional district by three thousand majority, and in 1880 re-elected by a majority of twelve thousand. Henry T. Welles. The great North-west owes much of its prosperity to the blood which has been transplanted from the shores of New England. Many of the early settlers and pioneers of Minnesota were natives of that rugged, stern, honest portion of the union. In their advent to the west they retained their habits of industry, economy and integrity which they had formed in early life. The effect of this transplanting, in numerous instances, was to enlarge the mind; from the fact of its having more room for expansion, in the many facilities for enterprises of nearly every variety. A great work was before them, a new empire was to be inaugurated. The vast, rich prairies were to be occupied; cities were to be built, church and school edifices to be erected; arts and sciences to be introduced and patronized; public highways and internal improvements were to be made, including costly bridges, factories, mills and workshops. Truly a great work lay before these people, and probably among the early immigrants to this portion of the valley of the great river, there was no one more capable or more willing to assist in the mammoth work than Henry T. Welles, who was born April 3d, 1821, in Hartford county, Connecticut. He made St. Anthony his home in 1853. Belonging to one of the best families of his native state, he was favored in boyhood with rare advantages, having graduated in 1843 from Trinity College, Hartford. In those days neither wealth nor position exempted the young man of New England from habits of industry. During the college vacations he assisted in tilling the broad acres of the family homestead, and the first ten years after leaving college were mostly spent on the farm, though divided with duties of a public character. In 1850 he was honored with a seat in the legislature of his native state. Upon his arrival in St. Anthony, became interested in the lumbering business to which were added other industries, and having ample means he purchased considerable real estate. In 1855 he was elected mayor of that city. He removed to Minneapolis in 1856, having previously made large purchases on this side of the river, has been closely identified with the interests of this city, has done much to develop its industries, and in 1858, was president of the town council, and president of the board of education. In 1863 he was unanimously nominated for governor of the state, by the democratic party; but he failed of an election in consequence of the overwhelming majority of the republicans. Since 1864 he has had neither time or inclination to engage in political matters, the management of his real estate occupying much of his attention, but he never hesitates to give substantial aid in all matters that are of material advantage to the city, and state of his adoption. The different railroads that center in Minneapolis had to be encouraged by the citizens in every possible way. Mr. Welles invested large sums of money, that the city might enjoy these railway facilities. Different objects of charity have frequently received his bounty, while the educational interests of the community have been aided by him in no trivial manner. In addition to other numerous duties, he is president of the Northwestern National Bank, one of the best monied institutions of the city. His financial abilities are peculiarly fitted for this office. Previous to coming to Minnesota, Mr. Welles was happily married and has an interesting family. In closing this small tribute of respect to Mr. Welles, the writer would add that Minneapolis has been fortunate in the character of the men who have built up the industries of the place; they are the worthy cotemporaries of Mr. Welles.

G. G. Wells, a native of Cazenovia, New York, was born January 20th, 1852. Went to Albany in 1846 to learn the jeweler's trade, and remained there five years; then spent one year at Dubuque, Clark, brother, which continued nine years, whereupon Mr. Wensinger gave his out to attention to watch work and repairing, being one of the dressers for the North House. In 1856 married Martha Stead. They have had four children, James, and Hattie. The latter died at the age of fifteen months.

Charles L. Wells, M. D., was born October 14th, 1842, at Elmira, New York. Was educated at Hiram College, took the degree of A. B., and later that of A. M. Taught classes at Burlington College two, four and three years at the High school of Geneva. In 1869 he graduated at the Geneva Medical College and the five years following acted as first assistant physician at Wilkesville, Arkansas for the winter. Since September, 1870 has been in practice here. Dr. Wells married Oct. 18th, Hattie Stedwell of New York. Henry and Mary are their children.

They engaged in trade at Newark; from there went to Cincinnati and remained until 1849 when he located in St. Anthony, and has since that time been closely identified with its progress and growth. Mr. Wensinger engaged in the boot and shoe business here, renting for his shop the old Indian trading post; the year following built a store and took a partner, C. J. Spooner in the business trade. He purchased in Galena, a truck of groceries and established in connection with that the first bakery in St. Anthony. He afterwards owned the first saw shop on the west side of the river. He built the first wooden block in St. Anthony and the first brick block on Central Avenue. Mr. Wensinger always insisted every enterprise established to benefit the town, and often with his far below their real value, in order to induce new capital to settle here. Has been teaching several classes, State county and town, but would never accept owing to his love for his own mercantile business, and his interest in building up St. Anthony. In 1858 formed a stock company and built the "Fall City," the first steamer built and owned by Minneapolitans, she was run between this place and Pittsburgh; but he lost $20,000 by this investment. Mr. Wensinger always took pride in assisting young men in business, and his generosity sometimes caused him severe losses. His wife by his first marriage was Clara Swan, they were united in 1852, and she bore him two children: Nellie and Nettie, deceased. Married the second time in 1869, to Hattie Hyde.

Frank Wentworth, a native of Maine, was born June 1st, 1841, at Athens. In 1873, moved to Minneapolis, and after working about two months in the Empire mill, went to La Crosse, and was with E. V. In 1860 Mr. West had an experience which one would hardly believe possible for a man to survive. As he, in company with others, was about to bathe in the Mississippi above the falls on the east side, he lost his footing, and was carried over the rapids. At that time the volume of water was much greater than now; he was swept over the fall of thirty feet, but by superhuman efforts kept in the undertow, which threw him out beyond the reach of the return current on the surface; finally he was thrown on the rocks near the Chalybeate springs, some three hundred feet below the fall; his body was covered with bruises, but no bones broken. He returned and surprised his companions who thought him dead. Mr. West's wife, Mary Morrison, died in 1873, leaving three children.

Two enormous logs rolled after and over him; fortunately he landed in a crevice in the ground which gave space for the logs with their ponderous weight to pass over, leaving him unharmed. In 1878 he erected a building at 1205 Fifth street south-east which he occupies as a grocery. In the spring of 1880 he retired from the lumber business. He was at different times superintendent of the public schools of Adrian, Port Huron and Kalamazoo. He was employed two years on the state geological survey of Michigan. Thence he went to Ohio, and in 1872, was summoned to Minnesota by the regents of the State University. The report of his work in Ohio, where he surveyed and reported on details of the rights conferred on the state, are published in the First and Second Volumes of the First Report of Newbury's Survey. 18. Since the Geological Survey of Minnesota was inaugurated, but few reports have been published in the Annual Reports of Progress of the Survey, and perhaps even fewer to the state. Of these reports, none have been published, to each of which he has been the principal contributor. They pertain to the geology and physical geography of all parts of the state, and treat of subjects of the most vital importance to the material development of Minnesota. Besides the series of Annual Reports, he has issued eleven miscellaneous publications and lectures relating to the survey. 19. In 1874 he accompanied Gen. G. A. Custer to the Black Hills, and his Geological Report and map of the Black Hills published under the auspices of the War Department, comprised the first account of the interior of the Black Hills ever published. He discredited somewhat the wonderful reports of gold in the Black Hills, current at the time of Gen. Custer's return; and it must be admitted that no permanent gold mining has been established at any point visited by the Custer expedition. 20. The State and Higher Education; an address—Bulletins of the Minnesota Academy of Science, Vol. II.

Prof. Winchell received the degrees of A. B. and A. M. of his alma mater, the University of Michigan.
